In our judgment, any such construction of the act would have most unfortunate results. The State commissions are vitally concerned with the capital structure of reorganized utilities, and if such utilities are to be dealt with in section 75, appropriate language should be inserted indicating that control of State commissions over security issues is in no way abridged by that section.

Whether public utilities should be included in the bill at all is a more debatable question. We believe that the arguments which have led to the conferring of wide powers on the Interstate Commerce Commission in section 76 in connection with railroad reorganizations apply substantially to utility reorganizations, with the State commissions substituted for the Interstate Commerce Commission. Existing State statutes do not, however, give the State commissions powers comparable to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission by section 76. Hence a similar solution of the public utility reorganization problem is impracticable at the present time unless it be possible for Congress to confer upon State commissions by this bill powers comparable to those given the Interstate Commerce Commission by section 76—making the State commissions, in effect, part of the Federal bankruptcy machinery in connection with utility reorganizations.

If this is not feasible the choice would seem to lie between leaving utility reorganizations to equity, as at present, and including them in the present bill with a saving clause explicitly preserving the powers of State commissions over security issues. It is our opinion that even if commission control over security issues were explicitly preserved, there would still remain so many problems which have not been adequately explored as to the possible effect of section 75 on the whole subject of State control over reorganized utilities that it would be advisable to exclude utility operating companies altogether from section 75.

If, however, the section is to deal with utilities, there are certain matters, other than the problem of State commissions' powers, which it would be desirable to deal with by express provisions. The railroad section (76) specifically authorizes the court to apply to railroad reorganizations instituted under that section the so-called 6-months rule allowing priority to certain labor and material claims. That rule is applied in equity to utilities, but as there is no mention of it in section 75, there is doubt whether it would be applicable to proceedings under that section. This doubt should be removed.

Another peculiarity of railroad and utility reorganizations in equity is that the courts have much broader powers to issue receiver's certificates than they have in industrial reorganizations. Subsection (c) (2) provides for the issue by trustee with court approval of certificates with "such priority in payments over existing obligations, secured or unsecured, as may be lawful in the particular case." The corresponding of section 76 refers expressly to the rules established in equity receiverships as to the priorities which may be given to certificates. We believe that the language of section 76 is a good deal clearer in this respect than the language of section 75.

2. Effect of section on preferences: Preferential payments to creditors are in the present state of law generally valid unless a bankruptcy petition is filed within four months of the preference, in which the case the preference may be set aside by proceedings brought by the trustee in bankruptcy pursuant to section 60 of the act. Courts of equity have in general no power to upset preferences in receivership proceedings. The appointment of a receiver by a court of equity does not, however, prevent creditors from instituting bankruptcy proceedings. Under section 3 of the act the appointment of a receiver because of insolvency is in itself an act of bankruptcy, and even where the receiver is appointed for some other reason, bankruptcy proceedings may be instituted if the debtor is guilty of some other act of bankruptcy. The giving of a preference is such an act.

The result is that creditors who desire to have preferences upset are not prevented from doing so by receivership proceedings since they may in a proper case file an involuntary petition in bankruptcy which will supersede the receivership. Under section 75, however, the situation is very different. Subsection (a) provides that upon the filing of a petition or answer by a corporation seeking reorganization, "the court shall enter an order either approving of it as properly filed under this section or dismissing it. If the petition or answer is so approved, an order of adjudication in bankruptcy shall not be entered and the court in which such order approving the petition or answer is entered shall, during the pendency of the proceedings under this section, have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever located for the purposes of this section."

Clearly, therefore, no court is in a position to upset preferences during the pendency of reorganization proceedings unless the court in which the reorganization is pending can do so. Apparently that court has no power to deal with preferences. Under section 60 of the bankruptcy act the trustee is empowered to sue for the recovery of preferences which have been given by a bankrupt within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. A reorganization petition, if instituted by the corporation, is not, it would seem, a petition in bankruptcy, being referred to in section 73 as a proceeding "for the relief of debtors." No adjudication in bankruptcy takes place, so that the debtor is not a bankrupt. Even where a petition in bankruptcy has been filed and the reorganization proposal is made in the corporation's answer, there is no adjudication and hence no bankruptcy.

Apparently, therefore, so long as reorganization proceedings are pending, no attack on preferences can be made, and, if a reorganization is finally approved and carried out, preferences are thereby validated. There are dangers in this situation. It would seem to be possible for an insolvent corporation which desires to make a preference to follow the making of a preferential payment by the institution of a reorganization petition, or if a bankruptcy petition is filed against it to file an answer proposing reorganization and thus to validate the preference, at least if reorganization is carried out. On the other hand, it may be argued that to provide for the avoidance of preferences in reorganization proceedings might in some cases unduly complicate and delay the reorganization.

It may be doubted, however, whether the effect of section 75 in validating preferences is confined to cases where the reorganization is carried out. Subsection (c) provides that if reorganization fails the court may either dismiss the proceeding or direct the trustee to liquidate. Suppose that a reorganization petition brought by the corporation is dismissed after more than four months have elapsed. Creditors could then bring an involuntary bankruptcy petition, but the lapse of time would have validated all preferences made before the reorganization petition was filed.

Even if the trustee is directed to liquidate, it is not clear that preferences could be avoided if the original petition for reorganization were filed by the corporation and more than four months have elapsed. It appears to be the intention of the section, as indicated in subsection 1, that liquidation shall be governed by the usual bankruptcy rules. Preferences can not, however, be avoided in bankruptcy unless made within four months of the filing of a bankruptcy petition, and it is doubtful if a corporation's petition for reorganization becomes a bankruptcy petition ab initio simply because reorganization fails and an order to liquidate is made.

We suggest that this whole problem of the relation of the reorganization section to the avoidance of preferences should be given careful consideration.

3. Bankers' control over reorganizations: It is well known that where a corporation with a large amount of bonds outstanding is reorganized through equity proceedings, control of the reorganization proceedings tends to get into the hands of bankers. They usually succeed in persuading the majority of the bondholders to deposit bonds with them and accordingly come to represent the majority of the creditors. In some cases there is a real conflict of interest between these bankers and the creditors whom they represent, but the court has as a practical matter little opportunity to inquire into this conflict of interest, particularly where, as is often the case, the receiver is friendly to the bankers. Moreover, even where the court suspects that the reorganization is more favorable to the bankers than to their clients, it has difficulty in doing anything about it inasmuch as no reorganization can be put through without the consent of the majority of the creditors, and the bankers under the usual type of deposit agreement have broad powers to represent these creditors.

The present section does little, if anything, to alter this situation. Perhaps it is not practicable to do anything about it. It might, however, be possible to give either the court or the trustee or both larger powers with regard to the framing or modification of a reorganization plan, or to provide that all deposit agreements and other contracts between committees or reorganization managers and depositors should be submitted to the court and be subject to modification by the court if found to be inequitable. It would seem that these matters are so intimately connected with reorganization that Congress could properly legislate with regard to them.

4. Reorganization plan: Subsection (b) provides that the reorganization plan shall include a proposal to modify the rights of creditors and may include provisions altering the rights of stockholders. This seems to contemplate the possibility of a reorganization plan which would cut down creditors' rights while leaving stockholders' rights unaffected. Of course, such a plan could not go through unless it had the approval of two-thirds of the creditors and of the court, as provided in subsections (e) and (f). Such a plan would, however, be so inequitable and so contrary to the settled rule of Northern Pacific Railroad v. Boyd that there seems no reason for permitting it to be proposed. The annotations to the original Hastings bill indicate that this provision was inserted because "jurisdiction under the bankruptcy act is predicated on the power of Congress to regulate the relations between debtors and creditors." It is doubtless true that a reorganization plan which affected stockholders alone would not come within the purview of the bankruptcy power, but there seems no reason why the act should contain the suggestion that a reorganization plan might scale down debts and leave stockholders entirely unaffected.

An essential feature of most reorganization plans is the giving to persons who put new money into the enterprise a lien prior to the liens of some or all classes of old bondholders. Section 75 does not refer explicitly to this feature of reorganization plans. The language of subsection (b) (1) may be broad enough to cover it, but the matter is of such vital importance that it would seem desirable to deal with it in clear and unmistakable language.

5. Secured creditors: The rights of secured creditors are dealt with in subsections (e), (f), and (g) in a manner that does not seem either wholly clear or wholly satisfactory. Under subsections (e) and (f) secured creditors may take their security or its equivalent in value in lieu of any participation in the reorganization. This is satisfactory if their security is adequate to cover their claims, but difficulties and uncertainties seem likely to arise under the act in cases where the security is sufficiently valuable so that the secured creditor wishes to hold on to it and yet is not sufficient to cover his claim in full. In bankruptcy in such a situation the secured creditor may take his security and then prove for the balance of his claim. Under the rule which prevails in equity, on the other hand, he may keep his security and still prove for the full amount of his claim provided, of course, that he can not get more than 100 cents on the dollar from the two proceedings. The equity rule is generally regarded as undesirable, and reorganizations should be free from it. It would, therefore, seem desirable to provide explicitly that a creditor who insists upon keeping his security or its equivalent in value shall be treated in the reorganization as a claimant only for the balance of his claim, but that he shall have a right to participate in the reorganization to that extent both with respect to voting and with respect to the new securities which he must receive if the plan is to be regarded as fair. The language of the present act seems to leave his status a good deal in doubt in a situation of that sort.

Subsection (g) provides that even though two-thirds in amount of a class of secured claims has accepted the reorganization plan "any secured creditor who is unwilling to accept the benefits provided for him under the plan may file with the clerk at any time prior to the confirmation of the plan a demand in writing that his lien be afforded the protection required by subdivision (f), clause 5, of this section." On the other hand, section 76 provides that secured creditors of railroads, like unsecured creditors, shall be bound by the votes of two-thirds of the class to which they belong. The rule of section 76 appears to be more equitable, at least with respect to such creditors as bondholders, and there seems no particular reason for limiting it to railroad cases. Incidentally, subsection (g)(6) seems to give the individual bondholder greater rights than most modern trust indentures give him since they usually provide that the trustee is under no duty to take action unless requested by a substantial percentage of the bondholders. The effect of such provisions in equity reorganizations is that minority bondholders may be compelled to accept a reorganization approved by the majority. See Allan v. Moline Plow Co. (14 F. (2d) 912).

6. Compensation for reorganization services: Subsection (f)(2) provides for confirmation of the plan if the judge is satisfied, among other things, that "all amounts to be paid by the debtor or by any corporation or corporations acquiring the debtor's assets for services or expenses incident to the reorganization have been fully disclosed and are reasonable or are to be subject to the approval of the judge." The effect of this provision would seem to be to limit the control of the judge over reorganization expenses in substantially the same way in which the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission over railroad reorganization expenses was limited by the recent St. Paul case. If, as was provided in that case, the reorganization expenses, instead of being paid by the debtor or the new corporation, are under the reorganization plan to be paid by assessments imposed upon the stockholders, subsection (f) (2) would give the court no control over them. For the reasons stated by the dissenting judges in that case, we believe that a court or other body which has charge of reorganizations should have control over expenses of that sort. Despite the language of the majority opinion, it would seem probable that if Congress explicitly granted such a power in a bankruptcy act, the court would uphold it. The decision in the St. Paul case was rested mainly on the theory that the interstate commerce act did not confer such a power on the commission. It is true that there is some language in the opinion to the effect that such power could not constitutionally be granted to the commission, but that appears to be because the court regarded the commission's powers as based upon the commerce clause and doubted whether agreements of this sort are sufficiently related to interstate commerce. It could hardly be doubted that where they are part of the reorganization plan they are intimately related to reorganization, and the whole theory of this act is that reorganization is within the scope of the bankruptcy power.

7. Lists of security holders: Section 76 provides that railroads shall furnish lists of stockholders and known bondholders which shall be open to inspection by all stockholders and creditors. Recent litigation in certain reorganizations indicates that such a provision may be extremely important in order to enable those who are contesting a bankers' reorganization to get bondholders' support. Its importance is certainly not confined to railroads. Section 75 (c) (3) does require the debtor to furnish such schedules and information "as may be necessary to disclose the conduct of the debtor's affairs and the fairness of any proposed plan." It might be desirable, however, to provide explicitly for the furnishing of stock and bond lists, as in the case of railroads.

8. Statement of transfers: "With such acceptance there shall be filed a statement, verified in such manner as the judge shall require, showing what, if any, claims and shares of stock have been purchased or transferred by those accepting the plan after the commencement or in contemplation of the proceeding, and the circumstances of such purchase or transfer: Provided, however, That if the judge is satisfied that by reason of the number of securities outstanding and the extent of the public dealing therein the preparation of such a statement would be impractical, he may direct that it be not filed." The object of this provision would seem to be to enable the court in passing on the fairness of the plan to have before it evidence as to whether the members of a particular class of security holders have acquired their claims at low prices or in an inequitable manner, but the absence of any statement in the act as to the purpose of the provision may raise doubts as to the extent to which the court is authorized to treat the information obtained by virtue of this requirement as material.

9. Proof of claims by nonresidents: Subsection (a) of the act provides that the court in which the reorganization petition is brought shall "during the pendency of the proceedings under this section have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever located for the purposes of this section." In so far as this does away with the necessity for ancillary proceedings elsewhere and enables the trustee to deal with the entire property and business of the debtor wherever situated, this is a great improvement over the present equity practice. It may, however, have unfortunate results with respect to proof of disputed claims, especially those requiring oral testimony. Some of the corporations reorganized under the act may do business all over the United States. The claims are not as in bankruptcy limited to those arising out of contracts, the word "creditors" being defined for the purpose of section 75 as including "all holders of claims of whatever character against the debtor or its property." This language would cover tort claims such as those for personal injury. It is quite possible under the act that proceedings may be instituted in New York by a corporation which is doing business as far away as California and has personal injury tort claimants against it in California. To try these tort claims in New York is neither fair nor practicable. Yet the act makes no provision for trying them elsewhere, unless the provision in subsection (c) (8) for referring matters to a special master would authorize the New York Federal court to appoint a California master in such cases, or unless the provision in subsection (c) (4) empowering the court to determine the manner in which claims may be evidenced or allowed gives the court power to provide for some sort of hearing in California. This is not, however, a satisfactory solution of the matter, both because it makes it necessary for the California claimant to seek the judge in New York in order to get the appointment of a California master, and because a judge sitting in New York would scarcely be qualified to select a master 3,000 miles away. The provision of subsection (c) (4) is so vague as to be of little help. It would seem that some explicit provision for the local trial of certain classes of claims is essential to avoid injustice.

10. Effect of dismissal of proceedings on pending claims: As already indicated, the court has power, if no reorganization plan can be worked out, either to dismiss the proceedings or to decree liquidation. Doubtless the second course would be the one normally pursued, but particularly if public utilities are to remain subject to the act, cases in which the proceedings will be dismissed after months or years of futile effort to work out a reorganization may sometimes occur. The possible effect of this situation in validating preferences has already been referred to. Another important question is its effect upon claims which have been filed but not allowed. Unless the filing of such claims prevents the running of the statute of limitations, such claims may become barred by lapse of time. Perhaps the provision of subsection (a) that the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor during the pendency of the proceedings would be enough to prevent the statute of limitations from running, but the act is far from clear on the point.

Nor is it altogether clear that the allowance of claims has any effect unless reorganization takes place. It might be well to provide expressly that the allowance of a claim is a final determination of its validity even if the reorganization proceedings are ultimately dismissed because of failure to agree upon a plan.

PENSIONS OF WIDOWS OF CIVIL WAR VETERANS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, several widows of Civil War veterans in my State have received a letter from the National Tribune, signed by Rice W. Means, urging them to subscribe for the National Tribune and disturbing them very greatly by asking them if they can prove that the physical disabilities of their husbands who died since the Civil War were contracted in the services, and stating, "The National Chamber of Commerce proposes to take your pension away from you."

This has caused a great deal of distress among a number of very worthy ladies of advanced age. I was interested to find out what proof there was in it, and I sent a letter to the chamber of commerce, and I have a letter from the president of that organization assuring me that it is a gross misrepresentation of their position. In order that the distress which has been occasioned may be somewhat officially assuaged, I ask unanimous consent that both letters may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE,

DEAR MADAM: Can you prove the physical disabilities of your deceased veteran husband were contracted in the service?

If not, the national chamber of commerce proposes taking your pension away from you.

Veterans and widows are in more danger at the present moment than ever before.

Regardless of what you read and hear, the National Tribune wants you to know that big business, by controlling large newspapers, magazines, the radio, and other avenues of propaganda, is desirous of taking away all pensions except for disabilities which can be proven were incurred in line of duty. If they find it impossible to do that, their next move is to write a "pauper" clause in all legislation granting benefits to veterans, their widows, and dependents.

This is not an attempt to scare you. We merely want you to know the truth.

The National Tribune will fight both of these proposals with all its might and power. We also say to you that we think we will be successful, but because of the tremendous power of our enemies there is always imminent danger if we are not on the lookout.

I believe all veterans and widows receiving a pension owe it to themselves to keep informed. To do this you must read the National Tribune.

The majority of Congressmen are friendly to veterans and their cause. However, your cause must be properly presented to the Congress. The National Tribune will perform that task.

Self-interest as well as gratitude should prompt you to support the National Tribune.

Don't delay getting the news here in Washington. Send $2 for your subscription to the National Tribune at once.

Yours in comradeship,

RICE W. MEANS.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 31, 1933.

The Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BINGHAM: It was kind indeed of you to bring to our attention the circular of the National Tribune representing to widows of Civil War veterans that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is endeavoring to take their pensions away from them. We also have heard of this matter recently from other sources.

I know you realize how grossly this misrepresents the position of the national chamber. At no time has it expressed any attitude with respect to pension payments by the Government to widows of Civil War veterans.

One of the penalties of being prominently before the public seems to be misrepresentation of this kind, but it becomes doubly unfortunate when it creates unfounded anxiety among aged women who at best have scant familiarity with such matters.

With appreciation of your endeavor to ascertain the facts and with all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,

H. I. HARRIMAN, President.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 13872, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, to be inserted at the proper place. It is Senate bill 36, the Federal-aid road construction bill as passed by the Senate during the first session of this Congress. I ask that the amendment may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

At the proper place in House bill 13872 to insert the following:

"That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be expended according to the provisions of such act as amended: The sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934; the sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935: Provided, That in apportioning the foregoing sums among the several States and the Territory of Hawaii for said fiscal years deductions shall be made as reimbursement to the United States of the $80,000,000 emergency advance funds apportioned to such States and the Territory of Hawaii and used in road work, such deductions to be made at the rate of $16,000,000 each fiscal year, in accordance with the item 'Federal-aid highway system' of the act approved December 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 1031).

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for forest roads and trails, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be available until expended in accordance with the provisions of said section 23: The sum of $12,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934; the sum of $12,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935.

"SEC. 3. "SEC. 5. In every case in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture and the highway department of the State in question, it shall be practicable to plant and maintain shade trees along the highways authorized by the act of November 9, 1921, and by this act, the planting of such trees shall be included in the specifications provided in section 8 of said act of November 9, 1921, and the Federal highway act of November 9, 1921, is amended accordingly."

MAIL TRANSPORTATION BY MOTOR VEHICLE

The bill (H. R. 9636) to authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle in lieu of service by train was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the Senator from Nevada ought to explain the bill.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Postmaster General dealing with the importance of this bill, which I will read and which will, I think, explain it very clearly. It is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1933.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ODDIE: Your kind attention is invited to the bill (H. R. 9636) to authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle in lieu of service by train. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives on March 9, 1932, and on June 27 your committee reported it back to the Senate with recommendation for its enactment. It is observed that the bill was taken up for consideration on January 3 last, under unanimous-consent agreement, but upon the request of Senator McKELLAR it was passed over.

It is believed that the proposed legislation is in the public interest and it is desired, if possible, to have the bill favorably considered and passed by the Senate during the present session. Any action that you may properly take to expedite its passage will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly yours,

WALTER F. BROWN.

I hope, Mr. President, that this bill may be passed. It has been carefully considered by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nevada to explain what the bill does. He has read a letter which did not furnish very much illumination.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator for just a moment, let me say the committee had studied this bill and set forth the reasons for its passage in its report, from which I read as follows:

On account of unprofitable train operation certain railroad companies are withdrawing local train service and substituting therefor motor busses over the highways. The withdrawal of these local trains has interfered with the prompt dispatch of the mails and it has been necessary to provide a substitute service in lieu of that formerly provided by train. The railroads, in most instances, are willing to provide mail service in their busses and accept pay therefor at the same rates that would be allowed for similar service by railroad.

Legislation which will authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to perform mail service in motor busses at railroad rates of pay has been recommended by the Postmaster General in his annual reports, and the need for this legislation is again set forth in the department's letter of March 1, 1932, as follows:

"It may be stated that at the present time railroad and electric-car companies are providing satisfactory service by bus or truck over the highways in lieu of service by train at many points throughout the country, and that the total compensation for this service at regular railroad rates is approximately $250,000 per annum. We have had a recent survey made by our field officers and it is indicated that if the present manner of handling were discontinued and service placed under star-route contracts, the additional cost would be approximately $125,000 per annum.

"The matter was submitted to the Comptroller General for a ruling as to whether there is any legal objection to authorizing payment on regularly authorized railroad routes to railroad companies of record for service performed by motor vehicle over the highways in lieu of service by train. He advised that his office will not for the present question otherwise proper payments to railroad companies for this class of transportation, but if the practice is to continue beyond the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, there should be specific statutory authority therefor by change in the wording of the appropriations or otherwise.

"It is believed the proposed legislation is in the public interest and it is desired, if possible, to have this bill introduced in order that the department may be in position to make a report on its merits in the usual manner.

"Sincerely yours,

"W. IRVING GLOVER,
"Second Assistant Postmaster General."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment heretofore submitted by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

That notwithstanding the provisions of section 502 (b) of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, prohibiting the making of loans to veterans upon their adjusted-service certificates prior to the expiration of two years after the date of the certificates, hereafter loans may be made upon such certificates in accordance with loan basis provided by law at any time after the date of issuance thereof.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is entirely foreign to the bill that is before the Senate, and I think that it should be referred to the proper committee to be considered. If the amendment is to be insisted upon, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objects, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of Order of Business 1031, House bill 9636, not because of the bill as reported by the Senate, but on account of the amendment that was offered.

The bill is a very important bill and ought to be passed; but the amendment is foreign to the bill in every way.

I am going to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill and express the hope that the Senate will vote against the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and pass the bill as reported to the Senate.

Mr. ODDIE. I concur in what the Senator from Utah has said. I can not see how the Senator from Florida considered the amendment to be germane to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to returning to House bill 9636? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Just a minute, Mr. President. Let us know what we are doing. What is the amendment?

Mr. ODDIE. The amendment is one that is entirely foreign to the purpose of this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I know; but what is it?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

Mr. ODDIE. My impression is that the Senator from Florida must have intended this amendment to go on another bill.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Let it be read.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask to have the amendment stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the amendment be stated. I think it is already in the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This amendment has relation to World War adjusted compensation.

Mr. DILL. It has no reference at all to this matter. Let me state it, Mr. President.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the clerk state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] offered the following amendment:

Add a new section to the bill, as follows:

"That notwithstanding the provisions of section 502 (b) of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, prohibiting the making of loans to veterans upon their adjusted-service certificates prior to the expiration of two years after the date of the certificates, hereafter loans may be made upon such certificates in accordance with loan basis provided by law at any time after the date of issuance thereof."

Mr. GEORGE. That is already in existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That has already been enacted, at the last session.

Mr. ODDIE. Let that amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of this measure?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9636) to authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle in lieu of service by train, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to permit railroad and electric-car companies to provide mail transportation by motor vehicle over highways in lieu of service by train, the compensation for such service to be at a rate not in excess of the rate that would be allowed for similar service by railroad or electric car, payment therefor to be made from the appropriate appropriation for railroad transportation and mail messenger service or electric and cable car service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, which has been stated.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the bill be read, Mr. President. I have not been able to find it in my file.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill the third time.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question about that bill. Does it extend to permitting the railroads to put in competing lines with busses?

Mr. ODDIE. The bill states nothing of the kind. I do not think it would change existing law at all in that particular. There is nothing in the bill that will give authority to the railroads to establish competing lines.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is nothing in the existing law authorizing it either way at this time, and that is one of the important questions pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ODDIE. Did the Senator hear the statement I made a few minutes ago about this matter?

Mr. BROOKHART. I did not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has already been passed. Does the Senator from Iowa ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed?

Mr. BROOKHART. I was addressing the Chair before it was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I should like to read this statement, which I read a minute ago from the report:

On account of unprofitable train operation certain railroad companies are withdrawing local train service and substituting therefor motor busses over the highways. The withdrawal of these local trains has interfered with the prompt dispatch of the mails, and it has been necessary to provide a substitute service in lieu of that formerly provided by train. The railroads in most instances are willing to provide mail service in their busses and accept pay therefor at the same rates that would be allowed for similar service by railroad.

Legislation which will authorize the Postmaster General to permit railroad and electric-car companies to perform mail service in motor busses at railroad rates of pay has been recommended by the Postmaster General in his annual reports, and the need for this legislation is again set forth in the department's letter of March 1, 1932.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I understand that the bill does not interfere with the idea of a general control of the establishment of bus and truck service, so I will not object to it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4781) authorizing an emergency appropriation for the relief of needy and distressed residents of the District of Columbia, and for the temporary care of transient and homeless persons in said District, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that matter, I think, has been taken care of in another bill. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4046) to fix more equitably the responsibility of postmasters was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, that bill seems to be clearly in the public interest. I do not think there is any occasion for objection to it. It involves no public expense; it is simply designed to protect postmasters from being responsible for embezzlements on the part of the employees whom they do not select and do not name, but who are under the civil service. It seems to me that it is clearly in the public interest.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me ask my friend a question. He knows that we have had before us many claims for compensation of postmasters where losses have been sustained, and in some instances it has been demonstrated that there has been negligence upon the part of the postmaster, either in failing to maintain a proper safe or in failing properly to care for the funds. It seems to me that we ought rather to try to protect the Government than to absolve these postmasters.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I agree in the case named by the Senator that that ought to be done; but the situation here is this: If an employee embezzles more than $5,000 and his bond is only $5,000, the postmaster can be held for the excess over $5,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am sure one consideration which affects this bill has not occurred to the Senator from Massachusetts. There would, in my judgment, be danger of secret collusion, which might result in loss to the Government if we enacted this bill. I ask that it go over.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That has not been called to my attention; and in view of the suggestion I think the matter ought to go over for further study and consideration.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) authorizing the printing of additional copies of House Report No. 2290 was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3770) to prevent the obstruction of and burdens upon interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion-picture films, and to prevent restraint upon free competition in the production, distribution, and exhibition of copyrighted motion-picture films (a) by prohibiting the compulsory block-booking of copyrighted motion-picture films; (b) by making unlawful, unreasonable, and discriminatory protection in favor of certain theaters over others; (c) to compel the furnishing of accurate synopses of all pictures offered to theater operators before the same have been released and reviewed; and (d) to amend section 2 of the Clayton Act to make it apply to license agreements and leases as well as sales in interstate commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG (and other Senators). Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to intoxicating liquors was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let this joint resolution go over.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I suggest that that joint resolution be indefinitely postponed, inasmuch as the Committee on the Judiciary has reported a repeal amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

The resolution (S. Res. 260) directing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to report to the Senate regarding loans made or proposed to be made by it was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 263) to investigate conditions respecting the sale and distribution of dairy products in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7894) to promote safety on the streets and highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia, to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let this bill go over. It is an important measure, and there are many admirable features in it; but under the limitation imposed under the unanimous-consent agreement, it will be impossible to give it proper consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MACK COPPER CO.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to render findings of facts in the claim of the Mack Copper Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, to hear the claim of the Mack Copper Co. against the United States for damages to certain real property owned by Mack Copper Co. and situated in San Diego County, State of California, which was used and occupied by the United States as an Army cantonment, training camp, or for other military purposes, from May 15, 1917, to June 1, 1922, and to render findings of fact, and to report such findings of fact to Congress.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4178) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, as amended, relating to misbranded foods, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 226) to provide for the use of granite and/or marble in the erection of certain memorials and public buildings was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], who is temporarily absent, I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

FRANK I. OTIS

The bill (S. 2519) granting an honorable discharge to Frank I. Otis, first lieutenant, Fourth Regiment, United States Cavalry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Utah would withhold his objection.

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. DILL. This bill was introduced by my late colleague, Mr. Jones, when he was here. I recognize the general objection to overriding the dishonorable discharge of any soldier, but I desire to call attention to some of the facts in this matter.

This man was a first lieutenant in the United States Army. He served in the Spanish War and several years later he disappeared shortly before the time set for his departure from New York to San Francisco, after being under observation for insanity. The War Department dropped him as a deserter. That was in 1905. He has never been heard of from that date. He is survived by his widow, and several boys who were in the World War. His widow is in desperate circumstances. It is impossible for her to get a pension. It seems to me that under these circumstances there is a situation against which the ordinary objection would not prevail.

Mr. KING. This is merely to relieve him of the charge of desertion?

Mr. DILL. Yes; and to make it possible for his widow to apply for a pension.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "discharged," to strike out "persons from the military service" and insert "soldiers"; on the same page, line 9, after "Provided," to strike out "That other than as set forth herein, no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act" and to insert "That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Frank I. Otis, who was a first lieutenant, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Army as of January 3, 1906: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Frank I. Otis."

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The bill (S. 5137) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, Order of Business 1155, House Joint Resolution 533, passed by the House of Representatives, is an identical measure; and I ask unanimous consent that we substitute it for this bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will compare the two measures, he will find that they are not identical.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not read them. I only noticed what the calendar says.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senate committee inserted an amendment in the Senate bill which is not in the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the proper way to do would be to consider the House joint resolution, and offer the Senate amendment to it.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is in the Chamber now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it go over, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I hope the matter will not go over. The suggestion made by the Senator from Utah is pertinent. When we reach the House measure we can move to substitute the Senate bill for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; we can move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the Senate bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is a difference in the two measures, and I should prefer to have the Senate bill passed and let the matter go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is done, the bill will go to the House; but if we take up the House bill, and strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the Senate bill, then it is still a House bill, and will only go to conference, and the conferees can settle the matter.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remind the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Idaho that it will not go to conference if we pass the Senate bill; only if we pass the House bill.

Mr. BORAH. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MOBILE NATIONAL CEMETERY, ALA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5305) to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire 5 acres of land, more or less, opposite the Mobile National Cemetery, Ala., for use as an addition to said cemetery, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, to strike out "$8,450" and insert "$6,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the title to 5 acres of land, more or less, or rights pertaining thereto, or interests therein, said land being located opposite the Mobile National Cemetery, Ala., for use as an addition to said cemetery, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $6,000 for carrying out provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire 5 acres of land, more or less, opposite the Mobile National Cemetery, Ala., for use as an addition to said cemetery."

LOUIS VAUTHIER AND FRANCIS DOHS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5161) for the relief of Louis Vauthier and Francis Dohs, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in consideration of their long, honest, and faithful service as civilian instructors of cadets at the United States Military Academy, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Louis Vauthier and Francis Dohs warrant officers of the Regular Army, and immediately thereafter to place them upon the retired list of warrant officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That in determining the length of service for longevity pay and retirement they shall be credited with and entitled to count all service as civilian instructors at the United States Military Academy, whether continuous or not: Provided further, That upon retirement for age or otherwise they shall be entitled to all the privileges, pay, and allowances of retired warrant officers of the Regular Army regardless of their age at their appointment to and acceptance of such office: And provided further, That the limitation in the act of June 30, 1922, on the number of warrant officers, United States Army, shall not apply to the appointees hereunder.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this measure from the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is a bill which passed the Senate in the last Congress, and was favorably reported in the House, but was not reached before adjournment.

These two men have been for a long time on the list of civilian instructors at West Point. Vauthier was first an instructor in fencing, but in recent years has been an instructor in the department of foreign languages. He has been there for 24 years. There is no law under which he can be retired, but he has reached retirement age; and the War Department and both committees in the House and Senate have unanimously felt that the long service he has had merited some sort of retirement privilege. This would retire him as a warrant officer, not as a commissioned officer. I think he has clearly earned it.

Dohs has been an instructor in gymnastics for nearly a quarter of a century—some 23 years—and is now well along in the sixties. There is no law under which he could be retired either. The committee felt very strongly that it was simple justice to give him this privilege.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, these are both civilian employees?

Mr. REED. They are both civilian employees.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I inquire if there is any law to permit a civilian employee who has performed labors in the academy for the same period of years to have retirement?

Mr. REED. I believe that now they could get in under the civil service retirement law, but I am not sure. These cases, however, could not.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long have they been there?

Mr. REED. Twenty-three years in one case and twenty-four years in another.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5233) to provide for the protection of national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials under the control of the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Pennsylvania explain that bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is a general bill, which would take the place of a long string of special acts, not at all uniform, relating to the different national parks. In some of them Congress has given the Secretary of War power to establish regulations, but has neglected to give him any power to enforce them. In order to make the law uniform, to apply in all cases, it was thought best to have this general legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will this involve the creation of new offices or positions?

Mr. REED. It will not result in the creation of a new office, and it will not cost a cent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, has this bill any relation to the National Park Service as such?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; it does not bear at all on the National Park Service, which is under the Department of the Interior.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe such regulations as he deems necessary for the proper government and protection of, and maintenance of good order in, national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials as are now or hereafter may be under the control of the War Department; and any person who willfully violates any such regulation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners, superintendents, caretakers, officers, or guards of such national military parks, national parks, battlefield sites, national monuments, and miscellaneous memorials, or any of them, are authorized to make arrests for violations of any of the regulations prescribed pursuant to this act, and to bring the offenders before the nearest commissioner, judge, or court of the United States having jurisdiction in the premises.

PLATTSBURG BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION, N. Y.

The bill (S. 5270) to authorize the adjustment of a part of the western boundary line of the Plattsburg Barracks Military Reservation, N. Y., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to enter into and execute an agreement or agreements with the owners or claimants of adjoining land to fix and establish a location for the western boundary line of that part of the Plattsburg Barracks Military Reservation, N. Y., acquired from Pliny Moore, and others, by deed dated December 30, 1814, and he may, if he deems it advisable, give to or receive from such owners or claimants appropriate releases, by way of quit claim deeds or otherwise.

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS REAL ESTATE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5304) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or dispose of certain surplus real estate of the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Pennsylvania explain this bill? It seems to be a rather important measure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there were four Confederate cemeteries listed in this bill for abandonment. Three of them have already been completely abandoned, that is to say, the bodies which once were there have been moved to more appropriate and larger military cemeteries. There are a few bodies, I believe, left at the Balls Bluff Cemetery. It is desired to move them to Arlington. They will get better care at Arlington, and the Balls Bluff Cemetery is a tiny cemetery, remote from Washington. It is not big enough to justify a regular caretaker, and it will be much more satisfactory, I think, to move the bodies.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in accordance with, and under the applicable provisions and conditions of, an act entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203), the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to dispose of the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or portions thereof, upon determination by him that said tracts or parcels, or portions thereof, are no longer needed for military purposes:

Confederate lot, Greenlawn Cemetery, Indianapolis, Ind.; tract designated No. 2 of Confederate Cemetery, Point Lookout, Md.; Balls Bluff National Cemetery, Va.; Soldiers Lot, Camp Dennison, Ohio.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to discontinue the national cemetery at Balls Bluff, Va., established under the provisions of section 18 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1862 (12 Stat. 596), and the Secretary of War is further authorized to disinter and remove to the nearest national cemetery the remains of the soldiers buried in said cemetery.

RELIEF IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 5126) to extend the provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 to the Virgin Islands was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the first sentence of subsection (b) of section 1 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is amended by inserting after "Puerto Rico" a comma and "the Virgin Islands."

(b) The last sentence of such subsection is amended to read as follows: "Before any amount is paid under this section to the Governor of Puerto Rico, the Governor of the Virgin Islands, or the Governor of the Territory of Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or the Territory of Alaska shall enter into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment of such amount with interest thereon as herein provided, in such installments and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon."

(c) Subsection (f) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(f) As used in this section, the term 'Territory' means Alaska, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico."

SEC. 2. (a) The last paragraph of subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"The provisions of this subsection shall apply with respect to projects in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Territories to the same extent as in the case of projects in the several States, and as used in this subsection the term 'States' includes Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Territories."

(b) Section 206 of such act is amended by inserting after "Hawaii," wherever it appears in such section, "the Virgin Islands,".

CURTIS JETT

The bill (S. 3870) for the relief of Curtis Jett was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of this bill. It appears to be a measure where the benefits of the general retirement provisions by act of Congress are being bestowed upon an individual. I would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LOGAN. This beneficiary is a Spanish-American War veteran and desires to have his discharge show that he was a good soldier.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The purpose of the bill is to grant retirement?

Mr. LOGAN. There is no retirement about it. It would not even give him a pension.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What benefit would it bestow on him?

Mr. LOGAN. It would give him this benefit: He is an eastern Kentucky mountaineer, and he does not like to have his record show that he was not a good soldier.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought from reading the report that emphasis was laid upon his disabilities at the time he was given his discharge, and that the purpose was to lay the foundation for the benefit of the general retirement law.

Mr. LOGAN. No. Evidently the Senator has read another report.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NAVAL ORDNANCE PLANT, SOUTH CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The bill (S. 3171) to authorize the disposition of the naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I can not understand why anybody should object to this bill. A similar bill has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that my attention was just called to this measure this morning, and I want some time to look into it. I understand that there were no hearings held by the Naval Affairs Committee, and I want to look into the matter. I will be glad to confer with the Senator later.

I ask unanimous consent that my objection may also be interposed to Order of Business 1153, House bill 4657, a similar bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 3171 will be passed over.

BETTY M'BRIDE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4230) for the relief of Betty McBride, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "1930" and to insert in lieu thereof "1931," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation, "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy, 1931," to Miss Betty McBride, dependent sister of the late William McBride, fireman, first class, United States Navy, who died December 26, 1929, in the naval service, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said William McBride was entitled to receive at the date of his death: Provided, That it be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that the said dependent sister was actually dependent on said enlisted man, and the determination of such fact by the Secretary of the Navy shall be final and conclusive on the accounting officers of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELMO K. GORDON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2844) for the relief of Elmo K. Gordon, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the words "authorized to be," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elmo K. Gordon, former seaman, first class, the sum of $648, being the amount due him for salary for one year at the rate of $54 per month, and said amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no back pay, allowances, or emoluments shall become due because of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JACK C. RICHARDSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8120) for the relief of Jack C. Richardson, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Lieut. Jack C. Richardson, United States Navy, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $143.04" and to insert the words "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $143.04, to be paid to Lieut. Jack C. Richardson, United States Navy," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $143.04, to be paid to Lieut. Jack C. Richardson, United States Navy, in full satisfaction of his claim for expenses incurred while traveling around the world on the German airship Graf Zeppelin under orders of August 5, 1929, issued by the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California whether this man was in the Government service and was under orders in making this trip?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand that he was. I do not recall the details of the case, but the committee considered the measure very carefully.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DOUGLAS B. ESPY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4135) for the relief of Douglas B. Espy, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out the words "That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Douglas B. Espy, chief machinist's mate, United States Navy, the sum of $1,033" and to insert the words "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $743.50, to be paid to Douglas B. Espy, chief machinist's mate, United States Navy," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $743.50, to be paid to Douglas B. Espy, chief machinist's mate, United States Navy, as compensation for the loss of personal effects destroyed by fire in the Government quarters occupied by him while stationed at the naval radio station at Cavite, P. I., reimbursement for such loss having been refused by the Navy Department as not authorized under existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL RADIO STATION, SAVANNAH, GA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2374) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to convey by gift to the city of Savannah, Ga., the naval radio station, the buildings, and apparatus located upon land owned by said city, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if and when the naval radio station at Savannah, Ga., is no longer required for naval purposes, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to convey by gift, to the city of Savannah, State of Georgia, the said naval radio station, which radio station is located on land belonging to the city of Savannah, together with all the buildings and apparatus thereof; but no expense shall be caused the United States hereunder.

LIEUT. ARNOLD R. KLINE, UNITED STATES NAVY

The bill (S. 4445) authorizing the President to transfer and appoint Lieut. (Junior Grade) Arnold R. Kline, United States Navy, to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), Supply Corps, United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the identical House bill (H. R. 698) be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 698) authorizing the President to transfer and appoint Lieut. (Junior Grade) Arnold R. Kline, United States Navy, to the grade of assistant paymaster with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Supply Corps, United States Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I would like to have somebody explain this measure.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, this officer has developed defective vision, which will probably make it impossible for him to get his ordinary promotions in the line. This bill is to authorize his transfer to the Supply Corps and is recommended by the Navy Department.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 4445 will be indefinitely postponed.

SILVER SERVICE OF THE U. S. S. "PADUCAH"

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4480) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Woman's Club of the city of Paducah, Ky., the silver service in use on the U. S. S. Paducah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky whether this is agreeable to the officials of the State of Kentucky. I know in a number of instances where a silver service has been returned, it has been returned to the State. This seems to be a bill to return the silver service to a private organization.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I understand that it is satisfactory to the State officials, although I have no direct information.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, but I ask the Senator to make inquiry, and if it is not agreeable to the State officials, I hope he will move to reconsider, and have the proper amendment made.

Mr. LOGAN. I think it is perfectly agreeable to the State, and if it is not, I will join in asking for a reconsideration.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to loan to the Woman's Club of the city of Paducah, Ky., for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was in use on the U. S. S. Paducah: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

SILVER SERVICE OF THE GUNBOAT "MARIETTA"

The bill (H. R. 1225) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Campus Martius Memorial Museum, of the city of Marietta, Ohio, the silver service presented to the United States for the gunboat Marietta was considered, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Campus Martius Memorial Museum, of the city of Marietta, Ohio, for preservation and exhibition, until such time as he shall determine the Navy Department has need of the same, the silver service which was presented to the United States for the gunboat Marietta by the citizens of Marietta, Ohio: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

ESSIE FINGER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5786) for the relief of Essie Finger.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from California explain that bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the Committee on Naval Affairs took this bill under consideration and reported it without amendment. I do not recall the details and facts of the case. I think it is a meritorious measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will first read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Essie Finger, blind and dependent sister of George William Finger, late boatswain's mate, second class, United States Navy, a sum equal to six months' gratuity pay as provided for under the act of May 22, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the statement made by the department justifies the payment to the sister, and therefore I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDAL OF HONOR TO RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON

The bill (H. R. 6637) authorizing the President to present a medal of honor to Richmond Pearson Hobson was considered, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Nicholson from the date of his dismissal from the Metropolitan police department to the date of any such reappointment.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO ACT, 1927

The bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Washington explain this measure? It seems to be a very important bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, there are a number of amendments to the bill, and I shall not ask to have it taken up at this time, but I do give notice that at the first opportunity in a morning hour I should like to have the bill taken up. I believe it can be disposed of within an hour's time. It is very important that this legislation be passed at this session. At this time I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PINE RIDGE INDIANS

The bill (S. 5234) to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. A similar bill was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives. The bill in the House, House bill 13770, was passed by the House with an amendment on February 7. It was sent to the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate yesterday, and we have not had an opportunity to act upon it. The amendment is to provide for fees for attorneys who helped to look up the cases involved. They were old cases, dating back in some instances to the latter part of the seventies, under an old law that was passed in 1828.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under those circumstances, does not the Senator think it ought to go over until his committee can act on it?

Mr. FRAZIER. No, Mr. President; the committee has acted on the Senate bill, and reported it, and it is on the calendar. But we have not had an opportunity to act on the amendment of the House. I have talked with the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he says the amendment is all right. I talked with one of the Representatives from South Dakota, I have talked with both the Senators from South Dakota who are interested in the bill, and they all approve the amendment. I therefore ask that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 13770, and that we substitute it for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see that the bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior as a proper accounting. I notice on page 8 of his report that statement, and therefore I shall not object.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota what would be the amount of the appropriation necessary to carry out the legislative act?

Mr. FRAZIER. The amount awarded to the Indians is $19,357.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate will be discharged from further consideration of House bill 13770, and that bill will be substituted for the Senate bill. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Dakota that there does not appear to be any amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand this is in regard to attorney fees?

Mr. FRAZIER. The amendment put on the original bill provided that the Secretary of the Interior might in his discretion investigate and ascertain the attorney or attorneys who were helpful in the matter of the claims and allow a fee to be taken out of this amount, not to exceed 10 per cent in any instance.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator mean 10 per cent of the $19,357? Is the amount in the bill as passed by the House increased?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; it is the same amount.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 5234 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3033) for the relief of Ida E. Godfrey and others was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 967) for the relief of the American Bonding Co., of Baltimore, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANDERSON-TULLY CO.

The bill (S. 610) for the relief of the Anderson-Tully Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Anderson-Tully Co., a Tennessee corporation, the sum of $442.41, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for court costs incurred in its suit against the United States (No. 933, in admiralty) in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, western division, in which judgment was rendered on January 22, 1929, in favor of the said Anderson-Tully Co.

HARRY E. BLOMGREN

The bill (S. 2680) for the relief of Harry E. Blomgren was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see that this account was disallowed by the Accounting Office. Are the facts sufficient to warrant repudiation of the finding of the Accounting Office?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, this is merely a matter of accounting in the post office at Fort Dodge, Iowa. In getting some special work done the postmaster permitted a rural carrier to use his vehicle or automobile at the regular rate per hour and supposed he could be paid. It was found after he had paid it that the Accounting Office had determined that the postmaster could not employ a vehicle owned by a rural carrier for this type of service. The result was the postmaster was compelled to pay this amount, and this is merely a matter of reimbursement.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Harry E. Blomgren, postmaster at Fort Dodge, Iowa, the sum of $26, being the amount expended by him for vehicle hire, said sum having been disallowed by the General Accounting Office.

Davis, special disbursing agent, field service, General Land Office, Anchorage, Alaska, for payment of $35.90 made to Harold W. Merrin as reimbursement for travel expense, which amount now stands as a disallowance on the books of the General Accounting Office.

HAROLD W. MERRIN

The bill (S. 4287) for the relief of Harold W. Merrin was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harold W. Merrin the sum of $124.35 as reimbursement for amounts disallowed and charged to him in connection with travel expenses to and from Alaska under official orders and reimbursed by him to the United States.

HARVEY CANAL SHIP YARD & MACHINE SHOP

The bill (S. 5203) for the relief of the Harvey Canal Ship Yard & Machine Shop was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Comptroller General recommends it and it seems to me that it ought to pass.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Harvey Canal and Ship Yard & Machine Shop, Harvey, La., for $135, covering storage charges on the gas screw Dawning for the period December 31, 1931, to May 13, 1932, 135 days, at $1 per diem, the rate prescribed in contract No. T-20c-48, dated July 7, 1931, and to allow not to exceed $135 in full and final settlement thereof. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $135, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claim.

TEXAS POWER & LIGHT CO.

The bill (S. 5204) for the relief of the Texas Power & Light Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Texas Power & Light Co. for damage to and destruction of transformers loaned to the veterans' hospital at Waco, Tex., in May, 1932, and to allow not to exceed $298.65 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $298.65, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of this claim.

GREAT FALLS MEAT CO.

The bill (S. 5205) for the relief of the Great Falls Meat Co., of Great Falls, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Comptroller General recommends the bill. It seems to me it ought to pass.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Great Falls Meat Co., of Great Falls, Mont., arising out of the purchase by said company from the Department of Agriculture, in November, 1931, of a buffalo, the carcass of which spoiled before delivery, and to allow not to exceed $50 in full and final settlement of the claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim.

ROSE GILLESPIE AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 5207) for the relief of Rose Gillespie, Joseph Anton Dietz, and Manuel M. Wiseman, as trustee of the estate of Louis Wiseman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this seems to be another one of the claims which the Comptroller General has examined very carefully. It ought to pass.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claims of Rose Gillespie, Joseph Anton Dietz, and Manuel M. Wiseman, as trustee of the estate of Louis Wiseman, deceased, all of Alton, Ill., for damages caused to private property, located in Alton, Ill., due to blasting operations carried on by the United States snag boat H. G. Wright, while engaged in removing an old steamboat wreck from the channel of the Mississippi River near that place, and to allow on said claims not to exceed $3.72, $14.30, and $90.33, respectively, in full and final settlement thereof. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $108.35, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claims.

MARY BYRKETT SINKS

The bill (S. 5208) for the relief of Mary Byrkett Sinks was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Mary Byrkett Sinks as reimbursement of costs to her in raising the grade of her lot in Troy, Ohio, made necessary through the action of the United States in raising the grade of an adjoining post-office building site, and to allow not to exceed $175 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claim.

GREAT WESTERN COAL MINES CO.

The bill (H. R. 2065) for the relief of the Great Western Coal Mines Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill from the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, a man by the name of Bird obtained a grant from the Government and agreed to pay $16,000 for the land. It was afterwards transferred to the Great Western Coal Mines Co. and that company paid the $16,000, which went into the Treasury of the United States. Then some litigation arose. There was an investigation made by the commissioner and an appeal to the General Land Office and finally to the Secretary of the Interior.

It was decided that the Great Western Coal Mines Co. was entitled to a refund of the amount which had been paid into the Treasury. Then the matter went to the General Accounting Office. The General Accounting Office held that it could not be paid for this reason: The law provides that where an application is rejected the money shall be refunded. There was a suit instituted in this matter and the officers of the Government and the coal company reached some agreement whereby they surrendered the fee to the land back to the Government. The Government had the land, but, because of the technical language in the law and the fact that the claim had not been rejected but had been voluntarily surrendered, the Comptroller General said he was without authority to authorize payment. This simply directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the money which was paid into the Treasury.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the Great Western Coal Mines Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,600 in full satisfaction of its claim for refund of purchase money paid by Richard L. Bird in connection with coal land entry No. 025342., title to the lands covered thereby having been relinquished to the United States by the Great Western Coal Mines Co. as assignee of such Richard L. Bird.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5294) to amend the act of May 29, 1930, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONTEST NOTICES IN MINING LOCATIONS OR CLAIMS

The bill (S. 5274) to regulate service of contest notices in all cases affecting mining locations or claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who reported the bill, does not seem to be present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the bill only provides for the taking of testimony before notaries public instead of going to the General Land Office and giving the testimony. It extends the time for notices to 20 days.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "situated," to insert "such officer to be designated by the registrar of the district," and on page 2, line 4, to strike out "10" and insert "20," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases of contests as to the mineral or nonmineral character of land embraced in any mining location or claim, or as to the performance of labor or improvements, or as to any other matter involving the legality of such locations or claims, the proofs and testimony may be taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths within the land district where the locations or claims may be situated, such officer to be designated by the register of the district, and when duly certified by the officer taking same shall have the same force and effect as if taken before the register of the land office. The testimony and proofs may be taken as hereinbefore provided on personal notice of at least 20 days to the opposing party; or if such party can not be found, then by publication of at least once a week for 30 days in a newspaper, to be designated by the register of the land office as published nearest to the location of such land; and the register shall require proof that such notice has been given.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRY OF LANDS

The bill (S. 5259) to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing any of the minerals subject to disposition under the general leasing law or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this seems to be an important bill. Will some one familiar with the facts explain it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think there can be no possible objection to it. Certain lands were classified as mineral lands under the general leasing act of 1920. Meanwhile the surface may be valuable for agricultural purposes, and the bill merely authorizes entry of the land for agricultural purposes, reserving the minerals.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as valuable for any of the deposits subject to prospecting, leasing, or development under the general leasing act of February 25, 1920, or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, shall be subject to appropriation, location, selection, entry, or purchase if otherwise available in the form and manner and subject to the reservations, provisions, limitations, and conditions of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1914 (38 Stat. L. 509; U. S. C., title 30, sec. 123).

WILLIAM A. LESTER

The bill (S. 3831) for the relief of William A. Lester, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

ZETTA LESTER

The bill (S. 3832) for the relief of Zetta Lester was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, to Zetta Lester the sum of $400, which was paid in connection with timber and stone application No. 09608 to the Department of the Interior on August 17, 1917, which application was refused due to the fact that the land in question was withdrawn from homestead entry.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE TO GRACE GOODHUE COOLIDGE

The bill (S. 5387) granting a franking privilege to Grace Goodhue Coolidge, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all mail matter sent by the post by Grace Goohue Coolidge, widow of the late Calvin Coolidge, under her written autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during her natural life.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4657) to authorize the disposition of the naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over for the present. It has already gone over once.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the record shows that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asked that his objection be entered to the consideration of this bill at the same time he objected to a similar bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF RECLAMATION LAW OF APRIL 1, 1932

The bill (S. 5417) to extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932, was considered and was read.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. On page 2, line 3, after the words "per annum," insert "for the year specified in the act approved April 1, 1932, and as amended herein."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, after the words "per annum," insert "for the years specified in the act approved April 1, 1932, and as amended herein."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be reported.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the numerals "1933," to insert a comma and "and to extend the provisions of section 3 of such act, (1) so far as they relate to the extension of time for beginning construction of a drainage system upon the Uncompahgre reclamation project, to one year from and after January 1, 1933, and (2) so far as they relate to certain charges upon or for the Uncompahgre and Grand Valley reclamation projects in the State of Colorado due and payable for the year 1932, in like manner to all similar charges due and payable for the year 1933," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend the provisions of such act relating to certain charges coming due for 1931 and to one-half of certain charges due for 1932, in like manner to the remaining one-half of such charges coming due for 1932 and to all of similar charges to become due for 1933, and to extend the provisions of section 3 of such act, (1) so far as they relate to the extension of time for beginning construction of a drainage system upon the Uncompahgre reclamation project, to one year from and after January 1, 1933, and (2) so far as they relate to certain charges upon or for the Uncompahgre and Grand Valley reclamation projects in the State of Colorado due and payable for the year 1932, in like manner to all similar charges due and payable for the year 1933: Provided, That the deferred charges shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum for the years specified in the act approved April 1, 1932, and as amended herein, which interest shall be paid at the same time the principal deferred herein is paid.

SEC. 2. That the last line of section 10 of said act is amended by substituting "1936" for "1934."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado extends the provisions of the bill to one project only, but grants no additional rights beyond those granted to others.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It puts the two Colorado projects on a parity with the other projects.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINING CLAIMS IN UNITED STATES AND ALASKA

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move that Calendar 1109 be substituted for the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair suggest, if it is not too much trouble, that the better plan would be to amend the House measure to the form of the Senate measure. That would make it more certain of passage.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I move to amend the House joint resolution by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the text of Senate bill 5137 as reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Idaho moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the year beginning at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1932, and ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1933: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1932: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1933, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 5137, providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, is indefinitely postponed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, OMAHA, NEBR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5370) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 7, after the word "by," to insert "an"; at the beginning of line 8, to insert "heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 20, 1931, and June 9, 1932"; and in line 9, after the word "hereby," to insert the word "further," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 20, 1931, and June 9, 1932, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from June 10, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAYMOND AMBROSE NICHOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3405) for the relief of Raymond Ambrose Nichols, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged seamen of the United States Navy, Richmond Ambrose Nichols shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a cook, second class, United States Navy, on June 22, 1922: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have read the bill and the report of the committee submitted by the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL]. It seems that the proposed beneficiary of the bill was a deserter, and the case is not one of desertion during the Civil War but is a quite recent case. It seems to me that the conditions do not justify the relief which this bill will give him. The passage of the bill will mean, of course, that he will soon be put upon the pension list or at least will be eligible to a pension when pensions shall be granted.

Mr. MCGILL. Mr. President, this man enlisted in the Navy in 1917 and served until 1919. He served during the period of actual hostilities during the World War and was honorably discharged at the end of his service in 1919. He reenlisted about one year following his honorable discharge and served for a period of two years and then was absent for a short time. He surrendered himself and was given an undesirable discharge. By virtue of his honorable service not only during the last enlistment up to the time when he absented himself but by virtue of his service during the period of actual hostilities during the World War, the committee unanimously recommended that he be regarded as having been honorably discharged. It seems to me it is a meritorious case.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether or not the petitioner actually received an honorable discharge for service during the period of the World War?

Mr. MCGILL. He was honorably discharged following his service during the World War.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I say to the Senator from Utah——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. MCGILL. I yield the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that there is a policy rule in the Naval Affairs Committee, and I understand there is a similar policy in the Military Affairs Committee, to the effect that under certain circumstances and for certain purposes a dishonorable discharge will be lifted. First of all, no dishonorable discharge can be removed from any enlisted man's record. It is a court record, and these relief bills do not seek to remove the record of dishonorable discharge of enlisted men. They seek to permit enlisted men who are also war veterans, notwithstanding a dishonorable-discharge record, to have the benefit of the rights and privileges granted to honorably discharged veterans of various wars. Relief measures of this character, of which this is one, seek to give to a dishonorably discharged soldier or sailor the benefit of the rights and privileges of general legislation extending benefits to veterans of all wars.

As a matter of fact, if a veteran has an honorable discharge for war service, even though he is dishonorably discharged because of acts committed in a subsequent enlistment, he has practically all the benefits that are bestowed upon veterans of the various wars. There is one right, however, he does not have, and that is the right to enter the soldiers' home. One who has a dishonorable discharge of any character at any time can not enter a soldiers' home.

The purpose of these relief measures is to grant to those who have honorable discharges for war services all rights that any other war veteran would enjoy if they had never reenlisted, the theory behind our action being that if a man who has gone through the war and had a good record, 10 years afterwards reenlists and then gets drunk or commits some other offense and is dismissed, he should not be treated differently from the man who went through the war and never subsequently reenlisted, got drunk, or committed a misdemeanor that was not of a grave character.

The case now before us, may I say to the Senator, comes within that rule which seems to be accepted in both the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, namely, where there is established an honorable war record and an honorable discharge following the war, and where later there is a record of dishonorable discharge for a minor offense, nevertheless the rights, privileges, and benefits of veterans' legislation shall not be denied such soldier or sailor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMOTHY J. LONG

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3008) granting an honorable discharge to Timothy J. Long, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, Timothy J. Long shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 11th day of August, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Timothy J. Long."

WAYNE BERT WATKINS

The bill (S. 4382) for the relief of Wayne Bert Watkins was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I add to what I said a moment ago, that in the case of these relief bills very great care is exercised by the committee not to depart from the rule I have mentioned. There are hundreds of such relief bills pending before the committee which are without merit; and, unless the facts come within the rule I have defined, they are not reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the case of the bill the title of which has just been read, I notice the Secretary of the Navy recommends against it, and under those circumstances I will ask that it go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wish to approve everything the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has said; and this immediate case falls within the rule we have established after thorough consideration, that where a man who has served his country faithfully and loyally and has been honorably discharged, thereafter voluntarily reenters the service, and, because of some more or less trifling indiscretion under the strict military rules, has been dishonorably discharged, we have considered that it would be just and in the public interest to pass a bill of this character, notwithstanding some clerk in the Navy Department has written a letter to the contrary. I hope that the Senator will withdraw his objection and that this bill may be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from California would make an exception to the rule which has been announced, of course, we would like to know what it is.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will state the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want to be discourteous, but it seems to me that this bill ought to go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment longer?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It appears, first, that this man falls within the rule explained by the Senator from Massachusetts. Further, it appears that in November, 1915, he enlisted in the Navy and served four years and was honorably discharged in November, 1919. This service was rendered during the period of actual hostilities during the World War.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me in my time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the report of the Secretary is wrong, I think a different conclusion might be reached, but the report states:

His record shows the following offenses:
Absent over liberty—

And so forth.

He was honorably discharged from the Navy on November 18, 1919.

He reenlisted in 1920. On October 6, 1921, Watkins again absented himself; was tried by general court-martial, found guilty, and was ordered confined for a period of six months and to be dishonorably discharged from the Navy.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The sentence was remitted, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. On January 19, 1921, the Navy Department approved the proceedings, but remitted that portion of his sentence which involved confinement.

This man's offenses were committed while the United States was in either an actual or a technical state of war.

Mr. McKELLAR. And, furthermore, he was absent during the time of that actual or technical state of war for 63 days. A soldier who is absent for 63 days has not a very good record.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Well, he fought for his country, and I want to give him some relief right here and now, but if the Senator objects, of course, I can not help it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from California and of the Senator from Massachusetts to the form of proviso which is used on this bill, being Senate Bill No. 4382. That proviso reads:

Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

That language comes down to us from the Civil War. No bounties were paid for enlistment in the World War or in the Spanish-American War. The Committee on Military Affairs at a recent meeting decided that we ought to cease to use that inappropriate language and use something that applies to the actual facts of the Spanish-American War and the World War laws.

If Senators will look at Calendar No. 1241, being Senate bill 4590, they will find a typical case of the wording of the new proviso. That wording is:

That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

I think that language safeguards the interests of the United States much better than does the use of the old Civil War language referring to "bounties." Therefore I want to suggest very respectfully to the various committees that have charge of the bills of this character that they should give thought to the adoption of the new form.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a very helpful and very proper one, and I hope the committee in the future in reporting such bills will adopt the new proviso. I assume the Senator from Pennsylvania agrees that the proviso now used, though antiquated, protects the Government satisfactorily.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, I withdraw my objection to the consideration of Senate bill 4382 and suggest that it be amended by substituting the proviso which has been adopted with reference to House bill 2599 and Senate bills 2582 and 4085.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to Senate bill 4382 and considering it at this time?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 8, after the numerals "1921" it is proposed to strike out "Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage" and insert in lieu thereof "Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, Wayne Bert Watkins shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as seaman, second class, United States Navy, on February 7, 1921: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BACHELOR'S DEGREES FOR NAVAL ACADEMY GRADUATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5397) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy may, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon all graduates of the Naval Academy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in regard to that bill I should like to ask the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] what action is being taken to reduce the number of midshipmen at Annapolis in accordance with the actual needs of the Navy? I understand that half the graduating class each year is refused commissions and turned out into civil life, and we know that each year half the graduating class can not be commissioned. I have serious doubt whether it is good policy to continue to maintain classes so large, when we know that the graduates can not be absorbed into the Navy on their graduation.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Last year we passed a special act commissioning graduates of the Naval Academy as naval officers although they were not needed by the Navy. That was done so as not to throw them out upon the cold world. This year we have not passed such an act, and there will be 200 of this year's graduating class of midshipmen who can not be commissioned in the Navy.

Mr. REED. I think that is unfair to them and it is an extravagance on the part of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 964) for the relief of Howard Emmett Tallmadge was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HENRY DIXON LINEBARGER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2599) for the relief of Henry Dixon Linebarger, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Henry Dixon Linebarger, who served as seaman, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on January 22, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to amend the proviso to the form of the proviso used on Order of Business 1241, S. 4590.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the proviso beginning on page 1, line 8, and insert:

That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LEO JAMES M'COY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2582) for the relief of Leo James McCoy, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Leo James McCoy shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 10th day of August, 1924: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I move that the same proviso be attached to that bill that was moved by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a moment ago. That bill clearly comes within the rule of the Naval Affairs Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to strike out the proviso beginning on line 8 and to insert:

Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask what was done with House bill 964?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill went over on objection of the Senator from Utah. Without objection, the amendment will be made as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And the same action should be taken on the next bill, Order of Business 1165, S. 4085.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOMINICK EDWARD MAGGIO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4085) for the relief of Dominick Edward Maggio, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Dominick Edward Maggio shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 24th day of September, 1924: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the same amendment should be attached to this bill. The proviso should be amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to strike out the proviso beginning on line 8 and to insert:

That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALVA D. M'GUIRE, JR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3972) for the relief of Alva D. McGuire, jr., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$91.75" and insert "$31.50," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alva D. McGuire, jr., formerly a seaman, first class, United States Navy, the sum of $31.50, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for personal property destroyed in 1927 by a fire at Camp Lewis, Wash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4144) for the relief of W. P. Fuller & Co. was announced as next in order, and was read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire as to the wisdom of this proposal. I am not so sure but that it would break down the rules of evidence if we were to assume that all sorts of hearsay evidence will be admitted. There may be precedent for this; and I was about to ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is far more familiar with such matters than I am, if there is precedent for it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had the same idea that must have occurred to the Senator from Utah. I can find no justification whatever for introducing in evidence documents of the character suggested in the amendment to the bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the time of the collision which in a sense is the basis of the claim is remote; and I perceive no reason why, as a matter of law or as to the competency of evidence, the evidence suggested could not be made admissible or competent if it be proved to be genuine. Of course, the trial court sitting would not admit any fugitive paper, or some document not supporting or disproving a claim, unless the court found that it was a legitimate, genuine document, perhaps contemporaneous with the fact referred to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be obliged to object to the consideration of this bill unless the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. When will we have another calendar day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

CHICAGO, NORTH SHORE & MILWAUKEE RAILROAD CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 254) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad Co. for reimbursement for materials furnished and labor supplied in repairing Chicago & Eastern Illinois gondola car No. 93962 that was accidentally damaged on July 24, 1928, while spotted on Government tracks at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and to allow not exceeding $120.39 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $120.39, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I make bold to ask who introduced the measure, and what committee reports it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] and reported by him from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LEWIS. I have no knowledge of the details of the matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $560, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the claim.

C. N. HILDRETH, JR.

The bill (S. 4844) for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr., was considered by the Senate, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of C. N. Hildreth, jr., former collector of customs for collection district numbered 18, with the sum of $89.10, representing the amount of a payment made to the A. A. A. Garage of Miami, Fla., on voucher 851 in his August, 1928, accounts, and heretofore disallowed by the Comptroller General, such payment covering repairs to a Ford car damaged by a truck which had been commandeered by a customs officer in an effort to apprehend a violator of the customs laws, and such payment is hereby validated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if that was recommended by the Comptroller.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes, Mr. President. I will state that the bill has a favorable recommendation of the Treasury Department and the Comptroller General.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LESLIE JENSEN

Dak., for payments aggregating $66.50 made to Gerald E. Evans, a temporary employee in the Custodial Service, Treasury Department, at Fargo, N. Dak., and disallowed on certificate No. G–1781–T, dated October 3, 1931, for the reason that the appointment was not approved by the Secretary of the Treasury until June 4, 1930, which was subsequent to the date for which payment was made.

BOOTH FISHERIES CO.

The bill (S. 5413) for the relief of the Booth Fisheries Co. was considered by the Senate, and was read, as follows:

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1011) for the relief of William E. B. Grant was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want it to go over or to have it indefinitely postponed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MARION F. BLACKWELL

The bill (H. R. 9714) for the relief of Marion F. Blackwell was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, on certification by the Secretary of the Interior, be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Marion F. Blackwell, of Laurel, Miss., such sum, not to exceed $1,000, as may be found by the Secretary of the Interior to be the fair and reasonable value of all improvements placed by said Blackwell upon the southeast quarter southwest quarter section 27, township 2 south, range 6 west, St. Stephens meridian, Mississippi, the appropriation of which is hereby authorized, for which land he was allowed to make homestead entry No. 05823, Jackson series, on October 1, 1912, and on September 20, 1916, a patent was issued to him, but on February 20, 1917, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi decreed that the titled and rightful claim to the land was vested prior to the patent to Blackwell in the Lampton Realty Co., thus defeating Blackwell's claim. It is further provided that he may have the option at any time within three years in lieu of payment to him of moneys hereinbefore provided of making entry of other unappropriated public lands to the amount of 160 acres under the general homestead law or 320 acres under the enlarged homestead law or 640 acres under the stock-raising homestead law anywhere in the United States where there are public lands subject to such entry and receiving United States patent for such land without payment to the United States of any fees, commissions, or other moneys and without showing of compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws in connection therewith, the patent, however, to contain a reservation of the mineral to the United States if necessary as in other entries under the same law.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN TERRITORY, MINN.

The bill (H. R. 12329) to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian territory in the State of Minnesota was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

An act to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian territory in the State of Minnesota

ALBERT LAWRENCE SLINEY

The bill (S. 2583) for the relief of Albert Lawrence Sliney was considered by the Senate and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Albert Lawrence Sliney shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 19th day of June, 1922: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the same amendment as that offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a while ago in lieu of the proviso contained in this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That should be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee offers the following amendment:

In lieu of the proviso beginning on line 8 insert: That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether this case falls within the rule that he announced?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am sure it does. I want to say to the Senator that I have tried to be most conscientious about these cases, being on the subcommittee, and I have invariably refused to indorse them. I think I have pending alone before that committee some 25 relief bills, and we have reported only 4 as being meritorious.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is a case of being absent without leave and also of using intoxicating liquors, and the Navy Department recommends against it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; but all that happened after honorable discharge from the war. Should a man who happens to have reenlisted after the war be treated any differently from a man who gets drunk who did not reenlist, so far as these rights are concerned?

Mr. McKELLAR. With the proviso in it, I shall not object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PATENTS TO SCHOOL SECTIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4674) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to school sections 16 and 36, granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, by the act approved January 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1026), and by any other act of Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "Interior," to insert "upon the application by a State"; in line 4, after the words "issued to," to strike out "sections 16 and 36" and insert "the numbered school sections in place"; in line 5, after the word "granted," to insert "for the support of common schools"; in line 8, after the word "surveyed," to insert "or may hereafter be surveyed"; at the top of page 2 to insert "or may hereafter vest"; and on page 2, line 8, after the word "date," to strike out "of the approval by the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the survey of the same or the date of the admission of the State into the Union, if the survey was approved prior thereto" and insert "when the State's title attaches," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall upon the application by a State cause patents to be issued to the numbered school sections in place, granted for the support of common schools by the act approved February 22, 1889, by the act approved January 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1026), and by any other act of Congress, that have been surveyed, or may hereafter be surveyed, and to which title has vested or may hereafter vest in the grantee States, and which have not been reconveyed to the United States or exchanged with the United States for other lands. Such patents shall show the date when title vested in the State and the extent to which the lands are subject to prior conditions, limitations, easements, or rights, if any. In all inquiries as to the character of the land for which patent is sought the fact shall be determined as of the date when the State's title attaches.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to the numbered school sections in place, granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, by the act approved January 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1026), and by any other act of Congress."

RIO GRANDE BRIDGE, RIO GRANDE, TEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill S. 5445, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "by the," to strike out "Riogrande-Camargo" and insert "Rio Grande City-Camargo," and in line 7, after the word "near," to strike out "Rio Grande, Tex., are hereby" and insert "Rio Grande City, Tex., heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved January 31, 1931, are hereby further," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by an act of Congress approved February 15, 1929, to be built by the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved January 31, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from February 15, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex."

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY AND ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing an appropriation for participation by the United States in an international monetary and economic conference to be held in 1933.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if the language of this joint resolution is sufficiently broad to include the expenses of a conference which might be called by the incoming President of the United States, pursuant to the Democratic platform declarations, to be held in Washington?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my recollection is that it simply provides for the authorization of $150,000 to defray the expenses of an economic conference hereafter to be called.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, has not an appropriation of $150,000 already been made for this purpose?

Mr. BORAH. No; it has not been.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was before our committee in some form.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it was before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it has been brought up.

Mr. BORAH. Some member of the committee asked that this measure be reported out and the authorization made so that they could take care of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Idaho that at the last session of Congress I offered a resolution asking for an appropriation of $50,000, as I recall, for an economic conference that was to be called in Great Britain, to which we had been invited, and the invitation to which President Hoover accepted. My recollection is that that measure became a law. I am in hearty sympathy with this joint resolution if it will be comprehensive enough to permit the payment of the expenses of a conference which might be called by Mr. Roosevelt to be held in Washington, or elsewhere in the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think it is sufficiently broad to authorize the payment of the expenses of participation by the United States in an international monetary and economic conference to be held in 1933, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including traveling expenses, personal services in the District of Columbia, and so forth. It would seem to me to be quite sufficiently broad.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for the expenses of participation by the United States in an international monetary and economic conference to be held in 1933, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including traveling expenses; personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without reference to the classification act of 1923, as amended; stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; purchase of necessary books and documents; printing and binding; official cards, entertainment, hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000.

NELLIE E. TREUTHART

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2469) for the relief of Nellie E. Treuthart, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$1,516 in reimbursement" and to insert in lieu thereof "$500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nellie E. Treuthart, registered nurse, United States Navy, the sum of $500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for the loss by earthquake and fire of personal property in Yokohama, Japan, on September 1, 1923, while she was serving at the United States naval hospital, Yokohama, Japan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF MARY AGNES RODEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 327) to reimburse the estate of Mary Agnes Roden, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,515.48," and to insert in lieu thereof "$5,000," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Sophie T. Walsh, administratrix of the estate of her deceased sister, Mary Agnes Roden, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injuries received by said Mary Agnes Roden on December 11, 1926, when a United States mail truck collided with her at Lexington Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, New York City.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK ANDERSON

The bill (S. 3676) for the relief of Frank Anderson was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, inasmuch as the department has recommended against this measure, I think it ought to go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN PEARCE CANN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2203) for the relief of John Pearce Cann, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to settle and certify for payment to John Pearce Cann, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $664.30 as in full for services rendered as a de facto United States commissioner at Wilmington, Del., for period from November 22, 1927, to February 15, 1929.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELSIE SEGAR

The bill (S. 4303) for the relief of Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorenson and of Holger E. Sorenson, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire why this should not be paid by the Prohibition Unit instead of by the Government. We have made a large appropriation for the Prohibition Unit. Apparently some of their employees, in the execution, doubtless, or what they conceive to be their duty, caused a fire which resulted in damage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suppose there is no law authorizing us to pay for the damage, I may say to my colleague, and the only way in which it can be taken care of is through special act of Congress. As to the merits of the bill, I have not made an examination into the matter.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF RICHMOND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 257) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Baltimore branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is recommended by Mr. McCarl.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Baltimore branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, as the bona fide owner of check No. 10435, dated May 17, 1927, issued by William H. Holmes, disbursing clerk United States Veterans' Bureau, for $643, to the order of Sara Rawlings in payment of adjusted compensation certificate No. 2575814, which was erroneously issued to Benson Rawlings in the sum of $643, based on an erroneous report of the War Department to the United States Veterans' Bureau of the military service of said Benson Rawlings, and to allow not to exceed $643 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $643, or so much thereof as may be necessary for payment of said claim.

AGNES M. ANGLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1067) for the relief of Agnes M. Angle.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the report shows this to be a worthy case, and it seems to me that there is no reason why the bill should not be passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Agnes M. Angle, a former employee of the United States Veterans' Bureau at Wichita, Kans.

AVERY G. CONSTANT

The Senate poceeded to consider the bill (S. 4930) for the relief of Avery G. Constant, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to cancel the charge, in the amount of $24.38, entered on the accounts of Avery G. Constant, former postmaster at Buhl, Idaho, by reason of his deposit of funds of the United States in the First National Bank of Buhl, Idaho, and the subsequent failure of such bank.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Avery G. Constant, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $129, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for a refund of payments made by him on account of any such charge.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

The bill (S. 3731) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California," approved May 18, 1928, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs reports against this. Should we not have some explanation before passing the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs expressed a desire to confer with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I ask, under those circumstances, that the bill go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADDIE I. TRYON AND LORIN H. TRYON

The bill (S. 5286) for the relief of Addie I. Tryon and Lorin H. Tryon was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this measure.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I introduced this bill; it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and, as we see, was reported without amendment. A like bill was introduced in the House of Representatives. The Committee on Claims of that body considered it, and reported it favorably.

The bill authorizes the heirs of E. H. Tryon to sue the United States in the district court of California upon a claim of twenty-three thousand and odd dollars paid by said heirs as excess profits collected by the Government upon the transactions of their ancestor in 1918.

The controversy relates to the collection of excess profits arising from dealings in wool. The circumstances are complicated by Government regulations for handling the wool crop of 1918, and by decisions of the various courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, many of which decisions appear to be in conflict. The whole nature of the controversy is such that it can not properly be considered and determined except by a court of justice, and the bill seeks to give the proponents of the bill, the parties in question, permission to sue, and the court jurisdiction to hear.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why can not the suit be brought in the Court of Claims, which has been established for just such a purpose?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is a matter of indifference to me in what court they sue.

Mr. McKELLAR. Make it the Court of Claims and I will have no objection.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The witnesses in the case and the facts involved were far removed, away out yonder in California, and it was thought by the House committee, and apparently by the Committee of the Senate, that the district court of the northern district, ninth circuit, was the appropriate tribunal to hear and determine the case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry in my time?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator mentioned the question of excess profits. It seems to me this is an attempt to collect taxes which have been paid. Why did they not go to the instrumentalities established by the Government—and they have been numerous—for the adjudication of settlements of those claims for taxes?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. An answer to that question would involve the reading of this long report. If anybody objects, let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to by the Senator from Utah, and will be passed over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I notice in the report that similar taxpayers who were more diligent brought suit against the Government back in 1926, and their claims even were thrown out because of their long delay. It would be unfair, it seems to me, to pay these claims now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been objected to, and will go over.

INLAND WATERWAY, NORFOLK TO BEAUFORT INLET

The bill (H. R. 6184) for the improvement of the inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE W. EDGERLY

The bill (S. 3673) for the relief of George W. Edgerly was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the bill. I have tried to follow this through for a great number of years. The committee of the House made a favorable report. The report from the War Department was very favorable. It is one of the most distressing cases that have ever come to my attention. I could occupy the floor of the Senate here for hours, and I believe a recital of the facts would bring tears to the eyes of the Senator from Utah. The bill would put into the hands of the board the question of a reinvestigation of the case.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no report on the bill before me.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a very strong report.

Mr. SMOOT. There is none on my desk. I will object until I get the report.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry the Senator did not see the report. There is quite a long report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Did I understand the Senator from Utah to object?

Mr. SMOOT. I object until I see the report.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope it will be passed over temporarily, because I do not want the Senator to get in a frame of mind to object to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Just as soon as I have the report I will look it over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, I have read the report on the bill (S. 3673) for the relief of George W. Edgerly, and I withdraw my objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, to strike out the word "major" and insert the word "captain," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon George W. Edgerly, late captain of Infantry and temporary major, Regular Army, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his resignation, September 18, 1919, he was incapacitated for active service and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said George W. Edgerly a captain of Infantry and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said George W. Edgerly shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 238) relating to leave with pay for employees of the Government Printing Office was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let that go over, so that we may have a chance to examine it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection until I can say just a word?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. DICKINSON. When we passed the economy act we deprived the Federal employees of their leaves of absence.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand it, the employees of the Government Printing Office were operating under a system by which there was a different method of allowing annual leave to the employees in that office. They were entitled to leave for a year already past when the economy act went into effect, and therefore they feel that that is something to which they are justly entitled.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I rather took that view when we had the matter before the Economy Committee, and I suppose that is the purpose of the Senator's bill?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the purpose of the bill. In other words, it is merely to compensate these people for the earned leave they had accumulated up to the time the economy bill went into effect. We wanted to take some leave away from them, but we did not want to make the law retroactive, so as to take away from them leave they had already earned and which they had not taken, and for which we could not pay them under the terms of the act.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the economy act was to apply to all other employees of the Government in the future?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. As to these particular employees, and perhaps those in one other class, though I have forgotten whether there was one or two classes, it did apply.

Mr. DICKINSON. This is the only class I know of to which it does apply. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and the preamble was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas under authority of existing law it is the practice of the Government Printing Office in granting annual leave with pay to grant such leave only after the employee has earned during the fiscal year the full 30 days' leave; and

Whereas the practice in other Government departments has been to grant leave as earned at the rate of two and one-half days per month; and

Whereas the employees of the Government Printing Office, in accordance with section 103 of Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, will be deprived not only of leave earned during the fiscal year 1932 but also of leave earned during the fiscal year 1933, and the annual leave with pay accumulated during the fiscal year 1934 will not be available until after June 30, 1934; and

Whereas under the provisions of existing law employees of the Government Printing Office are not now and never have been entitled to sick leave with pay; and

Whereas the effect of such section 103 of such legislative appropriation act of 1933 discriminates against employees of the Government Printing Office: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 110 of Title I of Part II of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1932, all moneys returned to the Treasury on account of furlough and pay reduction from the wages and salaries of employees of the Government Printing Office under said act are hereby reappropriated as they become available for use by the Public Printer in payment of leaves of absence earned by said employees during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, such payments to be in lieu of time off on account of said earned leaves of absence and in full compensation therefor, and all payments so made shall be in alphabetical order beginning with employees of the lowest grade and those who may die or be separated from the rolls during the fiscal year 1933, but shall not include payments for any leaves of absence earned during the fiscal year 1933.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the hour of 2 o'clock being about to arrive, I inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether he intends to ask unanimous consent that we go through with the calendar?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I regret that I can not do it to-day. I am anxious to get the Agricultural Department appropriation bill up, and several Members left the Chamber upon the theory that we would discontinue the call of the calendar at 2 o'clock. I shall ask for a morning hour either to-morrow or the next day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am particularly interested because we have almost reached the point on the calendar where there are some bills relating to the Canal Zone which have been pending a long time. I hope we may be able to get consideration of those bills at an early day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oregon, when he next asks unanimous consent for consideration of the calendar, if he will begin where we have left off to-day? In that way we will facilitate the very object to which the Senator from Montana has reference.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, that would be my purpose. I suggest this—and I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] for the moment. If we conclude consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill this afternoon, and if it is agreeable to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who wants to follow with another appropriation bill, I shall ask that we adjourn to-night and have a morning hour to-morrow, and continue the call of the calendar from the place where we leave off this afternoon.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it has been my hope that we might pass both appropriation bills to-day; but if we do not, I am satisfied to have an adjournment to-night and a morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. McNARY. That being agreeable to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who will have charge of the next appropriation bill, I shall ask an adjournment this evening in order that we may have a morning hour to-morrow.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, that the bill be read for amendments only, and that committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will report the first amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Office of Information—printing and binding," on page 7, line 21, after sec. 111," to strike out "title 7, secs 362, 363, 365, 368, 377–379), March 16," and insert "212–220, 222, 241, 244, 257), and in pursuance of the," so as to make the paragraph read:

C., and elsewhere, $850,000, including the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 111, 212–220, 222, 241, 244, 257), and in pursuance of the Joint Resolution No. 13, approved March 30, 1906 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 214, 224), and also including not to exceed $250,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, but not including work done at the field printing plants of the Weather Bureau and the Forest Service authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, in accordance with the act approved March 1, 1919 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 111, 220).

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 34, line 15, before the word "That," to strike out "further," so as to read:

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Oregon any further committee amendments?

Mr. McNARY. No; I have not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer the following amendment: On page 53, line 19, strike out the words "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the erection of buildings" and insert in lieu thereof "Provided, That not more than $10,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for the erection of buildings."

I think there can be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 66, line 2, insert the following:

Provided, That hereafter in the administration of the Federal highway act, and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the first paragraph of section 9 of the act of November 9, 1921, shall not apply to publicly owned toll bridges or approaches thereto, constructed and operated by the highway department of any State.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is offered to correct a situation which has grown out of the prohibition of the use of Federal funds for highway construction within 6 miles of any toll bridge. I think that is perfectly proper with reference to any privately owned toll bridge.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, we had this matter up last year?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator wants to renew it again?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my purpose.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on page 73, there is a committee amendment, under "Market inspection of farm products," to strike out "raw, dried, or canned" and insert "raw or dried." I understand the amendment has been agreed to. I was necessarily absent from the Chamber when it was reached. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as passed by the House, the paragraph in which this amendment is found provided for certifying "to shippers and other interested parties the class, quality, and/or condition of cotton, tobacco, fruits, and vegetables, whether raw, dried, or canned." The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry struck out the words "raw, dried, or canned" and inserted in lieu thereof the words "raw or dried." The effect of the amendment was to strike out the word "canned."

This is a controversy of some importance. From an examination of the hearings I find that the Department of Agriculture recommended the inclusion of the word "canned." The reason for it is set forth in a message submitted to the chairman of the committee appearing on page 55 of the hearings on the pending bill. The Wholesale Grocers' Association suggested that the word "canned" be stricken out. I have received a telegram from the representatives of the Canners' Association urging that the word "canned" be retained. May I read from the report of the chief of the bureau in a letter dated January 11, 1933, addressed to the chairman of the committee, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
January 11, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES L. McNARY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: In response to the telephone inquiry of Mr. Rae as to the effect of the omission of the words "or canned" from the item "Market inspection, Bureau of Agricultural Economics," in the appropriation bill for this department, this bureau would regard such a change as unfortunate and undesirable. This language was added in the bill for the fiscal year 1932, and an increase of $30,000 provided to expand the extensive voluntary inspection and certification service conducted by this bureau to include canned fruits and vegetables. The service was started in a small way and is steadily growing. The work is done only upon request and a fee is charged applicants for the service. We believe the service has resulted in improved quality in the areas where it has been most extensively used.

Many canners have used the service to assure themselves that their products could lawfully move in interstate commerce without the substandard label prescribed under the McNary-Mapes amendment to the food and drugs act.

The Veterans' Administration, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of Justice, and the General Supply Committee are using the service as a basis for the awarding of contracts and the acceptance of deliveries. Through this service satisfactory determination is made of the quality of canned goods at the point of production so that delivery on Government purchases can, at the option of the purchasing agency, be made f. o. b. factory, which results in lower prices and a saving in freight as the goods are distributed on Government bills of lading.

The owners of canned goods hypothecated to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are being required to furnish certificates of grade issued under this service when such goods are not in warehouses licensed under the United States warehouse act.

Certain large terminal warehouses and banks in eastern centers now use the service exclusively to determine collateral values of canned fruits and vegetables.

In cases of unjust rejection of canned vegetables tendered on private contracts the inspection certificate has been procured and acceptance obtained at invoice price exactly as occurs so frequently in the fresh fruit and vegetable trade.

Shortly after the bureau had been authorized to inspect canned fruits and vegetables and issue certificates of grade, some canners expressed a desire to show the official grade designation on the labels on individual cans. This would give consumers the benefit of buying on the basis of Government grades.

A few lots have recently appeared in the trade labeled "United States Grade A." The department does not permit the labeling of cans as a United States Grade A, B, or C, as the case may be, unless the contents of cans so labeled have been processed and packed under the continuous inspection of a representative of this bureau. We believe it should be possible for consumers to purchase canned fruits and vegetables according to known specifications of quality, and that informative labeling on the basis of uniform standards is desirable. Some in the canning trade do not accept that view; others do. That feature of the service is comparable with the work we do on butter, eggs, and meats under this same item in the bill. The use of the service is entirely optional. We think it should be permitted to demonstrate its usefulness to those who want to use it and pay for it rather than to destroy it now, as would be the case if the words referred to were stricken out.

Very sincerely yours,

NILS A. OLSEN, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will reject the committee amendment and leave in the bill the word "canned" so as to permit the small canners to have the benefit of the certificates which are authorized under the provisions of the law. The service is paid for by the canners. It does not impose, as I understand it, any additional cost on the Government, but it does give the canners the advantage, when they ship their commodities in interstate commerce, of having the assurance that they will not be rejected by the buyers on the ground that the commodity does not come up to the standard required.

I repeat the statement that I hope the Senate will reject the committee amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am in favor of rejecting the committee amendment by the Senate. The Pennsylvania Canners Association has written me a lengthy letter on the subject that has been covered more or less by the statement of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I would like to have the letter made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 1, 1933.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DAVIS: There is now before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee H. R. 13872, which would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify the class, quality, or condition of certain agricultural products, including vegetables and fruits whether raw, dried, or canned. This service has been given the producers of raw vegetables and fruits for a number of years, and for at least two years has included canned vegetables and fruits. This particular service is being opposed. Similar objection was set up by distributors and certain producers of raw vegetables and fruits at the time the grading of these products was inaugurated.

H. R. 13872 would continue the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine upon request the definite grade (quality) of any canned foods. Many canners are using this service for the following very good reasons:

1. Official determination of grade before the goods are shipped into interstate commerce overcomes the probability of seizure for misbranding under the requirements of the McNary-Mapes amendment in case the goods grade substandard.

2. The certificate of quality based on official grade is of great advantage to both the buyer and seller when selling spot goods and protects both the buyer and seller (the canner) by assuring the canner the goods he is shipping against future sales are of the quality specified on the sales ticket.

3. Official grading is a very definite guide to the canner in the proper labeling of his product and enables him to place on his label plain statement of grades now authorized "Grade A—Fancy," "Grade B—Extra Standard," "Grade C—Standard." These grade specifications aid the consumer in selecting the quality of canned foods desired.

All of the advantages specified apply equally to the canners, wholesale distributors, and to the consumers. This service is being used and the demand for it is increasing. Consumer organizations who are familiar with the plan heartily support it and a number of inquiries from such consumer organizations have asked how soon canned foods will generally be available with such official grading information on the label.

The fees paid for inspection by the canners practically support this grading system. I understand an annual appropriation of $30,000 has been made for at least two years, and there has been a small surplus from this appropriation remaining at the end of the year. If on account of the pressure to reduce expense it is necessary this grading service be completely self-supporting, then increasing the cost for grading certificates 5 or 10 per cent should make the service self-supporting, but it is necessary the $30,000 annual appropriation be continued so as to give the proper authorities the necessary working funds pending collection of fees from canners.

Unfortunately, those using private house labels do not take kindly to any plan by which consumers may have definite knowledge of the quality contained in the can before making purchase.

Please do not confuse any of the above with the McNary-Mapes amendment to the pure food law, as that law applies only to the proper labeling of canned foods of substandard quality. The McNary-Mapes law makes no provision, that I know of, for proper labeling of the three grades above substandard, namely, fancy, extra standard, and standard.

Our association believes that H. R. 13872 is of the greatest possible value to the consumer, distributor, and canner.

Very truly yours,

PENNSYLVANIA CANNERS ASSOCIATION,
CHARLES G. SUMMERS, Jr., President.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is very important to the canners and consumers of Pennsylvania that the amendment be rejected. They do not want to lose the benefits of the bill. The canner, distributor, and consumer are protected and benefited by the inspection and grading applying to canned foods. I can not understand why there is any honest objection to it, except by those who believe the prestige of their brands will be reduced if the other canners have the benefit of this grading service. I am in hearty accord with the proposal of the Senator from Arkansas to reject the committee amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it was at my suggestion that the proposed amendment was made. I have no objection whatever to the market inspection of farm products as written and as we intended it to be administered. I have no objection to the way the department is administering the provision. But I desire to explain to the Senate what is actually happening.

We have two bureaus in the Department of Agriculture dealing with food, the one having to do with market inspection and the other with food and drugs. It has been the ideal of the department and of our country to have every article of food which is sold here above suspicion. It is a very serious invasion of the laws when a food product is misbranded, when the label does not convey the truth. The purpose of the market inspection of food products is a very worthy one. It is to make certain, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, that these articles will pass in interstate commerce without criticism; but this is what happens, if I may have the attention of the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator has my attention. I am listening devoutly.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, I hope the Senator will, and perhaps, even from me, he may gain some wisdom on this particular subject.

This is what happens: Having had this casual and occasional inspection the canner proceeds to place upon his label "U. S. Grade A (Fancy). These goods were packed under supervision of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and this grade officially certified." That is not the truth. The canners have no business to place upon the label such a statement. There is no continuous inspection of these canneries. The label is a falsehood on its face. If it is desired that the container carry a label such as this the canner must conform to the laws as well as the regulations of the Food and Drug Department.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator from New York ought to keep in mind all the provisions of the law. The law expressly provides—shall certify the shipper and any other interested party the class, quality, and condition.

"The class, quality, and condition." In my own time I shall take the floor to explain what the whole matter means.

Mr. COPELAND. That is all right. I agree with the Senator that as to the particular goods which have been examined the Government certifies as to their class, quality, and condition, but that is no excuse for the canner when he sends some other goods into the market placing upon the label "U. S. Grade A (Fancy). Packed under supervision of the U. S. Department of Agriculture," because that is not the fact.

Mr. SMITH. That refers to the class—class A or grade A.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am going to attempt to use more elementary language than I have apparently been able to do.

Cases of occasional shipments are provided for by the act. A home canner may have a product passed upon by the Government, and the Government says as to a particular shipment, "Yes; that is good"; but here is a canner who is engaged in putting out goods 365 days in the year. Such a canner is under continuous supervision of the Department of Food and Drugs, and is liable to fine if goods are sent out which are improperly labeled.

However, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina, does he think because a particular canning company has had one shipment subjected to market inspection, that thereafter all the other output of that cannery throughout the rest of the year should be allowed to use the label certifying that its goods are first class?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in reply I will say that one can hardly answer categorically a question like that. Under the terms of this bill the processing and the canning are under the supervision of an expert from the Department of Agriculture and therefore not only a can is inspected but all the cans that go out from a home cannery or a local cannery that has the privilege of using the Government's indorsement are inspected in the process of canning by Government representatives. We have appropriated for this purpose so that even the housewife and the local cannery may, through this process, furnish the people of this country with an abundance of canned goods. It is to the advantage of the home that excess vegetables, or vegetables grown for the purpose of canning, and fruits and even meats may be processed according to a formula that affords an opportunity of utilizing the excess production in such form as to be perfectly safe, wholesome, and edible.

I can understand why certain canneries which have established a good will may not desire that this shall be done, but it is a question of benefiting the American people from appropriations we have made over a period of years by perfecting a process that gives to every rural home in this country the privilege, the power, and the knowledge to process their own products for the benefit of those who are not similarly situated.

Mr. President, I maintain that to cut out the word "canned" would be to nullify practically everything that has been done by the Agricultural Department in developing this process, which is for the benefit of the public at large, and particularly the isolated farm and the little canning organization.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have been much interested in what the Senator has said. I do not think it applies particularly to the argument in question, but it, nevertheless, relates to a matter of great importance to the American people.

I want to read from the department itself regarding this matter. I have in my hand a letter written by Mr. Dunlap, Acting Secretary, under date of January 27, in which he says:

A number of canners have indicated a wish to use the letters "U. S." in connection with the grade statement and to bear the considerable additional expense incident to the necessary continuous inspection of plant and product. However, in only one case has this as yet actually been done, and in that instance for a limited number of cases of green lima beans packed near the close of the season. The service in this instance was regarded by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics as an experiment and demonstration. Under no circumstances—

The department says:

could this type of inspection be extended beyond the scope of experiment and demonstration with the small appropriation now available or in the bill as passed by the House.

I do not know how much those words mean to others, but they mean to me exactly what they say; that with the appropriation now available it would not be possible to have such continuous inspection as to justify upon the label any such mark as I have indicated.

Under no circumstances could this type of inspection be extended beyond the scope of experiment and demonstration with the small appropriation now available or in the bill as passed by the House. At most we could expect to do no more than to furnish continuous inspection to a few plants and products for stated and relatively short periods.

I am not using my own language; I am not using any argument of mine; I am telling you, Mr. President, what the department says about it—

At most we could expect to do no more than to furnish continuous inspection to a few plants and products for stated and relatively short periods.

Are we willing, having those inspections made for "stated and relatively short periods," to have any canning concern put upon its goods, which are sold throughout the year, a label stating, "These goods were packed under supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture and this grade officially certified"?

If anybody wants to have that kind of food, very well. If the American people are willing to be deceived and have placed upon the labels of articles of food which they have purchased an official label indicating that those goods have been inspected by the United States Department of Agriculture when it is not true at all, I have no more to say. If that is the desire of the people, if that is the desire of the Senate, or if that is the desire of any Member of the Senate, I am perfectly willing that that should be done, but otherwise, in so far as I have any power to express what I feel about the matter, I should protest against it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question in the Senator's time, but he knows as well as all others of us know that such a label can not be used unless the goods have been inspected by the United States Government representative, and, because there is a limited appropriation, there will necessarily be a limited quantity of goods that find a market in interstate commerce which have been indorsed by the Government. The Senator is proceeding on the assumption that if the department inspects one cooking or one preparation, that gives the canner a license for all the rest of his products. That is not correct; but all the goods that find their way into the market bearing the indorsement of the Government have actually had the indorsement of the Government.

If the appropriation was not sufficient, we ought to have provided for an inspection of all those who were ready to produce these articles to see if they could get the Government certificate, and we ought to have made appropriations sufficient to have met that provision, because there is not in all the work of the Department of Agriculture one fraught with as great good to the farm and to the people as this process.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I conferred with the head of the department and with the heads of both these bureaus, and I can not become very much excited over this, because I am assured by the department that they are not going to permit this thing to go on. Therefore, I shall not become very much excited over it. Nevertheless, I want the American people to know that they can get goods off the shelves of delicatessen and grocery stores labeled, "U. S. Grade A (Fancy). These goods were packed under supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture and this grade officially certified," and be misled into thinking that those goods have been certified by the Government, and certified as pure, when that is not true at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, under the law, is there a penalty for packing goods not in accordance with the classification?

Mr. COPELAND. Under the pure food and drugs act; yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. If a classification should be given to the canned goods the label of which the Senator has been quoting, and a month afterward by inspection a can is found to be under the class, would the producer be subject to punishment?

Mr. COPELAND. I think so.

Mr. PITTMAN. Would very much expense be involved in having a can analyzed every now and then, to see whether it was up to standard?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. There would be much expense?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think the Senator from New York should in this body attempt to create a suspicion in the minds of the American public that those who have printed that label have printed an untruth, and are using the guaranty of the Department of Agriculture to deceive. It has taken a long time to build up this process; it is just now coming into practical operation, and right in its infancy, as it is competing with great, established canneries, there is an effort to crucify by suspicion those who use the process, in spite of the fact that it has the indorsement of the Department of Agriculture.

I do not think the Senator from New York is justified in standing on this floor and indicting a canning process which is indorsed by the Department of Agriculture for the benefit of the farmers and the small cannery, in competition with the great, established canneries outside of the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

All of these small canneries and big ones, the housewife and the salesman, have all to subscribe to and observe the pure food and drugs act. Whether they have the indorsement of the United States Government or not, they dare not put anything on the market that is below the standard set under the pure food and drugs act. And now it is intimated that whoever used that label was using it to deceive, and that the contents of the containers bearing these labels were below the standard set by the pure food and drugs act. Not only does the Senator insinuate that they are using falsely the certificate from the Department of Agriculture, but intimates that they are absolutely violating the pure food and drugs act.

Mr. President, that is a pretty broad indictment of those who are attempting to use the market under the guaranty of the Federal Government.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it would be if that were what I had said.

Mr. SMITH. That is what the Senator insinuated.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not say that or insinuate it. I did not say that this label was placed on goods which are actually below the standard. They might be above the standard; they might be as pure as the driven snow. What I said, and I repeat it, was that no canner has a right to place upon the product which he puts out week after week and month after month the statement that "these goods were packed under supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture, and this grade officially certified," because that is not the truth.

I am in favor of establishing standards and placing in the Department of Agriculture the authority to enforce them, and I may say to my friend from South Carolina that he knows more about cotton than I will ever know, he knows more about economics than I will ever know, he knows more about farm relief than I will ever know, he knows more about finance than I will ever know, but it will be a long time before he knows as much about the labeling of goods as I know. I say that in all modesty to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. President, I am in favor of having every article sold in any store in this country or used in any home in this country, certified to as being pure and worthy of consumption in my family or in any family. But I am quite unwilling to have the casual examination which takes place during the season in a limited number of establishments, over a very short period in each establishment, used to justify the placing upon the label of the product, as packed and shipped week after week and month after month throughout the year, the statement that it was "packed under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture and this grade officially certified."

What would it mean if that were done? It would mean that in every canning establishment, every big canning establishment and every little one, there should be an inspector of the Department of Agriculture; that he should be there day in and day out, and if they run 24 hours he would have to be there 24 hours, to inspect all the cans of goods put out, in order that there might be placed upon the label "Packed under supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture, and this grade officially certified." That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. President, as I said, I can not grow as excited over this as I would if I did not have the assurance of the Department of Agriculture that this is not to be permitted, and I read again what I read before:

> At most we could expect to do no more than to furnish continuous inspection to a few plants and products for stated and relatively short periods.

Then the Secretary goes on:

> So much interest has been manifested in the demonstration of continuous inspection that it is apparent the funds now available and in prospect are inadequate to provide this type of service to all who may apply, and therefore it is the present purpose of the department to limit its service under this item for canned fruits and vegetables to the grading of submitted samples or samples drawn by its representative from commercial lots.

That being the intention of the department, I do not care what becomes of the amendment. If it will make anybody happy to take it out, I do not care whether it comes out or not; but I know that notice has been served on the canners from the department, and on the buying public, that this sort of label is not going to be used any more, and that if it is used somebody is going to get into trouble.

Mr. President, I would like to say one last word to the housewives of this country. When they go to the store and buy goods, I advise them to read the labels, and ask the salesman if the manufacturer is a reliable concern and if he has reason to believe that the inspections are actually being made. Then, if the housewife has any doubt about it, let her send a sample to the Department of Agriculture and find out the facts.

It is an outrageous thing to have foods or drugs mislabeled or misbranded. It is an outrageous invasion of the rights of the citizens. It is a raid upon the pocketbooks of the American people to be sold goods with a fancy label on them containing language indicating that the goods were inspected by the Department of Agriculture and then to find that the label bore a fraud upon its face.

Mr. President, I want the housewives of the United States to be protected, and I want the people of the United States to have pure food. I want the label of the Government to be attached only to those products which meet the standards of the department. That was the reason why I raised the issue in the committee, of which I am a member.

I may say to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that I do not care 2 cents now whether that amendment stays in or not. My purpose has been effected, and the department has given me the assurance that they will be watchful regarding the operation of this law and all other laws relating to the labeling of products which are to go into the homes of our people.

Therefore, Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, if it will make any of my colleagues happier to have the amendment voted down, I am satisfied to have that done; but I have stated the facts as they relate to this particular question, and I believe the American people will have some confidence that the statement is for their benefit.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, apropos of the pending amendment, I have a letter addressed to me as chairman of the committee from the Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Dunlap, which is in slight refutation of the argument made by the Senator from New York, and I ask unanimous consent to have it included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 27, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to the discussion on the labeling of canned fruits and vegetables before your committee and to Mr. Olsen's letter of January 11 to you on the same subject. In that letter it was stated that a few lots had recently appeared in the trade labeled "U. S. Grade A." The department, in its administration of the food and drugs act has not considered it wise to sanction the use of the letters "U. S." in connection with the grade designation on a label unless the contents of the can were processed and packed under the continuous inspection of a representative of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The department believes that it should be possible for consumers to purchase canned fruits and vegetables according to definite specifications of quality and that informative labeling on the basis of uniform standards is in the public interest. There can be no objection to the labeling of canned fruits and vegetables as "Grade A," "Grade B," or "Grade C" if the contents do in fact meet the requirements of the grade stated. The department has hoped that the canning industry and the distributing trade would adopt this method of indicating the quality of the product by a definite statement of grade. A great deal of interest has been manifested in this question of informative labeling, and some goods have appeared in the trade so labeled. Under this system of labeling, the services rendered by this department under the appropriation item in question would be limited to the inspection and grading of samples submitted by interested parties or to samples drawn at random from commercial lots and would not involve the placing of any inspector in a plant for the continuous inspection of the canning process.

A number of canners have indicated a wish to use the letters "U. S." in connection with the grade statement and to bear the considerable additional expense incident to the necessary continuous inspection of plant and product. However, in only one case has this, as yet, actually been done and, in that instance, for a limited number of cases of green Lima beans packed near the close of the season. The service in this instance was regarded by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics as an experiment and demonstration. Under no circumstances could this type of inspection be extended beyond the scope of experiment and demonstration with the small appropriation now available or in the bill as passed by the House. At most we could expect to do no more than to furnish continuous inspection to a few plants and products for stated and relatively short periods. So much interest has been manifested in the demonstration of continuous inspection that it is apparent the funds now available and in prospect are inadequate to provide this type of service to all who may apply, and therefore it is the present purpose of the department to limit its service under this item for canned fruits and vegetables to the grading of submitted samples or samples drawn by its representatives from commercial lots.

Sincerely yours,

R. W. DUNLAP, Acting Secretary.

Mr. SMITH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH. The question is upon the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Those who vote in the negative will vote in the right way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I submit an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina proposes to insert on page 67 a new paragraph, as follows:

That paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of Title 3 of the emergency relief construction act of 1932 is amended by striking out the date "July 1, 1933," where it appears in said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the date "January 1, 1934."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, this amendment is offered with the approval of the committee, and is made necessary because the relief act provided that "no amounts apportioned under this paragraph shall be advanced except for work performed before July 1, 1933." The Bureau of Public Roads is of the opinion that it is essential that the date be made January 1, 1934. The Bureau of the Budget has likewise recommended the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, is this in effect the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know about the amendment offered by that Senator. This is the amendment which the committee has directed me to propose.

Mr. ODDIE. Which committee?

Mr. BYRNES. The Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ODDIE. May I ask whether the Senator will withhold that, because, as chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I have sent the Bankhead amendment to the department for a report.

Mr. BYRNES. May I say to the Senator from Nevada that this amendment, which is the same as the amendment which was offered in the House of Representatives, has already been favorably reported by the department, and the Bureau of the Budget has likewise reported to the Congress recommending that the amendment be adopted. The department has already recommended its adoption.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this amendment will meet the emergency situation, and I hope it may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to insert on page 82, line 4, after the comma, the following words "and for the certification of products out of the infected areas to meet the requirements of State quarantines."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has an amendment to offer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which I have sent to the desk be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee proposes to insert, on page 87, after line 4, the following:

DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED COTTON TO THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved February 8, 1933, $4,100,000 to be immediately available, and in addition the unexpended balance of appropriations made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat and cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved July 5, 1932, is made immediately available for such purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this amendment would carry out a measure that was passed a few days ago, and which has been signed by the President. We are all familiar with it. It follows exactly the authorization bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask that an amendment I sent to the desk this morning, and which is now on the table, be acted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Nevada proposes to insert at the proper place the following:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be expended according to the provisions of such act as amended: The sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934; the sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935: Provided, That in apportioning the foregoing sums among the several States and the Territory of Hawaii for said fiscal years deductions shall be made as reimbursement to the United States of the $80,000,000 emergency advance funds apportioned to such States and the Territory of Hawaii and used in road work, such deductions to be made at the rate of $16,000,000 each fiscal year, in accordance with the item "Federal-aid highway system" of the act approved December 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 1031).

Mr. ODDIE obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. ODDIE. I should like to make a short statement on the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate the logic of the position of the Senator from Nevada. However, I want to make a point of order against the amendment, because I believe it proposes legislation on an appropriation bill. But if the Senator desires to make some observations, I will withhold the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withholds his point of order.

Mr. ODDIE. I desire to make a short statement, Mr. President. I believe that when the point of order is reached, it will be found that, since this amendment which I have suggested is in the form of a bill which passed the Senate on the 8th of June, during a session which was a part of this Congress, it will not be ruled out of order. But we will come to that later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to call to the attention of the Senator from Nevada the fact that the rule applies to a measure passed during the session, not during the Congress.

Mr. ODDIE. We will come to that later, but I will make a preliminary statement.

Mr. President, a year ago the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate held extensive hearings on this measure, then known as Senate bill 36, which passed the Senate on June 8, 1932, called the Oddie Federal-aid road bill. I have now offered that measure as an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill now before us. Many witnesses appeared before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, of which I have the honor to be chairman, in behalf of the legislation and not a single person testified in opposition. Representatives of the State highway departments presented exhaustive testimony as to the value of Federal participation with the States in road construction and the splendid results obtained.

They were supported by the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the American Federation of Labor, the American Automobile Association, the American Road Builders' Association, the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, the American Motorists' Association, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, and many others.

The first section of my amendment to the bill now before us provides an appropriation to continue the regular Federal-aid program through the fiscal years 1934 and 1935, carrying the same amount that was provided for in the authorizations for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933.

While this amendment apparently carries $125,000,000, the actual net amount is $109,000,000, since the amendment specifically provides for the annual deduction of $16,000,000, or one-fifth of the emergency advance funds of $80,000,000 made available to the States in December, 1930, with the condition that the sum so advanced should be deducted in five annual installments of $16,000,000 each from future allotments of Federal aid.

Furthermore, Mr. President, at the last session of Congress the emergency road legislation act was passed and the money advanced to the States under that act must be deducted from the regular Federal-aid appropriations to the States, as is the $80,000,000 appropriated the year before, except that they are to be deducted in 10 annual installments of 10 per cent each, commencing in 1938.

It will be recalled that the first emergency allotment of $80,000,000 was provided to aid in the unemployment situation and the success that this appropriation has achieved has been fine in every way. I can say the same thing of money appropriated last year under the emergency road bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. Will the Senator let me finish this preliminary statement first?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada declines to yield.

Mr. ODDIE. The annual deduction for the repayment of $16,000,000 has been made for the fiscal year 1933, and this amendment provides for two further deductions for the years 1934 and 1935. It can readily be seen, therefore, that if this amendment is adopted the Congress is really reducing its Federal-aid program on the basis of economy reductions provided for other governmental activities. In reality, a reduction has already been made, and work is proceeding at present on a reduced basis.

The second section of the amendment provides for an appropriation of $12,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1934 and 1935 for the construction of roads and trails through the national forests. This is at the same rate as carried in the three previous fiscal years.

In actual administration this amount is divided into two funds, $3,000,000 to be used for the building of roads and trails under the direction of the Forest Service for fire protection and development of the forest reserves; the remaining $9,500,000 to be used for the improvement of highways within the national forest areas. Since many of our main interstate highways traverse forest reserves, it has become necessary to provide for the construction of these roads.

The third section of the amendment provides the sum of $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1933, 1934, and 1935 for the construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of roads over lands which are wholly owned by the Federal Government outside of the national forests. These roads form important links in the interstate system of roads, the same as those through the forest, and yet are wholly in territory owned exclusively by the United States. This authorization is in the same amount as was provided for the fiscal year 1931. This provision is called the Oddie-Colton road fund.

The fourth section of the amendment provides for roads in the national parks and monuments. Heretofore the funds provided for this work have been made available in the appropriation bill of the Department of the Interior, but the committee after careful consideration reached the conclusion that all legislation relating to road construction should be centralized in one bill and it, therefore, provided for an authorization for this work as a part of the general Federal-aid road bill.

The sum provided for in this section is $7,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1934 and 1935, of which sum $1,500,000 may be allocated each year in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of approach roads to national parks and national monuments, inclusive of necessary bridges.

Furthermore, it is necessary, in order that this work may be successfully administered, that authority in law in connection with the road appropriation for the National Park Service be similar in authority to that law which now prevails in connection with the Federal aid and forest highway appropriations. For this reason this section of the bill gives the necessary authority to the Secretary of the Interior for the proper approval of projects.

Under the terms of the Federal highway act the Secretary of Agriculture is required to apportion to the States the funds for each succeeding fiscal year on or before January 1 next preceding the beginning of the fiscal year. This provision of the law is for the purpose of allowing the States and the Bureau of Public Roads to make the studies and surveys and to prepare the plans and specifications necessary before the actual construction operations are started.

Normally the allocation of each year's funds has been made just before January 1, but for the past three years the allotments have been made earlier for the purpose of stimulating employment in the building of roads. The making of these Federal funds available during the fall months has made it possible to do all the preliminary work necessary so that the Northern States might begin construction as soon as weather conditions permitted the following spring and so that the Southern States might continue their program of construction through the winter months.

This legislation should be passed in this session of Congress in order to provide for construction work during next winter and early spring by enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to make the necessary distribution of funds to the States during the coming fall months.

There are other important advantages in the early enactment of this legislation. During the present serious unemployment crisis road construction has been relied upon to a large extent by the States to provide work not only through the summer but, during the past three years, through the winter months. More work has been carried on during the winter months just ended than has ever before been attempted.

Some of the States have been very successful in maintaining a large amount of employment through the winter months. Many of these projects have been made possible only through use of the Federal-aid funds. In such States as Ohio and Michigan the specifications and plans were drawn to provide the maximum amount of labor possible, and a kind of work was selected that could be carried on through the winter months.

There is every reason now to make provision for continuing the same program during next fall, and in order to do this in either the Northern or Southern States it will be necessary to make the allocation of the Federal-aid funds some time early in the fall months.

Another important advantage which will result from the early enactment of this legislation in the present session of Congress will be its effect on State highway policies. This winter the legislatures of most of our States will be in regular session. At this time they will provide the funds necessary to carry on the road program and to meet the Federal-aid funds. If Congress acts without delay in the enactment of this legislation, the State legislatures will be subjected to no uncertainty as to Federal policy. If they fail to do so, the State legislatures will be in confusion and uncertainty regarding their future policy regarding the continuation or abandoning of the road-building programs of their respective States. It will be most disastrous if they are forced to abandon their programs because of the failure of Congress to appropriate money for the continuation of the Federal-aid road-building program, as it will do if it fails to adopt my amendment. Efficient highway administration is facing a critical period, and it is more necessary than ever that Congress should recognize this condition and make every effort to provide effective leadership to uphold the present policies, which have been thoroughly tried and found satisfactory, and upon the basis of which the Federal Government has invested so large an amount of public funds.

Mr. President, the main arguments have been stated in a clear and abbreviated manner. I think Members of the Senate understand the great importance of the enactment of this legislation and the appropriations therefor, and I hope that the Senate will agree to my amendment. I feel that the Government has an obligation to the States to continue the Federal-aid policy. The States accepted the conditions laid down by the Government some years ago. They have been carrying them out according to Government plans and specifications. They have relied on the Government to continue this policy. They have borrowed money from the Government under the relief acts of the last two years, which acts provided that they could repay the amounts from Federal-aid appropriations to them in the future. If we cut off the Federal-aid appropriations in the future, as will be done if this amendment is not adopted, the Government will be breaking faith with the States, and the States will not have the money which the Government promised them, which they can use to pay back the money which has been loaned to them.

I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, how many States can take advantage of the money if it is appropriated?

Mr. ODDIE. I can not tell the exact number. I presume a great majority of the States can do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid in these hard times it will be very difficult for the States to do it.

Mr. ODDIE. All of the States about which I know anything have a serious unemployment problem to face to-day, and this legislation will enable them to solve this problem in a very practical and intelligent manner.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much money will it add to the bill? The bill carries slightly over $100,000,000. How much additional money will be appropriated if the Senator's amendment is agreed to?

Mr. ODDIE. Does the Senator mean the present Agricultural Department appropriation bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. How much does the Senator's amendment carry?

Mr. ODDIE. It carries $125,000,000 for the regular Federal-aid road program for 1934 and the same amount for 1935, besides $12,500,000 for each of these years 1934 and 1935 for national-forest roads and trails, also $3,000,000 for roads over the Federal unappropriated public domain, under the provisions of the so-called Oddie-Colton road bill, for the years 1933–34, and 1935, and $7,500,000 for each of the years 1934 and 1935 for roads in the national parks. This amendment is the same as the bill (S. 36) which passed the Senate on June 8, 1932.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will increase the appropriations in this bill then over 100 per cent. I want to say to the Senator that I think I was about as early an advocate of good roads as anybody who ever served in the Congress. I remember the first speech I ever made in the House was on the subject of Federal aid for good roads, and I was very roundly scored for it, but I have kept up the fight for many years. However, in the condition of the public at the present time I can not vote for the Senator's amendment, good advocate of good roads though I am.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before raising the point of order I want to correct a statement made by the able Senator from Tennessee. The act of 1933 carried an item of $100,000,000 for road and highway construction. The emergency legislation following carries $120,000,000 which is in the nature of a loan. The bill for 1934 carries $35,000,000 to meet existing contracts but not to extend the work.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is very wise, and I think that it is as far as we ought to go this year.

Mr. McNARY. When the Senator from Nevada offered his amendment it was in the nature of an authorization. Since then he has changed it, and it now has the attributes of a direct appropriation. I invoke Rule XVI, which I have in my hand and which is applicable because the proposed amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill. The exception set forth in Rule XVI is not applicable here because the authorization act was passed in June, 1932, which was the last session of the Congress, and, therefore, the amendment does not come within the exceptions set forth in subdivision 1 of Rule XVI. Therefore, I make the point of order that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill and does not come within the exceptions enumerated.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the fact that Senate bill 36 has passed the Senate and has been amended in the committee of the House and is now on the House Calendar, would change the effect of that rule?

Mr. McNARY. It is not for me to decide parliamentary questions. I do not think it makes any difference at all, but I submit the matter to the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule is very specific.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, this is debatable, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is not debatable. The amendment is debatable.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to be heard particularly in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon withhold his point of order for the discussion?

Mr. McNARY. I shall do that for a brief time to accommodate the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, it will not take me very long to present the matters which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate. I want particularly to invite the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the situation in reference to Federal aid for roads for which he is so enthusiastic.

The original plan was proposed by the Federal Government. The Chief of the Bureau of Roads testified to that fact before the committee and there can be no doubt about that being the truth of the situation. It was started on the basis of a 50-50 payment of the expense. The Federal Government was to pay one half of the expense and the States the other half. That system had not been working very long until the big taxpayers of the United States, who pay the taxes in the Federal Government, became dissatisfied with the Federal aid. So they went out, as they have done with their economy leagues and taxpaying organizations, and organized road booster associations in all the States. I think they were organized in Tennessee and in Utah. They were organized everywhere so far as I know.

The road boosters, financed by the New York crowd as usual, started out in connection with the cement trust and agitated for gasoline taxes, county bonds and State bonds, but never once came to the Congress of the United States asking for an increase in the Federal appropriation. The result was that this agitation enormously increased the State taxes of Tennessee, Iowa, and every other State for the building of roads, but did not materially increase the Federal appropriations.

Some years ago Representative DOWELL, of my own State, who was chairman of the House committee, secured an increase of $50,000,000 in the Federal appropriation, which was raised from $75,000,000 to $125,000,000, but, Mr. President, the year that was done the total State expenditures for the same roads were $910,000,000, while only $125,000,000 was paid by the Federal Government, when it ought to have paid $450,000,000 or $460,000,000 in order to provide its share of the expense of this construction. The result has been that the heavy burden of taxation has been transferred from the big income-tax payers of the country, who derive their incomes off the whole country, to the neighbors of the Senator from Tennessee and of other Senators who talk so much about economy, and those people are paying an excessive tax at home which is an unjust burden upon them.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has come when the Federal appropriations for roads should be brought up to the amount originally intended to carry out the purpose of the Congress. It has been cut down by campaigns financed in a sinister way. I do not know of anything that would more particularly need an investigation by the Senate of the United States than the road boosting campaigns which were conducted over the country. A number of very good people joined those road boosters, not knowing what it all meant, not knowing what was behind it and that it was a scheme to reduce Federal taxes.

In States like Tennessee there is not over one dollar of Federal expenditures in four paid by the people of Tennessee and the other $3 is paid by the income-tax payers of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator knows that this fund is still expended on a 50-50 basis. The basis has never been changed. It has been modified to the extent that the Federal Government has loaned the States in the last two bills, if I recall the facts correctly, sufficient not only to enable them to match the Federal funds but to supply the States with the money with which to match those funds. So that, so far as the Federal appropriations are concerned, the Federal Government has done just exactly what it started out to do.

The Senator is correct in saying that the States have spent much more than the amount the Federal Government has spent, but they have done that in their own way under their own laws, under their own administration, and in a manner separate and apart from the Federal-aid road funds. It has been spent by the same people, but the money of the States has been kept separate from the Federal-aid money, and the Federal-aid money only goes on primary roads, while many of the States have built secondary roads. In my judgment, if there is any criticism to be made of the State authorities of Tennessee, it is that in the last several years they have gone entirely too far, and it may have been by reason of the advertisements the Senator suggests. I wish to say, however, that it was done over my disapproval; I did not approve it at the time, and I do not approve it now.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like first to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, and then I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

I think the Senator from Tennessee is right in his suggestion. The arrangement has been skillfully made so that the Federal Government would not pay its share of the expenditures on the roads, every one of which is an interstate road, every one of which is a post road; every one of which is a military road, all of which are for Federal purposes. It is the whole scheme, State and National, that I am criticizing.

I concede that the States are quite as much to blame in not looking out for their rights as is the Congress of the United States, but I have never heard this question even debated except as I have brought it up a time or two here in the Senate. I went before the road boosters in my own State and laid this situation before them. I gave them the figures as to what all the States were spending, which figures I obtained from the Road Bureau, and I asked them to come down before the committee to help us change the arrangement between the States and the Federal Government and help secure an increase of the appropriation so that the Federal Government would contribute its just share of the construction cost of these roads. But they never came. Why? Because their leadership was under the domination of the Cement Trust and the economy leagues and organizations of that kind that are trying to avoid Federal taxation in this country.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true, as a general proposition, that where the Federal Government enters the field of aiding the States that the States run far ahead of the Federal Government? I think in the case of the land-grant colleges the appropriations by the States for such colleges is six or seven times what is appropriated by the Federal Government, and I think that is the general rule, which applies also to roads.

Mr. BROOKHART. That may be true, and it may be that similar campaigns have been carried on in the case of the land-grant colleges; I do not know about that; but, Mr. President, we have reached a situation in reference to taxation in the United States where the burden is not on the Federal Government; it is on the local communities and on the States. They are the ones that are now suffering under this heavy burden of taxation, and it is partly due to the fact the Senator from Ohio has just pointed out about land-grant colleges. The Federal Government has crawled out of paying its share. Here we pass a bill cutting down the expenses of the Customs Service, and we find immediately there will be orders going out closing the little customs offices in Ohio and Tennessee and Iowa and other States. There is where the saving will be made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I was interested in the statement made by the able Senator from Ohio and restated by the Senator from Iowa in respect to the land-grant colleges. I am not quite in accord with that view, and I ask the Senator if it is his opinion that with the expansion of education in all of the States and the educational facilities and developments of the land-grant colleges there ought to be a corresponding increase in the payments by the Federal Government for the maintenance of those colleges?

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the educational system of this country out in the States is now almost broken down. The local taxing authorities can not collect sufficient taxes to pay the expenses of any kind of school any more. The only one who has any money is the Federal Government, and it has got it from the profiteers who have unlimited incomes, who even now in this time of depression are collecting enormous incomes. I notice a dividend of 200 per cent was recently paid by Mr. Mellon's bank in Pittsburgh. The Federal Government is the only place where there are any funds to maintain our civilization at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that the cause of education will be promoted by transferring from the States to the Federal Government the control of our educational system, and the responsibility of imposing taxes for the purpose of maintaining schools of the United States?

Mr. BROOKHART. No; but I believe it would be promoted by transferring back to the States some of the funds that are taken from the States by the accumulation of enormous estates and great incomes.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes.

Mr. KING. I regret exceedingly that the able Senator from Iowa is not a member of the Finance Committee, because if he were he would discover the lean sources of revenue that are available to the Federal Government and the difficulty the Federal Government has in tapping the sources of revenue sufficiently to prevent enormous deficits, a deficit of $1,000,000,000 two years ago, $2,000,000,000 last year, and obviously nearly $3,000,000,000 this year.

Mr. BROOKHART. At present, although the national income is reduced, it is estimated variously at from forty to fifty million dollars, but most of that is in the hands of people that the Congress of the United States taxes and not the local taxing bodies of the States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that all this discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to ask a question then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Is not the Senator from Iowa in error in assuming the national income to be from forty to forty-five million dollars? A number of leading professors and economists, who have made, I think, a rather meticulous search, have stated that about $35,000,000,000 was the maximum income of all the people of the United States for 1932.

Mr. BROOKHART. Nicholas Murray Butler estimated it at $37,500,000,000; the Federation of Labor estimated it at $40,000,000,000, and I have seen it estimated at $45,000,000,000 and also at $50,000,000,000. There is not a definite estimate so that we can tell what it is, but there is still an enormous amount of income derived from furnishing the very necessities of life, which is about all we are furnishing in the United States to-day.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator is in error when he assumes if we start a Federal-aid program and fix the amount to be authorized this year, and then a State wants to go two or three times higher than that amount that the Federal Government would be under obligation to go up with it. I do not think that is justified, and that must be the error under which the Senator is laboring.

Mr. BROOKHART. If it were fairly presented to the States and no secret organization were built up by the interests who want to avoid taxation, I would agree with the Senator from Ohio; but after I investigated the inside of these road boosters' associations and saw the real motives that animated them and caused them to boost up the local expenses for building roads faster than the Federal Government would aid them, I saw then that the purpose of it was really to have the Government crawl out from paying its share toward building the hard-road system in the United States. I think it is time for the Congress to take notice of that situation and to see that the laws are revised and these appropriations are increased so that the Federal Government shall do its part.

Mr. President, right now all over the United States there are rebellions against local taxation. There is no rebellion against Federal taxation, excepting that of the Economy League, which comes down before the committee to try to cut down the appropriations for veterans and thereby reduce the taxes of its members. The United States Chamber of Commerce does the same thing, as does the Manufacturers' Association. But they do not come with ropes and they do not come with guns, like the farmers of Maryland and of Pennsylvania and of Ohio—yes; this morning I saw an account of a rebellion in the State of Ohio—and of Iowa and of Illinois and of Indiana and of other States who are rebelling because the local tax burden has grown so heavy upon them that it is taking their homes and their livelihood away from them. Then we talk economy in Federal expenditures. Through the Federal Government alone have we got a chance to relieve them of this burden of taxation, and one of the opportunities is afforded on this road proposition.

Mr. President, I think that the time will surely come when this relation of Federal expenses to local and State expenses will be better understood in the United States.

I have had some arguments with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and also with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. At one time the Senator from Pennsylvania pointed out that his State paid some $300,000,000 into the Federal Treasury by way of taxes, and that Iowa only paid $10,000,000; that Pennsylvania got back only 1.8 per cent of her taxes by way of Federal aid, whereas Iowa got back 16 per cent. And the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] pointed out that New York paid one-third of all the taxes received by the Federal Treasury from the whole United States, and the argument was made that that was an unjust situation in reference to Federal aid. But, Mr. President, Pennsylvania, through her Steel Trust and her other industrial combinations and her great corporations, took from the people of Iowa and from the people of other States the enormous incomes they obtained, and they ought to share the taxes they paid with the various States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield; yes.

Mr. REED. If the Senator means by "the Steel Trust," the United States Steel Corporation, it pays all its Federal taxes to the New York collector.

Mr. BROOKHART. But it is located in Pennsylvania, a good deal of it; and, Mr. President, in New York, if they pay one-third of the Federal taxes, they get 50 per cent of the income of the people of the whole country. The net national income of this country goes to those sources, and it is right and proper that they should be taxed for these things. They are using these roads, after they are built, to draw their incomes into these great centers; and it is that thing that has upset the equilibrium in our country and has brought us to this state of depression. It is this centralization of the income of the country that has brought on the depression, and the Government itself has been managed and the economic affairs of the country have been managed by the same men who now seek to avoid taxation, and who talk all of this "economy" in the question of Federal Government expenses.

I think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] on yesterday or day before uttered the right sentiment when he said we have gone mad upon this question of economy here in the Federal Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, may I ask a reconsideration? If the ruling of the Chair can be withdrawn and postponed a few minutes, I asked permission to interrupt the Senator from Iowa a few minutes ago. I wanted to make one observation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled on the question. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has offered an amendment, which is debatable; and that matter may be debated after it is read. Let the amendment be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 89, after line 18, at the end of the section relating to the collection of seed-grain loans, it is proposed to insert the following:

It is hereby declared to be the sense of Congress that all agricultural credit agencies created under the authority of the Federal Government should be grouped under a single administrative jurisdiction, and the President of the United States is requested to recommend to the Congress at the earliest practicable date a plan for the grouping and consolidation of such agencies.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I doubt whether in the whole organization of the Federal Government there is a more amazing, more senseless example of legislative and administrative ineptitude than in the system of agricultural credits created by Congress and administered by various executive agencies since the Government first entered this field.

The explanation is obvious. As each new need appeared or as the political "saviors" of the farmer conceived some new scheme for their relief, Congress, sometimes on the recommendation of the President—more often on its own initiative—set up one after another of these agencies, with little or no regard for the appearance of the pattern as a whole, with the result that we have a crazy quilt of credit facilities which could come into existence only by this patchwork method of legislating for the farmer's supposed benefit.

We have created six separate agencies for this process of aiding the farmer to get further into debt. The six agencies are the Federal land banks, the intermediate credit banks, the joint-stock land banks, the Federal Farm Board, the Crop Production Loan Office, and the agricultural credit corporations. All six of those institutions are lending money either to individual farmers or to farmers' cooperative organizations at various rates of interest, extending all the way from one-eighth of 1 per cent a year up to 7 per cent a year.

The first is almost—well, I hesitate to use the noun that occurred to me. It is highly unfair to the Government. The last, the 7 per cent interest rate, is almost usurious. This one Government has created these six different organizations, headed by six different groups of highly paid executives, each of them staffed with organizations that extend throughout the United States, doing the same work in the same districts, with overlapping organizations, with agents of the several institutions in the same counties, if you please, estimating credit risks in the same way, and then recommending loans to be made, as I say, at anywhere from one-eighth of 1 per cent per annum up to 7 per cent per annum. They have separate field forces, separate sets of officers, separate boards, separate commissions, separate clerical forces; and imagine the plight of a farmer who is seeking a loan from the Government. He has to take a graduate course in farm credit organization before he knows where to go to get his relief. What he wants and what he ought to have is some one source in the case of Government credits to which he can come and get an answer to his problem. As it is now, he may never get an answer.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I assume that the Senator does not mean to convey the idea that the Federal land banks, the joint-stock land banks, or the intermediate-credit banks are anything more than private banking institutions, organized under Federal law, with the Federal Government supervising those banks from the administrative standpoint, the same as the Comptroller of the Currency supervises, for instance, national banks.

Mr. REED. The Federal Government has done a great deal more than supervise.

Take the case of the Federal land banks, which the Senator mentioned first: They are private corporations; yes, that is true; but it was only a short time until we authorized $125,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to be put into the Federal land banks and be loaned out by them to individual farmers. If that is not the Government being in the business of loaning, I can not imagine what is; and having done that with the Federal land banks, we have made it impossible for them to collect on their mortgages from the farmer; and the joint-stock land banks, to whom we have advanced nothing, find an equal difficulty in collecting, and they are loud in their complaints and they have justice in it. They are just as much entitled to that kind of relief as were the Federal land banks.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question in connection with this matter?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. This $125,000,000 that was advanced by the Federal Government was advanced for the purpose of purchasing stock in the Federal land banks; and that $125,000,000 may be loaned by the Federal land banks to the farmers to pay any corporate indebtedness, the Federal land bank interest, or the mortgage.

Mr. REED. Of course.

Mr. BLAINE. So that it may never reach the farmer, as a matter of fact. I say, it may not reach him.

Mr. REED. It may not; but we all know that it will, and we all know that we never will get the money back.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I share in the confusion to which the Senator is referring; and I wonder whether he is acquainted with the fact that in the same number of years, during which time this legislation has grown up, we have enacted 73 separate statutes on behalf of the farmer.

The other day I went over the records, and I was amazed to find that as a result of the desire on the part of the House, the Senate, and the President to do something for the farmer we have added, including these six items, during which time I have been in Congress, 73 laws; and yet the farmer is in pretty bad shape.

Mr. REED. We have simply encouraged the farmer to go deeper and deeper into debt. We have made his indebtedness attractive to him by this legislation. We have got him, or helped to get him, into the plight in which he now finds himself.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, would the Senator rather that I should not interrupt his statement?

Mr. REED. I should like to follow my thread of thought for a few minutes. Then I shall be glad to yield.

Now, Mr. President, I ask you to take the case of the average individual farmer who is in trouble and needs a loan. If we are bewildered by the 73 different statutes, of which the Senator from Ohio speaks, how could the average farmer be expected to understand them? If we are bewildered by the overlapping of these different farm-loan organizations, how much more so must be the average farmer whose thought has been on his occupation and not upon this wilderness of laws?

Take the average farmer in Pennsylvania, or Iowa, or Michigan, or South Carolina, or Texas, or some other State, who needs a loan. He may need it for a long time. He may need a short-term loan. He may need money for seed. He may need it to buy livestock. He may have to refinance his mortgage. He may have to pay his taxes. He might have to buy a harvesting machine. He might need money to carry him through the crop season until he can collect on the sale of his harvested crops. Obviously, that man has not the money to pay car fare to Washington or Philadelphia or Detroit or some central city. Even if he did make the trip, oftentimes the expense of making it, especially if he came to Washington, would amount to more than the principal of the loan that he wants to make.

So he writes, let us say, to the Federal Farm Board, which is supposed to be the farmers' friend, here in Washington. He has heard that that was organized to help him; and he writes and says that he, John Smith, living at a distance from Washington, needs so many hundred dollars to help him get through the growing season.

In about 10 days or 2 weeks, perhaps, during which his need has not diminished any, he gets a letter from the Federal Farm Board saying that he is in the wrong pew, and that he ought not to apply to them; he ought to apply to the Federal land banks, or the Crop Production Loan Office, or the Agricultural Credit Corporation, or somewhere else; but, anyway, the Federal Farm Board has no authority to lend money directly to him.

All right. Perhaps he has not even been given that much information. He is just told nothing at all except that they will not lend him the money; or perhaps they send an application blank for him to fill in, and he fills it in, and then has another two weeks' wait, and then he has his request turned down. That is the way it starts out with Farmer John Smith.

About that time he writes to his Congressman; and if his Congressman is like myself, he is bewildered, and does not know which way to turn. My experience has been that when I try to help somebody by applying to these various organizations I usually get a refusal, and an explanation that, because of the fault of Congress in so wording the law, this particular man who is in distress can not have any relief.

Obviously, other people are more successful than I am at that, because I understand that the Federal land banks have outstanding 400,970 loans—that is, as of the last day of November—and on the same day the joint-stock land banks had outstanding 78,068 loans, not counting some 7,500 by banks that are in receivership. The amount of money loaned to the farmer by the Federal land banks as of that date was $1,131,762,000. The joint-stock land banks have loaned $418,542,000. The intermediate-credit banks have loaned to cooperatives $13,296,000, and to financing institutions $81,886,000.

The Congressman probably can not help this farmer, or if he does he takes a good deal of time to get around to it; but the farmer hears of a neighbor who has obtained a loan from some joint-stock land bank, and so he writes directly to that institution. He finds that his loan can not be obtained from them because it is not a mortgage that he is trying to place; it is a chattel mortgage on his growing crop. By the time he learns his way through this maze, he has either lost his farm or lost his crop or has been evicted, or he has had to go to the nearest relief agency for food and clothes for his family.

The point of all this is that if there were a consolidation of these different agencies, not only would we save mightily in operating expense here in Washington and in the field forces of these different institutions, but we would be doing a great service to the farmers themselves in giving them some one place to which they knew they could make application for any variety of loan that is inspired by the Government or financed by Treasury funds.

So, Mr. President, while I realize that this is in a sense legislation, it is merely precatory in its tone. It asks the President to submit to us some plan for the consolidation of these functions, and I am very hopeful that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] will not feel it to be his duty to make the point of order against the amendment.

As a part of my remarks, I should like to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of what I say a tabulation which has been prepared for me, showing the functions of these six different organizations, showing the interest rates they charge, and giving a short description of the manner in which they are operated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

| Agency | Status and source of funds | Organization and functions | Interest rate | | Remarks |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | Bonds | Borrowers | |
| 1. Federal land banks. | Administered by Federal Farm Loan Board, under the Treasury Department, and financed through capital-stock subscriptions by U. S. Government and cooperative farm-loan associations; total capital stock held by Government, $125,046,410.50, represents roughly two-thirds of all outstanding stock issued by 12 regional banks of the system, and includes $125,000,000 subscribed under farm loan act of Jan. 23, 1932, to place system in more liquid condition and enable banks to extend loans during depression. The law provides for gradual retirement of Federal subscriptions. | 12 regional banks of the system operate almost exclusively through national farm-loan associations, which are jointly liable as indorsers on loans to individual member borrowers. The banks lend only on first mortgages secured by farm land, and are made for general agricultural purposes up to a maximum of $25,000. Preference is given loans of $10,000 or less. This is the long-term credit agency of the Federal Government, and while designed ultimately to be self-sustaining, has had to be supported as indicated in the present emergency. | Average, 4.52 per cent; last, 4½ per cent. | Average, 5.4 per cent; current—10 banks, 5½ per cent; 2 banks, 6 per cent. | Congressional action in authorizing the Treasury to subscribe to $125,000,000 in new stock of the Federal land banks has had a pronounced repercussion in a demand from the management, the bondholders, and the borrowers of joint-stock banks for corresponding consideration. It has been complained by the president of the Pennsylvania Joint Stock Land Bank that since the Government extended this relief to the Federal land banks it has been practically impossible to collect loans. Their borrowers are saying: "If the Government can carry the Federal land banks, it can carry you. They are carrying their borrowers and you can carry us." Except for a difference of formula, there is a substantial duplication of loan jurisdiction in the 2 systems. Both make long-term loans on first-mortgage farm security. |
| 2. Intermediate-credit banks. | Likewise administered by Federal Farm Loan Board. The law creating these banks authorized stock subscriptions of $5,000,000 to each of 12 regional banks, or $60,000,000 in all, of which $32,000,000 has been paid in, and the remainder is subject to call under specified conditions. Unlike the Federal land banks, the intermediates draw their entire sustenance from the Government, in that there is no provision for private subscriptions to stock in these institutions. | These are the little brothers of the Federal land banks, and are intended to supply short-term funds (up to 3 years) with which to facilitate crop movements and make it possible for producers to carry over crops from one year to another. Loans are made not to individuals, but to cooperatives and loan associations on warehouse receipts. The banks also act as a rediscounting agency for agricultural paper. Most of their loans are for a period of less than 1 year. They exist side by side with the Federal land banks, in the same cities. | Average, 2.87 per cent; last, 2½ per cent. | Average, 4 per cent (approximate); current—8 banks, 3½ per cent; 3 banks, 3 per cent; 1 bank, 2½ per cent. | There is a clear duplication of function in the case of the intermediate-credit banks, the loans to cooperatives by the Federal Farm Board, and probably in the Agricultural Credit Corporations being formed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation also. All 3 systems may and do loan to cooperatives on similar security and for similar periods. |
| 3. Joint-stock land banks. | Supervised but not administered by the Federal Farm Loan Board, this is a separate system, privately financed under authority of Congress, but with the express stipulation that the United States shall not subscribe to the capital stock of any bank. Borrowers are not necessarily subscribers as in the case of the Federal land banks. | There is no statutory restriction on the number or location of these banks. Federal control in part is exercised through the appointment of 3 out of 7 district directors by Federal Farm Loan Board. Loans are made direct to borrowers on first mortgages. The banks are closely tied up with the farm-loan associations, which likewise name 3 directors. | Average, 5 per cent; last, 4¾ and 5 per cent. | Average, 5.8 per cent; current, 6 per cent. | Innumerable investors purchased the securities of the joint-stock banks in the belief that they were Government issues. The advertisements carried the announcement that the bond issues had been "authorized by act of Congress." Considering this circumstance and the degree of control over the system exercised by the Federal Government, there is at least a moral obligation to see that the system is given adequate relief of some kind to carry it over the present emergency. |
| 4. Federal Farm Board. | An independent agency of the Government launched in 1929 to stabilize the prices of agricultural commodities and foster the cooperative marketing of farm crops; financed from the Federal Treasury through direct appropriations by Congress for its several purposes. These, except for amounts charged off as a result of losses, go into a revolving fund from which loans are made. | Stabilization operations are conducted through the Grain and Cotton Stabilization Corporations, formed and financed by the Farm Board; loans are made directly between the board and cooperatives and not through a banking system. The board has been broadly instrumental in spreading and strengthening the cooperative movement. | No bonds; enjoys benefit of average borrowing rate on Treasury issues during life of the board. | Borrowers receive same rate; range from 3⅝ per cent in 1929 to one-eighth of 1 per cent in 1932. | Aside from the fact that in making loans to cooperatives the Farm Board, intermediate-credit banks, and Agricultural Credit Corporations are functioning in the same field, it will be apparent that there is a wide disparity in interest charges to borrowers, due to differences in financing and in statutory stipulations. The current loan rates of the Farm Board will obviously operate to injure the land-bank systems; and the higher rates necessarily charged by these systems, based on their bond yield, impose a proportionate hardship on borrowers at a particularly difficult time. |
| 5. Crop Production Loan Office. | This is an office of the Department of Agriculture, financed as in the case of the Farm Board by direct appropriations. Organized originally to make so-called seed and drought loans, it has been kept alive to make what are called broadly, now, crop-production loans. Its activities are temporary and tenuous, depending on the temper of Congress and its willingness to continue this form of farm credit. | Most of these loans, made direct to borrowers, have been made in what is known as the St. Paul area and in certain southern States. Georgia, North and South Carolina have borrowed one-fifth of the total; one-fourth has gone to the eastern States from Michigan to Florida. The heaviest demand has come from wheat States of the Northwest. | ----do---- | 1931, 5 per cent; 1932, 5½ per cent. | Here is another case of duplicated activity. Unless the Crop Production Loan Office is to be discontinued and its functions transferred to the Agricultural Credit Corporation, these 2 agencies will both be in the position of offering funds to individual borrowers for crop-production purposes, with the further possibility of divergent interest rates, which in the case of the Crop Production Loan Office appear to be unnecessarily high, unless predicated on the assumption that the loans are a gamble and that many of them will never be collected; which has not held true. |
| 6. Agricultural Credit Corporations. | These corporations, the creation of which was authorized by the emergency relief act of 1932, are just coming into existence and beginning to function as subsidiaries of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The stock is subscribed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which is authorized to establish regional agricultural, credit corporations with a minimum paid-up capital of $3,000,000 "in any of the 12 Federal land-bank districts." | "Officers and agents" of the corporations are appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They are empowered "to make loans and advances to farmers and stockmen, the proceeds of which are to be used for an agricultural purpose (including crop production) or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of livestock," up to a period of 3 years on "adequate security." | ----do---- | 7 per cent [1] | It is difficult to discover the justification for this institution, considering the agencies already available for this form of credit. It will simply set up another series of offices, another field force, another administrative organization in Washington to perform a function which can be performed now by the Crop Production Loan Office, in part, and indirectly through the cooperatives and the rediscounting activities of the Federal intermediate-credit banks, by these banks, and by the Farm Board. It goes somewhat farther, it is true, in extending relief to individual borrowers, if a 7 per cent interest rate can be considered "relief." |

[1] This includes cost of inspection. The law provides that the loan rate shall be "fair and equitable," and subject to approval by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This rate looks like usury.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, we have just listened to the most remarkable speech made in the Senate in the 10 years I have been here. I now want to figure out who it is that is responsible for this chaos in which the entire farm credit of the country is floundering.

In 1921 Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and their assistants in financial affairs—some of them Democrats; it was bipartisan, because that crowd is always absolutely bipartisan—took charge of this Government, took charge even of the Presidency of the United States. They had in sympathy with them a majority in both Houses of Congress, and they had a two-thirds majority in the Supreme Court of the United States; and they have managed the political affairs in this country ever since 1921, and to some extent even before that. They also had charge of the management of the big economic affairs of this country. They are responsible mostly for these farmer laws and these others that have been put upon the books of this country.

The farmers did not write those laws. The laws which the farmers supported in the United States have nearly all been defeated. Under that management, and as a part of that political system, the Senator from Pennsylvania has been one of the most conspicuous Members. He has been in sympathy with all of this financial legislation that has come up and has gone through in the Congress of the United States; and if there is anybody in this Chamber to-day who is more responsible for this chaos than the Senator from Pennsylvania, I should be unable to name him.

Mr. President, what brought farm credit to this situation? Let us go back and review some of the economic institutions that were set up for the benefit of the farmer.

The first one was the War Finance Corporation, reorganized for agriculture. It operated all right during the war for war industries and all that; and then it was revised and reorganized to take care of agriculture, and it was given $2,000,000,000 to relieve agriculture at that time. Then Mr. Eugene Meyer was put in charge of it, and he never used $200,000,000 of the whole sum. He started in with a restrictive policy of credit against agriculture, and then he comes around and brags, for instance, that he loaned the banks of Iowa some $25,000,000. Iowa was producing at that time six or seven hundred million dollars' worth of agricultural products and five or six hundred millions of industrial products, and a little $25,000,000 loan was only a drop in the bucket. Then it was called when it was due, and started the system of bank failures throughout the United States.

After working that restrictive policy, and actually injuring agriculture by that War Finance Corporation policy, that qualified Mr. Meyer to become the leader of this great land-bank system and this joint-stock land-bank system.

Now, let us take the figures that are quoted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The two systems—the joint-stock and the intermediate-credit banks—have loaned the farmers of the country about a billion and a half dollars altogether. Their total demands are nine or ten billion dollars; and we find there again the same restrictive policy against the credit of agriculture, and the interest rate was higher than agriculture could ever afford to pay. Then, along with it, he had the intermediate-credit bank, with ability to lend $660,000,000, and the Senator's figures show less than $100,000,000 loaned for these purposes—again this restrictive policy put upon agriculture, calculated to destroy it.

That qualified Mr. Meyer; and following that he put on, in the joint-stock land banks, the most dastardly proposition of credit that has ever been put on in this country—a proposition of foreclosing these mortgages on the farms, selling the farms for a small amount of money, say a $20,000 farm for $5,000, taking $4,000 of the $5,000, and then going out and buying the depreciated bonds of the institution, $10,000 of them, enough to balance the books of the mortgage, and have $1,000 profit left to pay big salaries to the henchmen that Eugene Meyer had put in these banks all over this country.

Mr. President, these systems have all brought agriculture down, and these financial institutions that have run this country since 1921 are responsible for that condition.

What have we done to relieve agriculture?

Well, we passed the Farm Board act. Was that the farmers' bill? No. I had information from the leader of the Republican Party as to what the farmers' bill should do in the campaign. I took the old bill that President Wilson had secured when he was President of the United States, on the recommendation of Herbert Hoover and of Julius H. Barnes, and I made that the basis of the campaign of 1928, so that we would have an adequate farm bill that would actually handle and finance and control the surplus in the United States. It would take about $1,500,000,000 to do that adequately, as Wilson did it and as Hoover did it, and as Julius H. Barnes did it in 1917, 1918, and 1919. That is what I presented to the country, and I did it upon the information furnished me by the President himself and by his committee in charge of the Republican campaign in 1928. Then, when it was all over, and his bill came in, what was it?

The first time I saw that bill it was a little $300,000,000 bill to handle $1,500,000,000 of surplus brought in by the Secretary of Agriculture. I then pointed out that the President himself has asked for a thousand million dollars to handle wheat alone and had secured that appropriation from the Congress; and finally they backed away and increased it up to $500,000,000, which was still only about one-third enough actually to handle the surplus.

Then who was put in charge of that bill? Was it a farmer? Who was administering that Farm Board law? Was it anybody that knew agriculture? No; it was the biggest robber of agriculture in the whole United States, the president of the International Harvester Co., that had taken more profits and charged more profits against the farmers of the United States than any other institution in the United States. Then he set up two corporations to handle wheat, for instance—one of them a stabilizing corporation and the other a marketing corporation—and he hired an expert in wheat gambling at $50,000 a year; and this Mr. Milnor came before the committee and testified that with one of these corporations he would be buying wheat in the board of trade and selling it in the board of trade with the other one the same day—a wash-sales system of gambling, as vicious as ever could be set up by anybody; and yet when Hoover and Barnes and Wilson ran the Wheat Corporation in 1917 and 1918 and 1919 they fixed the price of wheat, and they put the board of trade entirely out of business. It never sold a bushel of wheat on futures after the first bid was made by Mr. Hoover on the 30th of August, 1917.

Mr. President, it is these things that are the matter with the farmer of the United States. Yes; I concede these 73 laws that have been put on the statute books under a pretense of aiding the farmer—for the purpose of getting his vote, or something of that kind—for the benefit of the financial crowd of the United States and not for the benefit of agriculture. Yes; they have brought us into chaos, and they have brought the whole farm population of the United States to the verge of bankruptcy at this moment. Many of them have already gone over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BROOKHART. I do.

Mr. FESS. The results of this legislation are rather in doubt in my mind. I do not think it has come anywhere near doing what the people insisted that it would do; but I desire to ask the Senator this question:

How are we to interpret the recommendation of all of these farm organizations, including the National Farm Bureau and the National Farm Union and the Grange, I think almost all of whom were back of all of these items of legislation? They indorsed them and it would appear to me that they ought to be the best agricultural minds of the country.

Mr. BROOKHART. In the first place, most of those acts are little, trivial acts that just cover some little, trivial thing in the agricultural problem. Most of them may be all right for that little, trivial purpose; but as a settlement of this great farm problem they are not effective, and can not be made effective.

At the present moment these great farm organizations have agreed upon one principle, and that would solve this farm problem if the legislators in the Congress of the United States would put it into effect. They have decided that agriculture in the United States is entitled to a cost-of-production price with a reasonable profit on its capital investment for its products; and they have looked over this situation. They have seen the Congress of the United States come in with its tariff laws and protect the industries of the United States, raising the price level far above the level of the world, and they have paid that price all these years. They have seen the railroads come along and put on the statute books a law that injected over $7,000,000,000 of water into the valuation, and fixed $18,900,000,000 of value, when the market quotations were only $11,750,000,000, and then they were given a 5¾ per cent return upon that inflated valuation. They have seen all of that, and they have watched the other laws that have been passed for the benefit of business and the control of business; and they feel, the Congress of the United States having put them under the necessity of paying this higher level of prices for the things they must purchase, that they are entitled to have from the Congress a cost-of-production price for the things they sell. That was a just demand.

Now, in detail, I should be glad to review their situation at some time. The Farmers' Union is in favor of the Government taking charge of this exportable surplus and handling it in some way at a cost-of-production price. The Farm Bureau has taken another position, a little below that, which I think would not accomplish the purpose. The Grange has declared for the debenture. The debenture is the old Alexander Hamilton scheme for the relief of agriculture that was presented to the First Congress of the United States when the first tariff bill was passed. Hamilton then said distinctly that you could not protect agriculture with rates; you must do it with bounties out of the United States Treasury. The debenture of the Grange is that bounty. The only trouble with the Grange proposition is that it is inadequate. They only ask for half of the tariff rate; and at the present low prices of agricultural products, double the tariff rate would scarcely protect agricultural prices up to the cost-of-production level.

These are some of the more important things for which the farm organizations have asked. They asked for an equalization fee in a recent bill. Under that bill the Government would handle the exportable surplus, and if there was a loss on it the farmers would pay it by an equalization fee or tax upon themselves. That would work out successfully if it were put in operation, but instead of that what do we get? We get this Andrew Mellon system of credit in the United States. We get all the different things ruled by Eugene Meyer. We get the farmers stricken down to the lowest level in all their history.

Mr. President, I think these laws ought to be revised. I think they will be revised. I have some confidence that the new administration does mean a new deal, and that the next farm bill we pass will actually get for the farmers a cost-of-production price for their products with a reasonable profit upon their capital investment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is wholly unnecessary in view of legislation that has already passed the Senate. In addition to that it is retrogressive in nature. The Senator from Pennsylvania apparently has overlooked the fact that after mature deliberation the Senate recently passed a provision in the reorganization section of the so-called economy act which gives the President far more power than is carried in the Senator's amendment. There is no power in fact conferred on the President by the Senator's amendment. It in effect says that the Congress from time to time has been setting up too many agencies in connection with particular functions and that, having done that, the Congress appeals to the President to recommend a method for correcting its own mistakes. That is the substance and effect of the Senator's proposal.

It is well known that the consolidation of farm-loan agencies is being given especial consideration. It is well known that already one bill has been introduced, one of the subordinate purposes of which is the gathering together under a single bureau of the agencies that make loans to farmers. A bill of that character is under study by one of the great committees of the Senate, the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The reorganization provision which we adopted a few days ago gives the President the power to make such consolidations of agencies and functions as he sees fit to make without referring the matter back to the Congress. That is the reason I assert that the Senator's amendment will be confusing and do more harm than good. I quote from the language of the reorganization section, page 84, of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill:

> The President is authorized by Executive order (a) to transfer the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency; (b) to consolidate the functions vested in any executive agency; or (c) to abolish the whole or in part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof.

It is apparent from that language that the President is given the power in the reorganization section of the economy bill to consolidate any bureaus or agencies that he finds it necessary to consolidate. He can even abolish them.

For this reason, Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment constitutes legislation on a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Chair rules let me say that it may be a waste of time, but I agree with what the Chair apparently was about to state, that the amendment is subject to a point of order. Nevertheless, I can not help believing that the amendment states a fact that ought to receive the consideration of Congress or of the President when he comes to the reorganization. That is the only reason why I am offering my views in support of the policy or proposal that is contained in the amendment. I concede also that the President, under the authority of the language of the appropriation bill passed yesterday, would have authority to do this. But I do not want to remain silent for fear that our silence might be taken as a reason to believe that the Congress is opposed to this particular reorganization that would be carried out if the amendment became law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The pending amendment gives no assurance that any consolidation would be carried out. It invites the Executive to recommend to Congress a method of consolidation, implying of course that this particular consolidation shall be taken out of the reorganization plan to which we have agreed and under which we have given the President the power to make consolidations. Since Congress created the various agencies, there is less likelihood that the consolidation would result under the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania than under the reorganization plan contained in the economy bill.

The Senator's amendment is a mere appeal to the President to undo what Congress has done, to make a recommendation to the Congress on certain phases of consolidation which are already being studied. I may say, as half a dozen Senators on the other side of the Chamber know, that work on the problem is already in progress. It has already been partially worked out. I think I violate no confidence when I say that the President elect is very much interested in seeing it studied and worked out. It seems to me it is a rather questionable proceeding for the Senate now to anticipate his action in the matter and, on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, ask him to tell us what to do to correct the errors, if any, that Congress has made. We have given him power to do it. The study is already in progress. It has already progressed considerably. The adoption of the amendment would do more harm than good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably if the Chair construes the rule strictly, I have lost the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I did not intend to take the Senator from the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I had the floor and I was interrupted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought that the Senator from Nebraska, who had taken his seat, had yielded the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I took my seat momentarily because of the very brief question the Senator from Arkansas was asking me. It took so much time that I thought I would rest. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I apologize to the Senator from Nebraska for making him weary. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the Senator's question, I will say that with 90 per cent of what the Senator said I fully agree. It may be it is a mistake for this amendment to be offered. I concede that under the bill we have already passed the President has the right to do what is particularly called to his attention by this amendment. I was about to say when I was interrupted that I agree it is subject to a point of order and the Chair was evidently going to say so, too.

But I do not want the opportunity to pass in silence so that anybody could possibly say that by our silence and our refusal to debate the amendment we were not in favor of the consolidation that is provided for specifically in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. If the amendment had not been offered, no discussion would have been indulged in by me on the particular subject. But I want to have it distinctly understood that regardless of whether the amendment ought to be agreed to or not, the subject matter of the amendment is something that, so far as I am concerned, at least, ought to be carried out. I fear that silence on the subject might be misinterpreted.

Mr. President, we have from time to time, beginning quite a number of years ago, brought in various bills to relieve the farmer. The first one was brought in here from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, debated and given consideration while President Harding was in office. I think it was the first one. That bill provided what I believed then and still believe would have gone far to relieve the farmers of the country from the terrible condition into which they were gradually getting. We were rather laughed at at that time. It was said then that there was no farmers' problem, but the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry knew there was.

A great number of American people, perhaps a majority of them—at least those not on the farms—thought we were in a time of great prosperity. We thought, after investigation, that there was something wrong with agriculture; that the farmer had not been getting a square deal. I believe that the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in that discussion and in other debates, called attention to the fact that unless we did something to help agriculture we were bound in time to face a catastrophe such as has since come upon the country. The only thing that in my judgment was wrong with our prophecy was that the difficulty did not come as soon as I thought it was bound to come.

However, we found ourselves confronted with a condition where, to a great extent, apparently those engaged in manufacturing—including those of every class who labor, big business, and all its connections—were in a great tide of prosperity; but the farmers we found, from the evidence we took after months of hearings on the bill, were going downward and backward. We believed then that unless something were done for agriculture, eventually the farmer would lose his purchasing power; that when he did so the manufacturing establishments, being unable to sell their products, would commence to discharge their men, and that then the purchasing power of a large number of people would be taken away from them, and that in the end we would have a panic.

After an exciting debate here—one of the most exciting, I think, that ever occurred during the heat of the months of the summer—an amendment in the nature of a substitute was offered. That substitute provided for the loaning of money to farmers. It was agreed to and became a law. I then said—and other members of the Committee on Agriculture said the same thing—that we were not doing a favor to the farmers of America in providing for them additional loan facilities unless we could demonstrate or unless we had fair reason to believe that between the time when they were loaned the money and the time when they would have to pay the debt, agriculture would get on its feet and enable the farmers to make money by the operation. I said then that I believed unless the farmer could get a higher price for the commodities he produced, unless he could sell at a profit, loaning the money to him, no matter what might be the rate of interest, would in the end be a damage rather than a benefit; that it would only postpone the evil day. However, we who made that contention did not have our way and the substitute was agreed to.

The next bill that the Agricultural Committee brought in was met again by another proposal by which more money could be loaned to the farmer. Nothing, however, was done to help his condition, and he went from bad to worse; he commenced to mortgage his farm, and the statistics will show—and that is the reason why the catastrophe did not come sooner—that he began to live on borrowed money. He was in the same class with the clerk who bought a fur coat on the installment plan; he had mortgaged the future; and when he had exhausted the money borrowed and began to fall behind farther every day, his purchasing power entirely disappeared. The farmer then, so far as buying the products of labor and of the manufacturer is concerned, was completely out of the equation.

So, at different times, we met the condition by providing by loaning more money to the farmer, until now we begin to realize that the rate of interest he is paying is so high, even on money which he got from the Government, or indirectly from the Government, through the agencies that had been set up to loan him money, that he can not pay it; that the income of the farmer is not sufficient to pay taxes and the interest on his mortgage. So the farmer is going farther behind every day, and we all now realize and the country realizes that condition.

Each one of the various plans for loaning money to the farmer has a set-up, a sort of means and method by which it should be loaned to him. It is expensive; it is inefficient; and the President of the United States, when he comes to reorganize the bureaus, departments, and offices of the Government, will find that the various acts of Congress which we—in good faith, I concede—enacted for the loaning of more money to the farmers, necessarily, because of all the different kinds of machinery, overlapping and interlapping, in reality provide for an expensive and inefficient method of doing it.

Now we come to the provision which we adopted the other day, giving to the President the authority to effectuate a reorganization. I think we rightfully bestowed that authority, and I favored it. I do not want to detract or take from the authority to bring about such reorganization.

I have no doubt that the President, under that provision, will have complete authority to make the reorganization; but I was afraid when the amendment was offered, attention having been called to this one particular difficulty, that if we remained silent and said nothing about it the President might draw the conclusion perhaps that we did not want this reorganization to be brought about. Perhaps he would not draw that conclusion; it may be entirely unnecessary to say a word about it; but I believe I express the sentiments of those who have studied the condition of agriculture when I say that we want the President to reorganize the bureaus, offices, and methods by which under various laws loan facilities have been provided for the benefit of the farmers. They ought to be consolidated. Perhaps we ought to pass a law reducing the interest rates. Perhaps it is our fault more than the fault of anybody else that they are not lower; but if the farmer is to be aided by loans, they must be at a rate of interest that is much smaller than provided in the acts which we have already passed, else we can not recover.

I realize the difficulty that confronts the President as well as the Congress because under various acts millions of dollars have been loaned at stipulated rates of interest; contracts have been entered into; and, of course, it would be unconstitutional to pass a law that would set them aside.

I doubt very much whether the situation can be remedied by the consent of the mortgagees, because it will probably be impossible to get them all to consent, although many of them, such as the large insurance companies and others, now realize the situation. They realize that the farmer can not pay; that it is impossible for him to do so, but it is impossible through no negligence on the part of the farmers; it is a part of the economic collapse that has taken the whole country in its grasp.

We have read of moratoriums being extended by mortgagees; but unless moratoriums provide either for the cancellation of a part of the debt or a very material lowering of the rates of interests, moratoriums will not save agriculture. I make that prophecy now. We must go still farther. The proposal contained in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is only a step. It is, however, an important one, and I simply wanted, on the part of the farmers of America, so far as I may be able to voice their sentiment, to say that we do not want to convey to the President any idea that he should not take hold of this matter because this amendment is not successful.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. In view of the numerous agencies which have been employed by the Government in lending money, I want to join the Senator in expressing the hope that not only will we have an elimination of these overlapping agencies and a concentration into one but a radical change in the method of dealing directly with the farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad the Senator makes that suggestion, first, because I want the President and his assistants on whom he must rely to make this change, to find, as they necessarily will if they study the RECORD, that the Senator from South Carolina has always been one of those who have been trying to remedy the condition of the farmers, and to know that, in his judgment, this reorganization must take place.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator will bear me out in the statement, I think, that the trouble with most of the projects we have had is that there have been too many cream separators between the plan and the farmer, so that when it got through the cream separators and got to the farmer it was hardly blue milk and did him no good; the whole thing was dissipated in the process, and the farmer received no benefit.

Mr. NORRIS. That reminds me, Mr. President—probably I referred to it in general terms, but I want specifically to do so now—that in all the various remedies which were offered from time to time as substitutes for the remedies that were proposed by the Agricultural Committee there always was a whole lot of machinery; the plan proposed was top-heavy; and if the farmer borrowed any money it had to reach him through the medium of some bank——

Mr. SMITH. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. Or some other institution, each one of which necessarily and properly had to get compensation for its part in the transaction.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I can fairly state that the inspiration for this amendment came from my observation of some farmers who needed loans and were utterly bewildered to know where to apply or how to apply, and from my own bewilderment when I tried to help them, and from my further bewilderment when I came to contrast the different laws. I said, while the Senator from Nebraska was not in the Chamber, that research showed that loans were made to farmers and to cooperatives at rates of interest varying all the way from one-eighth of 1 per cent per annum up to 7 per cent per annum. Obviously, if the first rate of interest is right, the second is outrageous.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator stated the rate of interest as being from one-eighth of a per cent to what?

Mr. REED. Loans are being made to some cooperatives at a rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent a year, while other loans are being made by the recently organized Agricultural Credit Corporation at the rate of 7 per cent a year. I do not see why one farmer should have to pay interest fifty-six times greater than another farmer. I think that a consolidation of these institutions will eliminate such unfairness and inequality.

Mr. NORBECK. I know of instances where farmers under the intermediate-credit plan pay as much as 15 per cent by the time the extra charges are counted up, but I thought it was only the great shipping interest that received a favored rate of interest. Where do the farmers come in for a favored rate of interest and in what amount?

Mr. REED. Obviously, those cooperatives who are getting money at one-eighth of 1 per cent are getting money too cheaply.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator means they are getting the benefit of short-time Treasury certificates that are sold for making short-time loans?

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. NORBECK. There are only a very few of them, are there not?

Mr. REED. There are not very many.

Mr. NORBECK. The shipping interests get long-term money at very nominal rates, do they not?

Mr. REED. It is perfectly outrageous that the shipping companies should do so.

Mr. NORBECK. Will the Senator bear with me if I ask him to tell what he now proposes to do? Does he propose to bring the low ones up or the high ones down, or what?

Mr. REED. That will be up to the board when it shall be created, but I should think that the high ones ought to come down, and come down quickly, and the quickest way to do it is to have the whole business in one hand.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not so sure about that. The Treasury of the United States pays one-eighth of 1 per cent for money in some cases and 3 or 4 per cent in other cases.

Mr. REED. That is right, but it does not pay 15 per cent in any case.

Mr. NORBECK. But here is the argument we are faced with when we go before a board and plead that 15 per cent or 13 per cent or 12 per cent is too high a rate for the farmer: It is first said that the Government must obtain the money by the sale of bonds; and, second, that there is this expense and that expense and the other expense, and that the charge only represents the cost. Then another group comes along and says "The Government can get money at one-eighth of 1 per cent now." "Yes; but we can only get it for a short time." "Well, can we have a little of that?" "You can, for a short time."

The point is, there are so many different systems that I do not see how to harmonize them, although I pride myself on the fact that when the intermediate-credit plan was pending on this floor I was one Senator who said it was bound to be a failure and a disappointment to the farmer. That was seven or eight years ago; and the bill was written by Republican leaders and by Democratic leaders, and it was hailed all over this Nation as "relief for the farmer," and it is under that bill that they are paying 10, 13, 14, and 15 per cent interest.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORBECK. But how does the Senator propose to remedy that?

Mr. REED. The Senator has not heard the amendment. The amendment merely requests the President to report to Congress that way which, in his judgment, is wisest for consolidating all these lending organizations.

Mr. NORBECK. My best guess is that by the time you get some more consolidations the farmer will pay more for his money.

Mr. REED. Well, perhaps. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. Will not somebody allow me to say just a word in my own time?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

This is not a denial or abridgment in any way of the power which we gave the President in the amendments to the economy act. It is merely a respectful request to the President to act on it, and to call his attention—for what service we may be—to the overlapping of these different institutions.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. Is the joint-stock land bank included in this?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. Why include a private organization that has made a failure of its own business, and wants to unload its losses on the Government in the name of the farmer?

Mr. REED. I can hear the Senator distinctly.

Mr. NORBECK. I hope the Senator can.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. Let me answer this question first.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The joint-stock land bank is one of those institutions that are lending money to the farmer. It is not named in my request. It is not named in the amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. But the Senator says it is included.

Mr. REED. It is one of the six organizations that are lending money.

Mr. NORBECK. In other words, here we are passing some legislation for the relief of a private money-loaning corporation, and it is not even named in the amendment!

Mr. REED. If the Senator will read the amendment——

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator admits that it includes it. Am I right?

Mr. REED. No; if the Senator will let me finish the sentence, I think I can explain the matter to him.

Mr. NORBECK. All right. I understood the Senator to say it was included as one of the six, but I will give the Senator a chance to finish. Certainly I will. I would not have interrupted the Senator if I had not understood him to say it was one of the six included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest to the Senator from South Dakota, who was absent when the point of order was raised by the Senator from Arkansas, that the point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania was sustained by the Chair.

Mr. NORBECK. I make no appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now, in order that I may ask him a question?

Mr. REED. Yes; gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is exactly on the point last raised by the Senator from Pennsylvania that I take my main issue. I thought I made that clear when I interrupted the Senator from Nebraska.

The Senator said that his amendment is not a denial or an abridgment of the President's power to make consolidations under the reorganization plan in the act that we passed a day or two ago.

Mr. REED. It is not intended to be, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I tried to make plain, and I believe I can make plain if the Senator will indulge me just a moment, and I will ask him now the question whether he believes that the President has the power, under the reorganization plan referred to in the economy act to make consolidations of all bureaus and agencies which now make loans to farmers.

Mr. REED. I do, Mr. President. I agree fully with the Senator from Arkansas in what he said regarding the power that has been given to the President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Now, Mr. President, if we adopt the Senator's amendment, and it finally becomes a law, I ask the Senator—because he is a great lawyer—whether that would not constitute an abridgment of the power in the reorganization act to the extent that instead of having the authority to make the consolidations, the President will be invited to report his recommendation on this particular class of consolidations to the Congress. Would not that constitute an abridgment of the power in the reorganization act?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; because under the reorganization act the President is likewise required to report to Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but by a subsequent act, by another act, a particular class of consolidations is lifted out of the general authority of the President, and as to that particular class of consolidations he is required or invited to make recommendations to Congress, so that Congress can act.

Mr. REED. Oh, no!

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And that is the very point of my objection to the Senator's amendment. That is the reason. I think the Senator is wrong in his statement of the legal proposition that his amendment does not abridge the authority conferred upon the President in the reorganization act; and I repeat, if the Senator will indulge me in one further statement—then I will not interrupt him again; he has been very kind to yield to me—I repeat, that if we give the President the general power to make consolidations, and then say, "As to the consolidation of agencies which make loans to farmers you will please make a report to Congress recommending what consolidations shall be made," that is at least an implied modification or repeal of his authority in so far as it relates to the consolidation of farm-loaning agencies.

I thank the Senator, and will not interrupt him again.

Mr. REED. I am glad to be interrupted. I ask only a chance to answer fully the questions of the Senator.

Nothing is further from my intention than to abridge, by any implication, the power which we have already given the President to make consolidations. I should be very glad to make that clear by inserting in the amendment:

> The President is requested to report to the Congress, in accordance with the economy act of 1933—

Or any other language that any Senator might suggest, to show that there was no possible abridgment of the power given the President. I hope it will be possible to make that clear, and, with that done, that the Senator will not feel obliged to make the point of order.

Now, Mr. President, just a word or two more.

I make this proposal in perfect respect to President-elect Roosevelt. I do not know him; but I am told by those who do that he is a modest gentleman, and I know that he would not claim to be omniscient. I hope that he, or those who advise him, may find some usefulness in the tabulation which I have put into the RECORD, showing the overlapping of these different institutions. It ought to be a convenience to anyone who studies this problem. It is not the intention, by this amendment, to embarrass him or restrict him in any way, but merely to call to his attention our realization that these different relief methods—for which we alone are to blame, for which he is not in any way to blame—do overlap, are expensive in administration, and are perfectly bewildering to the farmers that they are intended to help.

I hope that the Senator, if it were made clear that no abridgment of the President's power was intended, would not feel it necessary to make the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words with reference to the subject under discussion.

It should be said that the Economy Committee considered at quite some length the very subject referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania in his amendment. The committee secured figures as to the number of employees of the various agencies, and finally determined that inasmuch as the committee was reporting the reorganization provisions which were finally adopted by the Senate it would not be wise to attempt to coordinate and consolidate certain activities, but that it should be left to the President to include in a comprehensive scheme of consolidations to be considered by him hereafter.

I know that the information furnished by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be of great value to any official associated with the President elect who undertakes to go into that matter.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator; and if, in fact, the information reaches him through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it is just as effective as reaching him through the text of the bill itself.

I know that the Chair is right in sustaining the point of order.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] extending emergency Federal-aid appropriations for 1934 be reconsidered. I desire to discuss the matter a little further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada moves to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asked to be recognized to debate his motion. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES. As I understand, the Senator wishes to discuss the subject. He can discuss it on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ODDIE. I should like to have the matter reconsidered, Mr. President, because I want to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have his motion put now?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: My attention was distracted. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has moved to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. The present occupant of the Chair is not acquainted with the motion to which reference is made. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina can explain it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I can in a minute explain the effect of the amendment.

At the request of the officials of the Bureau of Public Roads, the Appropriations Committee unanimously authorized me to offer the amendment, which does simply this: It gives to the Bureau of Public Roads the right to spend money which was appropriated by the relief act of June, 1932, beyond July 1 and until January 1, 1934.

The necessity for the amendment arises out of the language in the emergency act which provided that the funds therein appropriated could be used only for work upon the Federal-aid system performed prior to July 1, 1933; and the officials of the bureau declared that there were pending a number of contracts which could not be completed by July 1, and, if not completed, the funds which had been allotted could not be used to pay for the work; that failure to do this would result in an effort on the part of the contractors to hasten the completion of the work, and would result in inefficient work being done upon these contracts. They therefore asked that the date be changed from July 1, 1933, to January 1, 1934.

The department recommended that it be done. The proposal was sent to the Bureau of the Budget, and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget recommended it. A bill providing for the extension has been reported favorably by the Committee on Roads in the House; and the Senate to-day, acting upon that statement of facts, adopted the amendment which extended the time in which this work might be performed from July 1, 1933, to January 1, 1934.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. KING. How much will that call for as an additional appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES. No appropriation. The situation simply is that the unusual language of the emergency appropriation act, differing from that of all other acts, provided that the funds therein appropriated could be used to pay only for work performed prior to July 1st; so that if the contract is under construction to-day, and is not completed by the date of July 1st, the money can not be paid. It applies to many of the western States, where weather conditions have been such that it was feared that the work could not be completed by July 1st, and that it might be essential, therefore, to have this power to use the funds to pay on contracts which have been entered into.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ODDIE. Did the Chair state the question? Did the Chair rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated the question, the question being the motion of the Senator from Nevada that the vote whereby the Senate adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina should be reconsidered. The Chair was in doubt, and was about to ask for a division when the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] asked for an explanation of the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, under reconsideration it will be perfectly proper to discuss this matter. There is a phase of it that I desire to discuss.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is debatable.

Mr. NORBECK. Would the motion of the Senator from Nevada to increase the road authorization for 1934 and 1935, authorizing $125,000,000 for each of those years, be in order as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, that question is not before the Senate now. I want a vote on my motion to reconsider.

Mr. NORBECK. Is it in order to speak on the subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. NORBECK. If I understand it correctly, the situation is simply this, that there is no standing or permanent organization for highway work. Appropriations are made each year, but ahead of an appropriation must be an authorization. The authorization for the coming year passed the Senate, but is hung up in the House, and the amount of money spent last year for highways was about $125,000,000, and this year it is about one-third of that. But even that will not be available unless there is some authorization. The appropriation we are about to make will be invalid unless an authorization is connected with it in some way.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, there is more in this than that. I would like to have the matter opened up so that we can discuss it intelligently and study it from a certain angle from which it has not been studied yet. I will ask for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to reconsider.

On a division, the motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I will discuss a feature of this matter which has not yet been discussed.

The emergency highway act which was passed last year, and the provisions of which have just been extended for another year under the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], provided for temporary advances of road funds to the States, to be repaid from regular Federal-aid road funds. The amount apportioned to any State under this paragraph in last year's emergency road act may be used to match the regular annual Federal-aid apportionments made to such State.

Then it provides that—

> The amount so advanced shall be reimbursed to the Federal Government over a period of 10 years, commencing with the fiscal year 1938, by making annual deductions from regular Federal-aid appropriations made from future obligations carrying out the provisions of such act as amended and supplemented.

Mr. President, two years ago, as has been pointed out, Congress appropriated $80,000,000 for this emergency-relief road work. That legislation provided that the money would be repaid one-fifth each year for five years. The emergency relief legislation passed last year provided for the return in 10 annual installments, commencing with the year 1938, such installments to be paid from the regular Federal-aid road appropriations.

Mr. President, what has been done? We have appropriated money for this emergency relief road work, and we have provided by law that that money must be repaid by the States from money the States received under the Federal aid. We have induced the States to accept that money on the assurance that it would be repaid from moneys advanced under these schedules by the Federal Government for Federal aid to the States.

Mr. President, what have we done? We have killed Federal-aid road work in the United States, and Congress has broken faith with the States and with the people in the States. Our Government was not constituted to break faith with the States and with the people. Our Government has been built upon a more solid and secure foundation than that. The Congress has just pulled the foundation stones from under the Governmental structure by this action. What we have done to-day in accepting the Byrnes amendment and rejecting my amendment is a weak subterfuge by extending this emergency work instead of the honest action we should have taken in adopting my amendment and continuing Federal aid. The Senate is refusing to carry out the Government's part of its honest contract.

Mr. President, the Government has induced the States for a number of years past to go ahead with a road-building program. The States have done that. They have believed—and they had a right to believe—that the Federal Government was honest in making its promises, requests, and assurances to them. The States had a right to believe that that money would not be cut off before the Government's obligations were carried out.

Mr. President, a grave mistake has been made to-day. I hope that some way will be found to correct it and protect the good name of our Government. This emergency road legislation was passed last year. We all gave our support to it. It was done for the relief of the unemployed. It was shown—and I myself showed, on the floor of the Senate—that the passage of that legislation would furnish employment to a million men, directly and indirectly, working on the roads, in the mines, and mills, and factories, and smelters, and in the oil and coal fields, producing materials for the road work.

Now, Congress has deliberately notified the country that this road work will stop. It is not fair and it is not honest. Congress, in doing this, will throw a million men out of employment and into the ranks of the unemployed this next year.

Mr. President, we have spent months here, and a great deal of time and energy, in trying to find means for relieving the unemployment problem. It is our duty, and we have worked hard on it. Whether we have acted wisely or not I can not say, but we have worked hard to find methods of putting these millions of men back to work; and now, in this cowardly, dishonest way, we are providing for throwing a million men out of employment in the next year.

Is that the way for Congress to act? Are we, as Americans, to stand here and see our fellow Americans thrown into the gutter to starve? I do not believe in being a calamity howler; I have raised my voice on the floor of the Senate numbers of times in advising that we take the optimistic view, that we take the hopeful view, and the encouraging view; that we try to put some measure of hope and encouragement into the hearts of the American people; that we work on the psychology of the problem and try to make people believe that at least the worst is over, that we are on the upgrade again. But what have we done to-day? We have in this manner, which I consider below the dignity of Congress, notified the people of the United States that we will throw a million more men out of employment; that we will stop the wheels of industry to this extent.

Mr. President, I pointed out last year that in 1931 there were shipped on the railroads 3,300,000 carloads of material used in the road-building enterprises of the United States. That will be stopped, and in addition to causing suffering and privation to the people of the United States by throwing a million men out of work, the action taken to-day will deprive the railroads of freight which would employ possibly several million cars. Anybody can estimate the unfortunate and serious result of this action in increased unemployment and suffering in our country.

Mr. President, a terrible mistake has been made. I do not feel that the Members of the Senate have intentionally done this thing. I feel that it has been done because they have been busy with so many other difficult and absorbing problems that they have not had the time or the opportunity to give this one the attention it deserves.

I have moved for a reconsideration. The Senate has outvoted me. I did not ask for the yeas and nays, because I thought it was not necessary. I do not believe in complaining when I have lost, but I have been working on this road legislation for many years; I have led the fight on the floor of the Senate against bitter attacks and against efforts to eliminate road building, and through the help of numbers of Senators, who have given this matter thought, we have been successful, and we have kept the Federal-aid road building going up to this time.

Mr. President, I do not want to see Federal aid stopped, as it will be stopped if the action of this afternoon is carried through. I do not know whether the rules of the Senate permit action on this question a second time, but I would like to have the yeas and nays on my motion. I would like to offer my amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill itself, which amendment was ruled out of order as an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill. I would like the opportunity of offering it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. I believe that when the Members of the Senate understand it and study it, they will vote with me in this matter. I ask the Chair if the matter can be presented a second time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question may not be voted on a second time.

Mr. ODDIE. I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will consent to the yeas and nays being taken. I think it may be done by unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that we may have the yeas and nays on my motion, it is so important.

Mr. BRATTON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ODDIE. I place in the record a letter just received from one of the ablest and best informed men in the United States on highway legislation and highway matters, W. C. Markham, executive secretary of the American Association of State Highway Officials, which gives the correct condition on this matter and which shows the necessity of the adopting of my amendment. It is as follows:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1933.

Senator TASKER L. ODDIE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ODDIE: In further consideration of the Federal cooperation with the States in the building of roads and in the earnest effort being made to give relief to the unemployment situation, permit me to call your attention to the fact that under date of February 1, 1933, a statement of the Bureau of Public Roads shows that in the regular Federal-aid funds remaining for new contracts there was but $18,000,000 available for this purpose and one-half of this amount is available for but 5 of the 48 States.

In the emergency funds made available last year by the Congress there are but $12,500,000 remaining and a large number of States have no funds at all under this appropriation.

The failure of the Congress to pass S. 36, known as the Oddie bill, which received the unanimous approval of the Senate some months since, there will be no funds for continued work along this line beyond the amounts above referred to.

In addition to all of this it should be borne in mind that the Federal Government in making the two previous emergency appropriations provided for a deduction over a period of years from future Federal authorizations for roads. Then in addition to this the Congress during the last session, in providing emergency funds for "relief" or "work relief," appropriated $300,000,000 to be loaned to the States through the governors' authorization and provided that this fund must be deducted over a period of five years from future authorizations for roads—and yet this fund is not used for building roads—and these funds carry an interest item of 3 per cent annually.

Up to the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned to a majority of the States more than one-half of this amount.

In view of this situation it can readily be seen that even with the amount of authorization provided for in S. 36, when the above-referred-to items are deducted year by year, the Federal contribution to the construction of highways direct will be greatly reduced.

I am sending you this information in order that you may appreciate the entire situation as it appears to the State highway departments who are obligated, along with the Federal Government, in carrying on this work.

Very sincerely,

W. C. MARKHAM,
Executive Secretary.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that the clerks be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the motion for a reconsideration of the vote were carried, would not the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina be subject to a point of order?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

Mr. SWANSON. Then all these Government appropriations for aid would stop on the 1st of July?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I rise to offer a motion to change the amount provided for the purchase of land for migratory bird refuges. The authorization is $1,000,000 annually. It will be recalled that the Senate decided to strike out the license fee and instead gave a large authorization. The Budget pared it down to about one-fifth or less. I want to offer an amendment to change it back to the Budget figures from which the House committee reduced it to the amount named in the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that. The Director of the Budget has authorized it, and it includes payment for contracts and options for land.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much does it increase the appropriation?

Mr. McNARY. About $100,000. It is to meet situations involved in contracts and options for the purchase of land.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see how it is possible for us to spend more money on the purchase of land.

Mr. McNARY. I am willing to take the matter to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota send the amendment to the desk?

Mr. NORBECK. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 63, line 1, strike out "$89,525" and insert in lieu thereof "$194,300."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was necessarily detained from the Chamber for a moment. May I ask an explanation of the amendment? As I understand, it is an increase in the appropriation for the acquisition of land for game refuges.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; but we are not going as strong as the Senator from Utah did on the refuge in Utah. This is for the whole United States.

Mr. KING. I do not understand the Senator's reference.

Mr. NORBECK. I am in favor of game refuges. I am suggesting that we are holding it way down even with this slight increase.

Mr. KING. How much is carried in the appropriation bill for that purpose?

Mr. McNARY. Eighty-nine thousand dollars, in round numbers, against more than $1,000,000 authorized last year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

There being no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES—CARE OF UNEMPLOYED AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a notice of a motion to suspend the rule in connection with the War Department appropriation bill and ask to have it lie over until to-morrow under the rule.

The notice was read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of Rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, viz:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to provide for the admission to any military post of the United States, without enlistment in the Army, of any unmarried male person between the ages of 17 and 24, both inclusive, who is without means of support and who shall apply at any such post within one year after the date of enactment of this act and give satisfactory evidence to the commanding officer thereof that he is unemployed at the time of application and that he has been continuously unemployed for at least six months prior to such time. The Secretary of War shall further provide for housing, feeding, and clothing any such person upon his admission to any such post for a period of not to exceed one year from the date of enactment of this act.

"Any person admitted to any military post pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this section shall, so far as practicable, be subject to the customary discipline maintained at such post and shall participate in all forms of beneficial and healthful exercise.

"Any person admitted to any military post pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this section who shall withdraw permanently from such post, or who shall absent himself temporarily therefrom without the authority of the commanding officer thereof, shall no longer be entitled to the benefits of this section at such post.

"The Secretary of War is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section."

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill, Calendar No. 1248.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that the bill may be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments may be first considered.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would not make that request to-night. I want to discuss at some length to-morrow adding to the bill a provision to take care of the unemployed youth of the country, and I am not sure that I shall be ready to do so quite so promptly as the action proposed would require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, to-morrow as soon as I can get an opportunity I want to take some time to say something about what we have in the Congressional Library. It shall take something like an hour to say what I want to say. That might give the Senator from Michigan the time he needs.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, earlier in the day I promised that if we finished the consideration of the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill and the War Department appropriation bill was made the unfinished business, I would ask for an adjournment so that we might have a morning hour to-morrow during which we would complete the call of the calendar which was begun to-day.

Mr. REED. If I could get the consent for which I have asked, I would move an adjournment so we could have a morning hour to-morrow. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] would use an hour in his speech, as he states. I think the Senator from Michigan would have plenty of time.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not the Senator think that it is just as well to wait until to-morrow to submit his request? I wish he would do so.

Mr. REED. Very well; I will do so.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered in New York City on February 5, 1933, by the Hon. Frank P. Walsh.

Mr. Walsh has long been known to the Members of this body. While he has never held a salaried public office, he was twice drafted by President Wilson to serve as chairman of the Industrial Relations Commission in 1914 and joint chairman of the War Labor Board, with the late Chief Justice Taft, in 1917. For two years he has served by appointment of President-elect Roosevelt as chairman of the Power Authority of the State of New York, a board of trustees set up to protect and develop the State's water-power resources on the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. Walsh was a member of the party which recently inspected the Government plants at Muscle Shoals. His address, while very brief, gives an admirable picture of the development there, with an authoritative exposition of its great value and significance for the people of the entire country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

Muscle Shoals forms a part of the national water-power program which will receive action at the hands of the new administration after March 4.

The President elect has stated his purpose to place the support of the Federal Government squarely behind four great power projects:

(1) Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, in the Southeast; (2) Boulder Dam, on the Colorado River, in the Southwest; (3) the Columbia River project, in the Pacific Northwest; and (4) the project of the State of New York on the St. Lawrence, in the Northeast.

This program, reaching every section of the country, will give employment to hundreds of thousands of idle men. It will draw upon the labor of millions of workers in basic industries for supplies and services and for the manufacture and transportation of materials and machinery.

Its ultimate result will be to afford the mass of the American people a direct share in the benefits of our God-given natural resources and the wealth they produce. It will furnish an abundant supply of cheap electric current to rural and domestic consumers, cities and States, and industry alike. This will mean, not only an immediate stimulus from useful public works to combat the depression, but also a permanent increase in the purchasing power and in the comfort and happiness of the people of the entire country.

During the administration of Theodore Roosevelt the imagination of the people was stirred and their enterprise quickened by the undertaking of the Panama Canal and the irrigation and reclamation projects in the West. The work of construction planned for the new administration at Washington will have even more profound results throughout the Nation.

As a part of this national program it is certain that the development in the Tennessee Valley will command first attention because work has already been advanced from the stage of engineering blue prints to reality at Muscle Shoals.

This section of the Tennessee River has been recognized for 100 years as a potential supply of an enormous volume of cheap power. It was not until the World War, however, that the Federal Government undertook the work of development, for which private capital was not available because of the vast size of the project. At that time the United States found itself dependent upon foreign sources of supply for nitrates for the production of explosives.

Two plants for extracting nitrogen from the air were built at Muscle Shoals in 1918 at a cost of about $85,000,000. The act of Congress provided that these plants should be held by the Government as a part of the scheme of national defense and put to use for manufacturing fertilizer in times of peace. They remain in excellent stand-by condition to-day, though their utility for commercial production of fertilizer is a subject of controversy, arising from the development of new processes in the industry.

In addition to the nitrate plants, Congress provided for the development of a huge block of water power known at that time to exceed the requirements for nitrate production. The act of Congress specifically declared that "the plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital."

Upon these terms the Wilson Dam was erected near the tricities of Florence, Sheffield, and Tuscombia, in northwest Alabama. The cost properly chargeable to the production of water power was about $40,000,000. Whatever the present utility of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, this great dam is unquestionably one of the most efficient works of its kind in the world.

The dam stands at the foot of the Muscle Shoals section of the Tennessee River. The shoals extend about 37 miles above the dam, with a vertical fall of 134 feet, forming an impassable barrier to navigation at low water.

The Tennessee River which passes over these shoals is formed by the confluence of two smaller streams near Knoxville, Tenn. It flows southwest through that State and west across northern Alabama, turning north across Tennessee and Kentucky to empty into the Ohio River at Paducah, Ky. From Knoxville to its mouth, the river is 650 miles in length, forming the largest tributary of the Ohio River. The Muscle Shoals section begins 250 miles upstream from the mouth of the river, near the Government's plant.

Two weeks ago to-day I watched the impounded waters of the Tennessee rushing at a rate of 65 miles an hour through the spillways of the Wilson Dam. The dam is built on a foundation of solid rock, rising to a height of 95 feet. It is nearly a mile long and is surmounted by a bridge 20 feet wide. The spillways, 58 in number, extend in an unbroken tier of arches across the river, each with piers 8 feet thick and openings 38 feet long, with a discharge capacity per second of 10,000 cubic feet.

Backed up behind the dam, the waters of the Tennessee form a lake 17 miles long with a pool surface area of 14,500 acres. This stupendous volume of impounded water furnishes sufficient force at the Wilson Dam to produce 261,000 horsepower with only 8 of the 18 turbine units installed. The ultimate power capacity at the dam, with full installation, is 610,000 horsepower. This is the equivalent of the energy of an army of nearly 5,000,000 men.

It is a tragic spectacle to see this immense store of energy at Muscle Shoals spending itself virtually unused. All the vast construction of 1,353,000 cubic yards of masonry and the machinery are there to convert the water power into electric current. But the waters which have been impounded above the dam are to-day largely permitted to run to waste through the spillways.

Since the completion of the Wilson Dam in 1925, Congress has twice passed bills to complete the project and to authorize transmission lines and the sale of current to States, cities, and farm cooperatives. The Executive has twice vetoed this legislation. The result is that after eight years no transmission lines have been built except those which serve the Alabama Power Co. This corporation absorbs all the current now produced at Muscle Shoals, representing only one-fifth of the installed capacity at the Wilson Dam.

One can not inspect the works at Muscle Shoals without reflecting that the policy which has virtually wasted the power developed at the Wilson Dam, whatever its motives, has amounted to the sabotage of a great public enterprise.

We may confidently look forward to-day to a reversal of that policy under the Roosevelt administration. The giant strength of Muscle Shoals will be unbound and put to work. The construction of another dam upstream at Cove Creek will double the primary horsepower that can be produced. At the same time destructive floods can be eliminated and a 9-foot channel provided for the river's full length of 650 miles.

The Tennessee is rich in tradition, with an epic history. In its valley were fought some of the fiercest battles of the War between the States. Not far from Muscle Shoals, Grant and Sheridan, Albert Sidney Johnston, Bragg and Cleburne once fought for the mastery of the Tennessee. When this mighty river of the South is fully harnessed it will do more work, in terms of energy, than the millions whose bonds were broken by the war.

The development of the river, to its utmost potential usefulness, will widen the opportunities and promote the comfort of millions of families in their homes throughout the South. Housewives will be freed from the drudgery of the kitchen and the washtub. Cheap current will permit the economical use of modern electrical appliances and create a new demand for their manufacture and sale.

In view of the giant strides that have been made in the perfection of electrical heating and refrigerating systems, it is not inconceivable that the South will one day draw from Muscle Shoals the means of moderating the chill of the mild winter and the terrific heat of the summer in the homes of that section. Atlanta, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Memphis, and Nashville are within a radius of 200 miles of Muscle Shoals and so rapid is the advance in the effective transmission of current that cities like Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Louisville may ultimately be brought within the market for power from Muscle Shoals.

The great project now about to be realized has been the dream of Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska. More than any other one man he has contributed to its fulfillment. Almost single-handed in the years immediately following the World War he fought through one session of Congress after another, against a powerful lobby, to prevent the abandonment of the project and later to block the leasing of the power houses to private interests. He was the author of both bills passed by Congress, and vetoed by the Executive, providing for transmission lines to distribute current and for completion of the power development. He has worked out a plan under which the project, when completed, will be self-sustaining. This can be accomplished without charging excessive rates to consumers, without floating questionable securities in which the life savings of families will be lost, and with ultimate benefit, through the creation of an increased demand and of new uses for electricity, to the power and public-utility industry itself.

The plants at Muscle Shoals are to-day being administered with great efficiency by the Engineering Corps of the United States Army. Upon the completion of the project the works will comprise one of the largest developments of its kind on the public domain.

We now have high assurance that one of the greatest natural resources of our country will be fully developed, to endure for all time as a monument to those who have had the vision and courage to preserve it and the statesmanship to devote it to the service of the American people.

DEPRECIATION OF FOREIGN CURRENCIES

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk a statement made by the Secretary of Commerce yesterday with regard to the depreciation of foreign currencies, and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Serious concern over the depreciated-currency situation which exists to-day in about 40 principal foreign countries is indicated by the rapidly increasing volume of correspondence reaching the department, supplemented by an unprecedented number of personal visits by business men.

An examination of the latest available foreign trade statistics does not indicate that we are experiencing what might be termed a flood of imports. The total quantity of goods imported during 1932 was 20 per cent less than in 1931 and 39 per cent smaller than in 1929. Imports of many commodities, however, are increasing, particularly of dutiable or largely competitive products.

The export trade of these depreciated-currency countries accounted for approximately 45 per cent (by value) of the total amount of goods moving in international trade during both 1930 and 1931. Of the total imports into the United States during 1932, approximately 60 per cent (by value) were from countries whose exchange is now depreciated. Of course a large part of this 60 per cent consists of commodities noncompetitive with our industries.

Commodities numbering 232 were imported in greater volume during 1932 than in 1931. Of this number, however, 75 were free of duty (largely noncompetitive products) and 157 were dutiable (largely competitive products). Excluding free imports from the Philippines and the Virgin Islands, approximately 10 per cent of the free goods (by value) were imported in increased quantities. In the case of dutiable goods, imports accounting for 18 per cent of the total value of dutiable goods were received in increased quantities.

Time is required for large-scale trading in commodities. The extent to which import competition in our domestic trade has developed during the past year, as a result of depreciated currencies, is not an adequate indication of the potential development.

From the standpoint of mechanics alone, a lag of several months must occur between the time a foreign currency begins to depreciate and the time when imports of individual commodities begin to increase. The depreciated-currency country must have or develop an exportable surplus. The foreign producer must arrange for United States agents or distributors, who in turn must develop or extend the market. This takes time. Even after this has been done the growth of imports may be temporarily stopped or retarded by "less-than-cost selling" by American producers. But a policy so ruinous and uneconomic can not long be maintained. Statistics for 1932 should therefore be taken, not as a measure of effect, but merely as an indication of the direction in which these forces are working.

The wholesale price level in the United States is far out of line with levels prevailing in principal depreciated-currency countries. In most countries the suspension of gold payments halted the continuous decline in wholesale prices (in terms of depreciated currency) that has been under way since 1929. For the most part the increases in wholesale prices (in terms of depreciated currency) have been small and the general movement during the past year has tended to be horizontal. Foreign wholesale prices in terms of American gold dollars, on the other hand, have continued downward. In no instance has the increase in foreign wholesale prices (in terms of foreign currency) been sufficient to offset the effects or depreciation in exchange, even making allowances for the decline in United States prices.

The following figures provide a rough indication of the average changes in United States and foreign prices since depreciation set in:

| | Per cent change [1] | Per cent change, United States wholesale prices during same period |
|---|---|---|
| Australia | [2]—58.8 | [2]—31.7 |
| British India | —37.7 | —14.5 |
| Canada | —21.6 | —13.2 |
| Denmark | —30.4 | —13.2 |
| Egypt | —44.2 | —13.2 |
| Finland | —35.6 | —12.1 |
| Japan | [2]—46.4 | [2]—9.0 |
| Norway | —35.3 | —13.2 |
| Sweden | —33.7 | —13.2 |
| United Kingdom | —31.5 | —13.2 |

[1] Foreign wholesale prices in terms of United States dollars from month before depreciation set in to December, 1932.
[2] November, 1932.

If currencies were depreciating in comparatively few countries, costs of production and price levels in those countries would seek the levels prevailing in stable-currency countries. But with conditions as they are to-day—more than half of the world's trade being carried on by depreciated-currency countries and stocks of important raw materials and foodstuffs exceedingly large—costs of production and prices in gold-standard countries tend to seek the levels prevailing in nongold countries. Until the costs of production and prices of some of our commodities are further reduced or some tariff adjustments made imports should tend to supply an increasing proportion of our domestic needs.

The advantages possessed by a country on account of depreciated currency or, conversely, the disadvantages suffered by a country on a gold basis from countries having depreciated currencies, although they can not be permanent, may be sufficiently prolonged to seriously injure some producers in the country on a gold basis, especially when so many countries are affected as at present. Lower costs of production abroad as a result of depreciated currencies not only may result in the domestic producer losing part of his domestic markets but will probably also result in his losing part, if not all, of his share of sales in world markets. Depreciated currencies, therefore, have an important and adverse effect on export trade. Furthermore, the increased import at a lower price not only shrinks the market supplied by domestic production but also may make it impossible for the domestic producer to establish a reasonable price.

Inquiries reaching the department indicate that business men are as much concerned over disrupting influence of foreign quotations, as evidenced by the hesitation in placement of domestic orders, as they are over the actual volume of goods coming in at this time from countries with depreciated currencies.

Thus it may be seen that depreciated world currencies tend to increase our imports and to decrease our exports as well as to disturb proper price relationships.

DISABILITY ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Capt. William A. Fox, judge advocate of the Western

Council of New York, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, entitled "The disability allowance of payments under section 200, World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended July 3, 1930, is absolutely justified."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be entered.

The statement is as follows:

THE DISABILITY ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS UNDER SECTION 200 WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT, 1924, AS AMENDED JULY 3, 1930, IS ABSOLUTELY JUSTIFIED

The payments now being made to veterans of the World War as a disability allowance are being made under the World War veterans' act, section 200, which was amended July 3, 1930. These payments, amounting at the present time to approximately $104,000,000 annually, are based upon substantial justice to the World War veterans receiving the same, and to any World War veterans who in the future may become disabled to a sufficient degree, that is, 25 per cent, who may receive the same from the Government. The clamor and the propaganda of the National Economy League and kindred organizations against this particular allowance to the veterans is based on the very narrow point of view that because the disabilities suffered by the veterans may not have been actually connected with the service therefore they should not receive any payment for the same, and many of the proponents of this theory are calling such an allowance a "dole" to a special class of veterans.

During the war there were at least 3,500,000 men in the service, the great percentage of whom took out war-risk insurance policies, and when the war was over and they were discharged from the service the great majority of them dropped their insurance policies, mainly through inability to continue the payment of premiums. The average length of service of these men who were war-risk insurance-policy holders was 10 months, and the minimum premium they paid was $5 per month, which was deducted from their pay, thus leaving in the hands of the Government these forfeited premiums which, according to a conservative estimate, would amount to at least $100,000,000. What did the Government do with this vast amount of money which was forfeited by these needy veterans who could not afford to maintain their insurance policies after their discharge from the service? Instead of taking this enormous sum of money and arranging for some form of sick and accident insurance for the benefit of these veterans, the Government placed this money in the war-risk-insurance fund where it remained for the benefit of these policyholders who could afford to keep their policies alive, and they reaped the benefits of this money at the expense of their needy comrades. It was also from this money that loans were made later on to the holders of adjusted-service certificates at the scandalous interest rates of 7, 8, and 9 per cent, back in the years of 1926, 1927, 1928, and 1929.

I have been informed by insurance experts that the cost of accident and sick insurance which would have paid the veteran $12 per month in benefits, which is the average amount paid under the disability allowance law, would be approximately $3 per year. At this rate, the average veteran who had forfeited approximately $50 to the Government when he was compelled to drop his war-risk insurance, because of poverty, would have been entitled to such sick and accident insurance for a period of about 16 years. Inasmuch as the disability allowance law was passed July 3, 1930, this would mean that any veteran suffering from a disability of sickness or otherwise would be entitled to be protected by the benefits of such sickness and accident insurance until 1946, so that any veteran now receiving the disability allowance or who in the future shall receive a disability allowance until the year 1946 is only receiving from the Government a benefit that he has paid for.

Not alone are the veterans receiving the disability allowance entitled to the same because they have paid for it, but in addition thereto a great many thousands of these veterans are receiving this payment because of the fact that even though they are suffering from disabilities incurred in or connected with the war service, they are unable to prove the same under the technical requirements of the Veterans' Administration for the reason that we well know, that many of the doctors who treated them immediately after their discharge have died, or moved away, or have destroyed or lost their records, so that the necessary testimony can not be procured or furnished by the veteran. It certainly can not be fairly argued that such men are receiving the disability allowance without justification. I am informed and believe that there are thousands upon thousands of these borderline cases, and I personally have come in contact with hundreds of them. Another class of veterans drawing the disability allowance are those who have put in claims for service-connected compensation, but whose claims have not as yet been adjudicated and are temporarily receiving the disability-allowance payments until their compensation claims are passed upon by the Veterans' Administration and then, if successful, their disability-allowance payments will cease. Surely no one can fairly object to these disability-allowance payments to this class of veterans.

It is therefore clearly evident to the fair-minded and justly thinking American that had the Government done its full duty by the veteran when he was discharged from the service, and, instead of grabbing the paid-in premiums from the poor veterans who could not afford to maintain their insurance and diverting them to the benefit of his better-fixed comrades, applied the same scientifically for the benefit of these veterans who were compelled to drop their insurance, it would have provided them from the very beginning with a scientific protection against sickness and accident from the enormous sums of money making up the forfeited premiums, and have provided a scientific substitute for the disability allowance law 10 years before.

ECONOMIC SITUATION OF HOG PRODUCERS (S. DOC. NO. 184)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair) laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 281 (72d Cong., 1st sess.), a report based on a study made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics pertaining to the hog situation and the probable effects of the proposed export debenture, equalization fee, and domestic-allotment plans for farm relief, on the economic position of hog producers, which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed with the illustrations.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 10, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful Father, beautiful for elevation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, the city of the great King. Let this ideal ever be outlined in our vision. Here all high standards and precious things are contemplated, here is the sense of the presence of God, which gives recognition and worth to wise purposes and righteous ambitions. Privileged as we are with commanding opportunities, save us from being disappointing. Let every helpful measure be used that shall give clear encouragement, enthusing our country with newness of life, which will proclaim the advent of a better day. May we never cease to care for others, but walk with them beneath the burdens they bear. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK WILKINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2531, for the relief of Frank Wilkins.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the House to the report of the Secretary of War on this bill. From it I quote:

The purpose of the bill is to pay to Frank Wilkins the sum of $200 for the death of a horse, said to have been caused by a shot from the military reservation at Fort McPherson, Ga., in December, 1925.

The records of the War Department show that on January 6, 1926, an investigation was made by the station veterinarian, Fort McPherson, Ga., of a report that a horse had been shot by a stray bullet from the rifle range at Fort McPherson. The investigation disclosed that the animal, which was claimed to have been shot on or about December 24, 1925, by some soldiers, was about 12 or 13 years old and badly crippled in front by sidebones. Mr. Wilkins, the man claiming to be the owner of the animal, after some difficulty, showed a scar on the horse's skin about 3 inches behind the point of the left elbow and on the lower third of the fifth rib, which he said was the entrance of the bullet. There was an indurated swelling all around the base of the left side of the sternum from the first rib to the sixth or seventh, slightly below this scar, and on the right side of the neck from the third vertebra to the seventh there was a diffused and soft swelling that Mr. Wilkins stated had appeared after the animal was shot. The veterinarian said he got the animal up on its feet and had it led around and that it appeared normal, but was both hungry and thirsty, and he could see no signs of approaching death, as had been reported. The veterinarian further stated that it was impossible to state that the animal's condition was caused by being shot, owing to the length of time that had elapsed since the alleged occurrence and the fact that there was no wound beyond this scar and the two swellings. The filthy stable and the want of proper care and feed should, in his opinion, be as much responsible for the animal's condition as the former injury claimed. He also stated that from the animal's age and size, and with ringbones, its value should not be more than $25.

In view of the above, the department is of the opinion that there is no valid ground to substantiate a claim with reference to the animal in question, and therefore favorable consideration of the proposed legislation is not recommended.

Sincerely yours,

PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Secretary of War.

You will note that the Secretary of War says that this horse was 13 years old and was not worth over $25, and that "the filthy stable and the want of proper care and feed was much responsible for the animal's condition." I do not think the Government ought to pay eight times as much as a horse is worth, just because the Government is charged with killing it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not think the Government should pay eight times as much as it is worth either, but if the gentleman will read the affidavit of the party who sold the horse, he will see it was worth a great deal more than $25. This horse was owned by an old colored man.

Mr. BLANTON. But I am talking about what the Secretary of War said. This is not the usual Secretary of War. This is Mr. Patrick J. Hurley who is talking. He knows all about horses. He has lived down on the Oklahoma frontier and he is familiar with these things.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is he acquainted with old horses?

Mr. RAMSPECK. But he did not go down and look at this horse. If he had, I am sure he would have recommended payment of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. He indicates that the horse died from improper keep; that he was kept in an old dirty stable, and that it was largely the filthiness of the stable that caused the horse's death.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, he is quoting some veterinarian that they sent down there.

Mr. BLANTON. I am willing to give the old colored man the benefit of the doubt about whether or not the Government caused the horse's death. If the gentleman is willing to reduce this claim to the amount which the War Department said the horse was worth, I shall not object, but if not, I shall object.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is an affidavit from the man who sold this horse to the old darky. He said he bought it just a short time before that and paid $200 for it.

Mr. BLANTON. If he paid that much, he paid too much.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Perhaps that is so; but he lost his horse.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend does not seem to know anything about the value of horses.

Mr. RAMSPECK. This happened back in 1925. I think the reduction is entirely out of line.

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the difference in price and the amount claimed?

Mr. RAMSPECK. He claims he paid $200 for it and the War Department says it was not worth $25.

Mr. BLANTON. It was an old, crippled horse, 13 years old.

Mr. RAMSPECK. But I call attention to the fact that in 1925 the price of horses was very much higher.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I could have sold the gentleman horses galore in 1925 for $25. My colleague from Amarillo could probably furnish more horses than could be shipped by a train for $25 each.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That may be so now. I do not think he could have done so at that time. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will agree to accept the amount that Secretary Hurley said this horse was worth, I shall not object. That is $25.

Mr. BLACK. All there is here is the statement of the Secretary.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

ADRIAN M. FINNEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5950, for the relief of Adrian M. Finney and others.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object—and I am inclined to object, because from my reading of the report I am led to believe that these watchmen who are sought to be recompensed by this bill were absolutely guilty of failure to perform their duty.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I wish to say that my colleague Mr. MALONEY, of New Orleans, was called from the city on account of serious illness in his family, and he asked me to explain this bill to the House. Did the gentleman read the report by the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. I have read the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. I have read the letter from the Attorney General, dated as far back as March 12, 1926, in which the Attorney General is very positive that if these men had been performing their full duty instead of sleeping at their posts, this loss would not have occurred.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Let me read to the gentleman a letter from Mr. Smith, because it is very pertinent to the case:

We were suspended December 1, 1922, pending an investigation in connection with the supposed theft of liquor. Said liquor was in the United States marshal's office, said marshal's office being in the post-office building where I am employed. Attached to the marshal's office is a storeroom in which seized liquors are kept. Following the disappearance of a number of cases of liquor five watchmen and one laborer were suspended. This liquor was in a room with a special Yale lock, and the watchmen's keys could not open said door. The keys to the storeroom were in the possession of the marshal's assistant.

After that, after the Department of Justice investigated the case, they could not find any evidence on which to connect these men with the theft of the liquor.

Mr. STAFFORD. They might not have been able to find evidence to convict them before a jury, but the fact is, as shown by the report of the agent in charge to Mr. William J. Burns, Director of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, that they caught one of these men right in the storeroom where the liquor was stored. He was asked what he was doing there and he could not give any reasonable explanation.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. If the gentleman will permit, let me read this letter:

I read Mr. George Shanton (agent in charge then) report to Mr. Burns; he stated that a Mr. Laiche hid in the storeroom at 12 o'clock at night and caught the watchman in the storeroom. That statement is unfair to me as I was the watchman that caught him in there, and it was not Mr. Laiche but a negro deputy by the name of Galberth, and this did not happen at 12 midnight, for I get off at that time; it was 8 p. m.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes that if we are going to establish the precedent of granting to men who are suspended because they have failed to do their duty compensation for the time they are under suspension where there is reasonable ground for the suspension, we would be pestered with many cases of this character.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. At the last session we passed a bill for the relief of one of these men.

Mr. BLACK. Let me say that the gentleman is standing for a principle which I do not think quite fair, and that is if a Department of Justice agent or any other investigating agent of the Government goes into a public building, investigates a situation in which the Government is interested, he can pick out a certain employee of the Government merely on his own suspicion and have him suspended. Finally, if his investigation clears the man, nothing is done to reimburse him for loss of pay during the interim of the suspension. I think that is an entirely wrong principle. I think the investigating agents of the United States Government have too much power in their dealings with fellow employees. If Congress is going to stand for the principle that merely on the agent's say-so, men can be suspended and Congress will not reimburse them for pay lost, the thing is being carried entirely too far.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is within the province of the department at any time to reimburse lost pay to a suspended individual; but I am not willing for the Congress to be an administrative body to pass upon the character of the administration of these high officers. If the Attorney General of the United States says one of them is derelict in his duty, that is another matter. In this instance I feel constrained to object.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Will the gentleman further withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve it still further.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I know the gentleman does not want to do this man an injustice.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not this man, these men.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The last Congress passed a bill granting pay to one of the men. I have the bill right here. All the present bill does is to give the other four the same consideration Congress gave one of them at the last session.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LISSIE MAUD GREEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6618, for the relief of Lissie Maud Green.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the author of the bill tell us why we should go back to 1917 or 1918 to consider this compensation claim.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, this claim arose out of the death of a rural carrier who received an injury while carrying the mails.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What kind of an injury was it, and where is it to be found in the report?

Mr. HARE. It is not set forth in the report for the reason that the evidence was to be submitted to the Employees' Compensation Commission.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What was the nature of the injury?

Mr. HARE. It was a sunstroke. I may say to the gentleman that this rural carrier lived on the same street on which I lived in Saluda. The death happened in 1921. Three years ago, in conversation with the widow of the deceased, I inquired if she were drawing compensation under the law, and she said she had never heard she was entitled to it. She filed an application with the Employees' Compensation Commission and, of course, it could not be recognized because it was more than a year after his death. This bill is purely for the purpose of giving her the right to file the claim. It does not in any way whatsoever commit the Congress to the merits of the claim.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I have an amended bill to present in place of the one the gentleman from South Carolina has presented, which provides among other things that no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act, and contains the usual attorney's fee clause.

Mr. HARE. That is all right. There is no objection to that.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to receive the claim of Lissie Maud Green, widow of Charles F. Green, as if it had been filed within the time specified by the compensation act of September 7, 1916, as amended. Any payments to be made as compensation shall begin with the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Lissie Maud Green, widow of Charles F. Green, as to whether said Charles F. Green suffered an injury while employed in the Postal Service as a rural carrier out of the office of Saluda, S. C., compensable under said act and after the date of its enactment in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Charles F. Green had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NELS D'ARCY DRAKE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1096, for the relief of Nels D'Arcy Drake.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. This is a Senate bill. Here is a man who was a midshipman in the Navy; and while on duty he was injured and his physical disability prevented him from obtaining his rank as midshipman. This situation was before the Naval Affairs Committee and it was decided that it would be a bad principle to make this man an ensign and then retire him. It was also decided that it would be out of line with the customary practice to give him a pension.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Navy Department reports that any relief extended this man should be through the medium of a pension rather than by his retirement as an ensign, and recommends against giving him any special class or privileges to which others are not entitled.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is correct. The general law takes care of this man.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and he should go along with the balance of his class and take what comes to him.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I object, Mr. Speaker.

MARTHA EDWARDS ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 811, for the relief of Martha Edwards, Norfolk Protestant Hospital, and Dr. Julian L. Rawls.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to allowing in this bill the hospital expenses and the doctor bills. They ought to be paid, but the department reports that there is no evidence to show that this child is permanently injured or that she is in any way incapacitated by reason of the injury. To allow her $5,000, when there is no evidence of permanent injury, would be to allow her the same amount that is allowed in death claims arising as a result of negligence on the part of the Government. I think this would be inequitable and unjust.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, that same thought ran through my mind when I filed this bill, and I talked it over with the parents of this child. They do not know what the effect on the child is going to be. It may result in epilepsy later on, because part of her skull was removed and she has a soft spot in the top of her head. I saw it myself, and this much [indicating] of her skull was taken out.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not strike out the amount allowed her of $5,000 and let this bill go through for the payment of the hospital expenses and doctor bills; and then, if she should have epilepsy next year or 5 or 10 years from now, the Congress will still be in session and can take care of the matter.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Would the gentleman consent to allowing her $1,000 for the disfigurement and the expense incurred? I will consent to that.

Mr. BLANTON. That is probably the cheapest way to handle it.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the legal guardian of Martha Edwards, of Norfolk, Va., an infant, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 for injuries sustained by her as the result of being struck by a United States naval airplane on the premises of her father at East Camp, Norfolk, Va., on October 30, 1929; and in addition pay to the Norfolk Protestant Hospital the sum of $177, and to Doctor Julian L. Rawls the sum of $150, due them for care and attention to her as a result of said injury: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to, or received by, any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive, any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 1, line 7, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000," together with the language "in full settlement of all claims against the United States Government."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 7, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CENTRAL ROMANA (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9338, authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Central Romana (Inc.) and to render judgment for just compensation.

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. EATON of Colorado objected.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentlemen withhold their objections?

Mr. BLANTON. If the Speaker is willing, I will reserve it.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make this statement. If the gentleman is going to object, there is no use in delaying the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to object, Mr. Speaker. I do not think a bill of this magnitude should pass in this way.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard; and the clerk will call the next bill.

WILLIAM SHELDON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2810, for the relief of William Sheldon.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, because I would like to have a little more information concerning this bill by the author or by someone who is prepared to give the information to the House.

Mr. DISNEY. What further information does the gentleman want?

Mr. HOPE. In looking over this report and the supplemental report, there is nothing to show how long this man was in the Government service or how long he was in the hospital. There is no medical report and inasmuch as the claim is based entirely upon what is supposed to have been payment for hospital and doctor bills, it seems to me there ought to be some further information on this point.

Mr. DISNEY. That proof is before the committee in documentary form, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, in its entirety. I think every item of his entire hospital expense is before the committee in the form of receipts or other documents. Pages 2 and 3 of the supplemental report consist of proof from the chief deputy and the office deputy in the marshal's office as to the injuries received by the deputy marshal, Sheldon, the claimant.

Mr. HOPE. Those statements are mere statements by a layman and do not go into detail as to the extent or the nature of the injuries or the necessity for this large expenditure for medical and hospital bills.

Mr. DISNEY. I think the gentleman will find such statements made before the committee, and there were also submitted photostatic pictures showing the extent of the injuries.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman have any information as to how long this man was in the Government service before this injury occurred?

Mr. DISNEY. I can not assure the gentleman positively, but my remembrance of the proof is that he was in the Government service about four years, his service beginning, as I remember it, in about 1910 or 1911.

Mr. HOPE. Do I understand from the gentleman that proof has been furnished the committee in the way of receipts and other documents showing the expenditure of these large sums for medical and hospital treatment?

Mr. DISNEY. I can not give the gentleman positive assurance, but that is my understanding of it. I have not personally examined each item, so I can not assure the gentleman of that fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume the gentleman will not object to having added a provision that this is in full settlement of claims that may be had by reason of this injury?

Mr. DISNEY. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is that amount?

Mr. DISNEY. Nineteen hundred dollars plus is the amount of the actual expenses.

Mr. SCHAFER. This is a case of a law-enforcement officer who was rendered totally and permanently disabled during the performance of his duty. I can not find any justification for the committee's taking further action after the bill had a careful consideration and the committee had recommended $5,000. Now it is proposed to give this man only the actual expenses for the medical bills he incurred—nothing for suffering, nothing for the serious, permanent disabilities. It is a crime that this bill does not carry $5,000.

Mr. DISNEY. I agree with the gentleman, but from observation during my tenure here I was afraid that if the amount remained at $5,000 some Member would have objected, and that one objection would have cut the claimant off without anything at all. So it seemed better, under all the circumstances, to accept and actually get the smaller amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,937.10 be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of William Sheldon, former deputy United States marshal for the eastern district of Oklahoma, who was injured in the discharge of his duties.

With the following committee amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert: "In full settlement of all claims he may have by reason of injuries suffered by him while in the discharge of his duty as said deputy marshal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. M. M. BRAYSHAW

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 3607, for the relief of Dr. M. M. Brayshaw.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dr. M. M. Brayshaw, Loma Linda, Calif., the sum of $210 in full settlement of all claims for professional service, hospital care, nursing, medicines, etc., furnished in 1927 and 1928 to Charles Dixon, a civilian prisoner of the United States Marine Corps Detachment at El Callo, Nicaragua.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOWER VEIN COAL CO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 6143, for the relief of the Lower Vein Coal Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado and Mr. BLANTON reserved the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that this bill involves the refund for $13,013.34, together with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1920, to the date of the enactment of this act. The department reports against the bill. The department allows so many refunds that when they do report against one I am going to stay with the department.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. PURNELL. The bill was originally introduced authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make the refund, and the committee struck that out and amended it so as to submit it to the Treasury for consideration. Let me give the gentleman the facts. There is no Member on the floor that I have more regard for his ability and sincerity than I have for the gentleman from Texas, but the gentleman is not informed about this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going by what the Treasury says about it.

Mr. PURNELL. If that is so, then the gentleman will not object to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not merely the $13,013.34 provided for in this bill that is involved, it is the precedent that would be set by waiving the limitation statutes against all refunds. So this bill really involves the sum of over $2,000,000,000, for if we pass this bill and set this bad precedent, it will eventually cost this Government over $2,000,000,000.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas intend to object to the bill finally?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I intend to object; but I do not object to the gentleman's making a speech about it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. PURNELL. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Texas is in error about the fact.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the bill authorize this person to make claim for $13,013.34 at 4 per cent interest back to December 29, 1920?

Mr. PURNELL. In substance, yes; but the Secretary of the Treasury says that their own officials were in error.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, here is what the Secretary of the Treasury said:

> The consistent policy of the Treasury, repeatedly announced, has been to refuse to lend approval to the enactment of legislation proposed to grant refunds in cases where such action is barred by the statute of limitations; and, in accordance with that policy, I am unable to lend approval to the pending bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Department thus has refused to recommend the passage of this bill. If it merely involved the $13,013.34 claimed in this bill, it would be bad enough; but, as heretofore stated, if this Congress should pass this bill, it would thereby set a precedent that eventually would cost this Government over $2,000,000,000. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

ESCHA WHITTINGTON CASEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6381) for the relief of Escha Whittington Casey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The form in which this bill has been presented is not that under which similar bills have been considered. An amendment has been prepared with the usual attorney's-fee amendment attached to it, and if the gentleman has no objection to that, I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Escha Whittington Casey, formerly a civilian employee of The Adjutant General's Office, War Department, who has become permanently disabled by reason of tuberculosis contracted while engaged in the pursuit of her official duties, and her case is hereby authorized to be considered and acted upon under the remaining provisions of such act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Escha Whittington Casey, formerly a civilian employee of The Adjutant General's Office, War Department, for alleged disabilities incurred while engaged in pursuance of official duties, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Escha Whittington Casey had made application for benefits under the employees' compensation act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 21 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act: And provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

M. N. LIPINSKI

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3810) for the relief of M. N. Lipinski.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLARENDON DAVIS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9606) for the relief of the estate of Clarendon Davis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to have the author of the bill state how they arrive at this sum attempted to be appropriated here.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the amount stated in the bill represents the difference in the amount of stamps that were accounted for and those that were lost. The other sum the Treasury Department compelled the bonding company to pay.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is this a bill which in effect will relieve the bonding company from the payment of the amount?

Mr. COX. No; except in this way: There was a shortage of seven hundred and odd dollars. The Treasury Department called upon the bonding company to pay. They had some negotiations and finally reached a settlement whereby the bonding company paid an amount equal to the amount stated in the bill, and the Treasury Department recommended the appropriation of a sum sufficient to pay the difference.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I do not know whether I understood the gentleman. Let me see whether I understood him. The bonding company has paid $300, the amount stated in the bill, and that was the result of a compromise settlement between this claimant and the Treasury Department?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And now the gentleman seeks to collect $300, to be paid to some person who will then turn it over to the bonding company?

Mr. COX. No; the bonding company gets nothing out of this.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then the claimant would be paid twice?

Mr. COX. No. Let me make this statement. This was a very old gentleman who bought $1,000 worth of these stamps and had them registered. It developed that the postmaster delivered only $300 of the stamps. This man called upon the Treasury Department for payment. They declined to pay it because of doubt as to whether his showing that the postmaster never made the delivery of $1,000 was sufficient. The individual had no claim against the bonding company. His claim was against the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department called on the bonding company to pay, and as the result of negotiations they reached an agreement whereby the bonding company paid half, and the Treasury Department recommends that the Government appropriate for the other half.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And thus relieve this bonding company from the other half. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BENJAMIN STERN AND OTHERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8513, for the relief of Benjamin Stern, and Melville A. Stern and Benjamin Stern, as executors under the last will and testament of Louis Stern, deceased, and Arthur H. Hahlo, as executor under the last will and testament of Isaac Stern, deceased, all of New York City, N. Y., for compensation and in settlement of their damages and loss sustained by virtue of a lease, in writing, dated September 12, 1919, between the said parties and the United States of America, by Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to call attention to the fact that this bill was introduced originally for $43,100.83. The committee has reduced it to $30,000. There is no favorable report from the Treasury Department on this bill, and I object.

Mr. BLACK. Well, Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman is incorrect. There is a supplemental report.

Mr. BLANTON. Even the supplemental report is unfavorable. Both the Treasury Department and the Comptroller General recommend against the passage of this bill. I object.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE CHARLES WALTHERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11477, for the relief of George Charles Walthers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I can not for the moment recall the facts in this case. Perhaps the author of the bill can aid me. My memory is to the effect that the amount is rather large.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HORR. I may state that this bill passed the House last year and died in the Senate. This is a bill for the relief of a boy who was accidentally shot by a prohibition agent. This boy has been totally disabled ever since the accident, and he is now in the district represented by the gentleman from Oregon, Mr. MARTIN, who is coauthor of this bill. I think the gentleman will find that the report from Mrs. Willebrandt herself at the time of the accident shows that she makes a recommendation that we should take care of him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. It is the only time I have known Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt to recommend to reimburse for injuries suffered as the result of a too officious prohibition-enforcement officer.

Mr. HORR. I am happy to have been once in accord with the lady.

Mr. STAFFORD. I really wish to direct attention to the amount. Here we are levying a charge of $100 a month during the remainder of his life.

Mr. HORR. I may state that he is paralyzed. The best that can be said, he has to be lifted into a wheel chair. He is now a charity patient in the Good Samaritan Hospital, located in the district represented by General MARTIN, and he has been confined there from the day he was injured. There has been no money given him by the Government other than to meet his immediate medical expenses.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. This fine young boy was accidentally shot by an overzealous prohibition agent. This prohibition agent got excited, and his gun went off, and he shot this poor boy in the back. He is completely paralyzed.

Mr. BACHMANN. The prohibition agent fell over a log, and his gun was discharged.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Well, yes. He got excited, and as a consequence he shot this boy, and he has been a charity patient under the care of one of our surgeons there ever since.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. What is the gentleman's opinion as to whether or not this boy who was injured had any connection with the operation of a still?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. None whatever.

Mr. BACHMANN. The evidence from the Treasury Department shows that he was indicted in a conspiracy case for operating a still.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. But they did not have the testimony.

Mr. BACHMANN. The statement of the boy and Doctor Roper and the father at the hospital contradicts the statement by the Treasury Department, saying that he had no connection whatever with the still.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. None whatever.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman knows the situation, and I would like to have his statement in the RECORD as to whether or not, in his opinion, this boy was engaged in the operation of that still.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I am very familiar with the case. I have seen the boy repeatedly. I tell you frankly that he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BACHMANN. I think it is a case where something should be paid this boy.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. It is one of the most pitiable cases to be seen. The boy has to be strapped to a chair. He has completely lost control of his bowels.

Mr. STAFFORD. The statement of the gentleman from Oregon, who is acquainted with the physical condition of this unfortunate lad, removes any question as to the amount that should be paid.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100 per month to George Charles Walthers, during his natural life, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for total and permanent disability resulting from a gunshot wound inflicted upon him in 1923 by a Federal prohibition enforcement officer. Said monthly payments shall be made through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission and shall commence on the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this act shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VAN CAMP SEA FOOD CO. (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 220, authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Van Camp Sea Food Co. (Inc.).

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the usual attorney's fee clause should be added to this bill, and I ask whoever is responsible for the bill to consent to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I had some question as to whether the claim of $100 a day for demurrage was not a rather large amount. I do not know whether that impressed any of the other Members of the House who examined this bill or not.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It impressed me, but when I saw that the Comptroller General had examined the account and recommended that amount, I decided to make no objection on that score.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Van Camp Sea Food Co. (Inc.), Terminal Island, Calif., for reimbursement of the cost of repairing damages sustained by the fishing boat Costa Rica No. 1, while attempting to rescue the crew and salvage Navy seaplane No. A-7807 attached to the United States steamship Idaho, which crashed in the Los Angeles harbor October 27, 1930, and for demurrage while the repairs were being made, and to allow not exceeding the sum of $1,718.06 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $1,718.06, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Page 2, line 4, after the word "claim," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM T. STILES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 249, authorizing adjustment of the claim of William T. Stiles.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the attention of the House for a minute. There are a number of bills coming in on the Private Calendar that have for their purpose the compensation of enlisted men in the Army and Navy and of other people who are not connected with the Government, who, in order to save somebody's life in some hospital, submits to a blood transfusion, and these bills come in here to appropriate $25 and $50. I think $50 is the highest amount that has come in to us in any of these bills. We had a couple here the other day that came from the Senate and they were passed by the House. To-day we are to consider some more of them. It seems to me we are going a long ways to adopt the principle of paying somebody $25 or $50 who will permit himself to take part in a blood transfusion and give blood for the saving of human life. It seems to me any man patriotic or sympathetic enough to do that ought not to come to Congress and ask Congress to go through the trouble of having a bill come before a committee, considered before the committee and in the House in order that he may be reimbursed $25 or $50.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows I have helped him stop some of these bills before. If we establish a precedent and keep this up, there is going to be no end of it. The bill carries only $25, but it has already cost the Government at least $50 to introduce it, get it printed, a favorable consideration by the committee, printing the report and the reported bill, and getting it on the printed calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. A principle is involved and I wish to make some observations about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall go along with the gentleman and help stop all bills of this character.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the letter of the Comptroller General referring this bill to the Congress for consideration, he calls attention to the law of February 9, 1927 (49 Stat. 1066), where a payment of $50 is authorized to any member or former member of the Military Establishment who should thereafter furnish blood to a patient in a Government hospital.

According to the law we have established the policy of paying $50 to any member or former member of the Military Establishment who furnishes blood for transfusion.

The instant case is to reimburse a stranger, I believe, who volunteered to give his blood for the benefit of a patient, and I believe the patient was a former member of the military service. I think the general law should be amended so that not only members or former members of the Military Establishment should receive $50 but also people in instances represented by the instant case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. When the former bill mentioned was before Congress the gentleman will remember that several of us tried to defeat it, but we were outvoted. That bill should not have been passed. We ought not to be paying such claims.

Mr. BACHMANN. I agree with the gentleman from Texas, and I may say in addition that it has taken a good deal of the time of Congress to consider this particular kind of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LITTLE ROCK COLLEGE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1421, for the relief of Little Rock College, Little Rock, Ark.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I read this report it is an authorization to make a repayment for losses or theft of certain articles due to neglect on the part of the accountable authority at the Little Rock College:

To provide such method and means to safeguard this property after he had been informed on several occasions of the insecurity of the property, the laxness of allowing the keys to the storeroom to get into the possession of unauthorized persons, a failure to make an effort to recover property that had been stolen, or to recover that which had been taken away by students withdrawing from the college after he had been informed of that fact; * * * at various times when the storeroom was broken into a complete check was not made to ascertain correctly the amount of property missing; clothing was allowed to remain piled on the floor in an office for a period of time without being locked night or day * * *.

Any of you who have had any experience in the matter of accountability for military stores know what is required either of a college or a National Guard company or others. It seems, to say the least, an anomaly that a bill of this sort should be presented to Congress to reimburse a college for losses due to neglect of its own officials.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement. I may say that the statement I just made was taken from a report over the signature of Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, made in 1927, since which time the bills have been presented to Congress.

Mr. RAGON. That is true. I do not think Secretary Davis could have made any other statement of the case or he would have set a precedent which would have flooded him with such matters.

This is for material furnished to a little Reserve Officers' Training Corps college. The officers, of course, are more or less alibiing in their statement there, but anyway the gentleman will notice in the supplemental statement, or in Mr. Davis's letter, there are a whole lot of small articles. The stuff was secondhand, as far as that is concerned. I do not think the college is in existence, except that it may be operating as an academy.

What they are seeking to do is to get the books balanced, so that the college will not have to pay this money.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What they are seeking to do is to get credit for property lost over a period of years. If the gentleman has ever had any experience in the accountability for Government property he would wonder why anybody charged with it would present a claim for reimbursement for its loss, having been negligent in its care.

The losses started in March, 1925, and it has been revised and revised. Each time there was a survey an additional and different amount was reported, and a person can not tell whether it is a continuing amount or whether additional items are included to make up the total. I shall object to this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve it to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. PATTERSON. I happen to know something about this. I happened to be in one of these colleges at the time they had some of this material assigned to them and used it. I am of the opinion from what I know about such matters that this is a meritorious bill and is nothing more than balancing the claims of this little college to keep them from having to pay back this amount for material that was assigned there and probably worn out or lost or something of that kind. I feel this is a meritorious claim and I believe if the gentleman would make a thorough investigation of the matter he would not object to the bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I have made as much investigation as I could from the report of the Secretary of War, and I am surprised that the gentleman from Alabama would try to condone all of these losses, whether they were by theft or carelessness, or, as the report says, by the negligence of the accountable officer of this college. Eleven different times such shortages occurred, and they had a survey for each one of them, and they found that this man was not taking care of the stores and that the students were taking them away.

Mr. RAGON. I hope the gentleman will not object to this measure. I may say to the gentleman that while I am not fully advised about the matter I think the college is practically out of existence, and this will simply require the Catholic Church, or whatever organization operates this school, to pay $1,400 for some man's carelessness that they never saw or heard of, and the gentleman is bound to admit that this was old, worn-out stuff. If the matter were ever so equitable, the Secretary could not take any other stand than the one he has taken, but I believe it is more a matter of bookkeeping from the standpoint of the Government than anything else, because the Government will never collect it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I object, Mr. Speaker.

HARRIETTE OLSEN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1858, for the relief of Harriette Olsen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Harriette Olsen, postmaster at Armstrong, Iowa, in the sum of $42.91, due the United States on account of the loss resulting from the closing of the First National Bank of Armstrong, Iowa.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LYMAN L. MILLER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3504, for the relief of Lyman L. Miller.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the granting of relief in the amount carried in the bill, but I can not see the real need of the last sentence of the bill. It is my opinion the purpose would be accomplished by enacting the first sentence and striking out the second, as it is simply surplusage.

Mr. BLACK. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, my attention is called by the chairman of the Committee on Claims to the fact that this is a Senate bill. The language would simply cumber up the statutes, as it is largely in the nature of a preamble, but I shall not offer the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to Lyman L. Miller the sum of $400 as reimbursement for the amount paid by said Lyman L. Miller to the Department of the Interior as advance royalty accompanying application for proposed coal-mining leases, which said application was rejected on March 6, 1926. Under regulations governing the disposition by fiscal officers of payments under the mineral lease act advanced royalty of $400 was covered into the United States Treasury and that no request for refund was filed within two years from the date of rejection of application and that the same is now barred by statute, act of December 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 366).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JAMES M. GRIFFIN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4166, for the relief of James M. Griffin, disbursing agent, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, here is an omnibus bill reported by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTGAU] containing a number of items for travel pay that apparently were not allowed by the department. I assume the gentleman is virtually accepting the determination of the Comptroller General and passing on his decision.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Yes; and the Senate committee went into the matter quite exhaustively and we accepted their report.

The Comptroller General, as the gentleman will note by the report of the Senate committee, refused to O. K. the expense account for travel allowance because of a technicality in that the bureau chief had not approved it. This resulted in a different ruling as to what constituted travel allowance.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall now, all the items had been approved by the heads of bureau or heads of department, but because of some technicality the Comptroller General refused to pass them and wishes to have Congress take the burden of enacting special legislation on these various items.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. No; this involves no appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that. It is virtually to credit the accounts of these various disbursing officers with these amounts.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. The expenditures were incurred by these people who were given travel orders under a previous ruling. They did not have the current ruling of the bureau chief.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of James M. Griffin, disbursing agent, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the amount of $360.27, which sum represents the aggregate of payments made during the fiscal year 1930 by said disbursing officer on account of travel performed by civilian officers and employees of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and which sum has been disallowed by the Comptroller General as follows: On voucher numbered 96675, to Deck Officer John C. Ellerbe, jr., $7.65; on voucher numbered 96713, to Deck Officer J. S. Morton, $7.35; on voucher numbered 96771, to Mate F. E. Okeson, $14.37; on voucher numbered 96818, to Deck Officer I. R. Jones, $2.64; on voucher numbered 97492, to Deck Officer R. A. Marshall, $3.25; on voucher numbered 97019, to Deck Officer J. S. Morton, $3.94; on voucher numbered 97642, to Associate Geodetic Engineer W. Mussetter, $9.75; on voucher numbered 97175, to Deck Officer F. TAMPICO MARINE IRON WORKS

The Clerk read the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 104, for the relief of the Tampico Marine Iron Works.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that in this case the amount recommended to be carried in the bill is recommended by a person who admitted that he was guilty of bribery.

Mr. DIES. Let me say to the gentleman that the Shipping Board recommended first $4,617.98, and there has been a reduction after a compromise offer to the amount of $2,573.

Mr. STAFFORD. The letter from the assistant admiralty counsel says:

In addition to the above-mentioned considerations, which of themselves are considered sufficient grounds for the rejection of the claim, is the fact that the bill appears to be most exorbitant, and a large part of the work, apparently the greater part, was not attributable to the damage caused by grounding, and it is for such damage only that the Government as insurer was liable.

As nearly as experts have been able to estimate by examination of the bill, only item 3, $1,500 in amount, can be charged to the reparation of damage caused by the grounding.

While it is true that some time after the work had been stopped, one Money, at that time employed at Tampico by the Shipping Board, indorsed his approval on the bill, although it was clear that he had nothing to do with ordering the work. Money afterwards admitted taking a bribe in consideration of like approval by him of another bill for work claimed to have been done at Tampico on a Shipping Board vessel. The Shipping Board representative at Tampico, Dominic Walsh, after Money's discharge gave a great deal of attention to this bill and was convinced that it was very largely in excess of what it should be.

Being unalterably of the opinion that there is no semblance of liability on the part of the Government, the Shipping Board, or the Fleet Corporation, I must adhere to the decision already expressed.

Mr. BLACK. The amount recommended was $4,617.98, and then there was a compromise.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the amount recommended was recommended by a man who was afterwards proven to be a crook.

Mr. BLACK. There was another proposition of $2,500, and finally the Shipping Board said $1,500. There is a similar Senate bill on the desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will agree to an amendment for $1,500, I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill (S. 188), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Beaumont Export & Import Co. for the Tampico Marine Iron Works, a foreign corporation, the sum of $2,573 in full settlement of all claims due the Tampico Marine Iron Works by the Government of the United States for work on, repairing, raising, and furnishing material for the United States Shipping Board vessel Latham, during the year 1920, on presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury from the Tampico Marine Iron Works of an authorization for payment of said amount to the Beaumont Export & Import Co., said authorization being in such terms as to make said payment to the Beaumont Export & Import Co. a complete settlement of all claims herein referred to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$2,573" and insert "$1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill, strike out the work "being" and substitute "to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MARY ELIZABETH FOX

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3727) for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Fox.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask my colleague from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] a question. The sum allowed in this bill has been reduced from $7,500 to $3,600 by the committee. The report shows that this woman spent $1,100 on hospital treatment, and so forth. Is that amount embraced in the $3,600?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. So that $3,600 is the total that she gets?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my colleague assure us that, if we allow this bill to go through in the closing hours of Congress, he will protect the House in this amount?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I assure the House that $3,600 is all that is requested; and if the Senate should amend it by increasing it, I shall ask that it be reduced again to $3,600.

Mr. BLANTON. There should be attached to the bill the usual clause to provide that this is in full settlement of all claims against the United States and then the usual attorney's fee proviso. The gentleman has no objection to that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection at all.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Does the $1,100 for hospital and medical fees include also the expense of hospitalization when the girl was in the hospital for an appendicitis operation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does not.

Mr. HOPE. The $1,100 all relates to this particular injury?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was one of the difficulties that I had in reading the report and the letter from the Postmaster General, whether she was charging $1,100 for hospitalization for an ailment that had no connection whatsoever with this injury, connected with the Postal Service.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The medical charges relate only to the treatment for the infection of the finger, and later the amputation of the finger 43 days later in the hospital, and not to the operation for appendicitis.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had some difficulty in bringing myself around to approval of any claim in this case. I have not all the facts before me, possibly. It seems that this woman suffered a scratch by using postal equipment that was furnished by the university.

Mr. BLANTON. She was opening her post-office box to get her mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. And who furnished the equipment?

Mr. BLANTON. It was Government equipment, no matter who furnished it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Government does not furnish the equipment in such offices.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not material who furnished it. It is Government equipment in every post office in the United States, after it is furnished, regardless of who furnished it. Post-office boxes are Government equipment when patrons get their mail out of such boxes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I served for the first four terms of my service here on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is very wise, and has great knowledge about many things, but in some his memory is sometimes at fault. The fact is that in fourth-class offices the fourth-class postmasters have to furnish their own equipment, and in third-class offices they are obliged to furnish their own equipment, except when in a Government building.

Mr. BLANTON. But suppose the gentleman should be a fourth-class postmaster, which he is not, and never could be, and he should furnish the equipment to the Government, does the gentleman think that his Milwaukee constituent who came there and got his mail in that fourth-class post office would be dealing with the Government or with somebody else when he opened his box?

Mr. STAFFORD. He would be dealing with the fourth-class postmaster, so far as the equipment is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, he is dealing with the Government when he opens his post-office box.

Mr. STAFFORD. The postmaster is nothing more than the agent to do a certain service for the Government. There is the difficulty that I have in this case. I want amplification on that question of the responsibility of the Government in this case, after what occurred in the use of property furnished by a third party, the postmaster.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This was a contract post office. It is in conjunction with the second-class office in Georgetown, Tex., and it is technically of that class, though established at University Station.

Mr. STAFFORD. In speaking of the University Station and its class, does the gentleman have in mind these little post-office stations where they give them $100 up to $1,000 for the sale of stamps, money orders, and similar services?

Mr. BLACK. And if anybody tampers with the mail in those boxes, he tampers with the United States Government property.

Mr. BLANTON. And he goes to the Federal penitentiary if he is convicted.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is also liable under a State law for doing the same thing.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a Federal question, pure and simple, I assure my friend.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is it not a fact that the Government of the United States holds itself out as delivering the mail in those boxes to the people who go there for it, and is it not a contractual relationship?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; it is a contract office.

Mr. BACHMANN. It invites the public to go there and get the mail that the United States Government delivers there.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Carrying that principle to an extreme, then in every little contract station connected with a drug store the Government would be responsible for the condition of the premises because, ergo, the Government invites people to go there and buy stamps? I can not recognize that principle. It would be an outrageous policy. Otherwise, we would go bankrupt.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Here is what the Government inspector says, the post-office inspector:

> The fact that this accident occurred at a contract station does not appear to alter the case, as the equipment was being used by the Post Office Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was being so used, but who furnished the equipment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They accepted it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I understand this is a Texas matter, and the gentleman who is the author of the bill is one of the ablest Members on the floor of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. What does my friend want to chase him over the hot sands for, then?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not want a precedent established that will come to plague the Congress. I want to know whether this is an injury for which the Government is responsible.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does not the gentleman think this amount of $3,600, even including $1,100 for doctors' and hospital fees. is rather large?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think it is rather small.

Mr. HOPE. The only permanent injury, of course, is the loss of one of the fingers.

Mr. BLANTON. And the results of it, and only partial use of her hand.

Mr. STAFFORD. Undoubtedly through the neglect of the doctor who treated her.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, she had a good doctor.

Mr. STAFFORD. If she had had a good doctor, the infection would not have developed to cause an amputation of the finger.

Mr. BLANTON. She had a good doctor.

Mr. STAFFORD. He may have been a good doctor for Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If he had been Doctor Budweiser, it would have been all right with the gentleman from Milwaukee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no dealings with Doctor Budweiser; my good friends are Doctors Pabst, Schlitz, and Blatz.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that the trouble with this report is it does not give sufficient knowledge about this case. There is another operation for appendicitis that happened a year or so afterwards to this same woman. There is nothing in the report to show whether or not she is charging hospital expenses for that appendicitis operation. The gentleman is asking for $3,600. On what does the gentleman base that claim for $3,600?

Mr. BUCHANAN. One thousand dollars hospital and medical treatment.

Mr. BACHMANN. Was the thousand dollars for hospital and medical treatment confined to the finger injury, or does it take in the appendicitis operation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. My understanding is it did not include anything for the appendicitis operation, but rather than have this bill defeated and go over, if the gentleman wants to deduct $500 on the mere chance that there may be something in here for the appendicitis operation, I am willing to agree to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Well, just a minute, Mr. Speaker. I will be compelled to object, and I do not want to object to this bill; but if we are going to be forced into it, I must object, because the gentleman is endeavoring to work out a solution of the problem.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks he has given every opportunity.

Mr. BLACK. I think this can be solved shortly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there has been an agreement reached with respect to this bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Elizabeth Fox, Granger, Tex., the sum of $7,500 for permanent injury received on February 2, 1928, while getting her mail out of a post-office box at Southwestern University Station at Georgetown, Tex., said injury being caused by neglectful construction of said post-office box.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$7,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD to the committee amendment: Strike out "$3,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer an amendment, after the figures "$3,000," insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: In line 6, after the figures "$3,600," insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: In line 10, after the word "box," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I do not intend to consume the five minutes. I do not believe this reduction should have been made. I believe if we had a movietone of the proceedings of this Congress for the 15 minutes prior to this moment, we could take it to every show house in the country and have some people come back to see the show two or three times. The scene resembles an auction sale. The Government of the United States is responsible for this claimant's permanent injuries. The medical bills incurred amounted to over a thousand dollars, which on the face of it indicates suffering by the beneficiary of this bill. The Committee on Claims having jurisdiction of this bill referred the matter to a subcommittee for consideration. The subcommittee reported to the full committee, and all of the facts and evidence is discussed by the full committee, and a favorable recommendation is made to the Congress.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. In just a moment.

Manifestly, it is impossible for the Claims Committee to print in the committee reports all of the evidence which was before that committee, because on some of the private claims bills the evidence is confined in a file folder sometimes 6 inches thick, and the cost of printing all of the evidence in the committee report would be prohibitive.

Now, because all of the evidence is not incorporated in the committee report, we have an auction-block proceeding to shave the amount recommended by the Claims Committee. If we are going to continue this policy of spending 15 or 20 minutes in these auction-block proceedings, we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the distinguished economy expert from the State of West Virginia.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is so familiar with the facts in this case, and who is a member of the Committee on Claims, tell the House how much of this hospital bill that was inserted in the report went to pay the expenses of the injury for which the claim seeks recovery?

Mr. SCHAFER. I may state to the gentleman that not a nickel, not a penny, for either hospital bills or medical bills has been included for the appendicitis operation, which has no relation to the claim we have before us.

Mr. BACHMANN. Should not the report show that to the House?

Mr. SCHAFER. I may state to the gentleman from West Virginia that it is all I can do to prepare the voluminous reports from my subcommittee. Sometimes I spend 6, 7, 8, 9 hours or more considering one of these bills before the subcommittee. It is impossible for the Committee on Claims to incorporate in the report all of the evidence presented. If we would do so the increased burden of taxation on the Treasury would be enormous by reason of the additional costs of printing the reports.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman complains that during his party's régime we have not been able to keep here at all times a quorum to hear his eloquent addresses. I promise the gentleman that after the 4th of March we will not have so much good reason for a quorum not to be here.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman must be a prophet. The gentleman does not know what is going to happen after the 4th day of March. The gentleman's party takes one position at 12 o'clock and at 1 o'clock reverses said position and runs in disorderly retreat. The gentleman also seems to forget that his party has had control of the House for almost two years.

Mr. BLANTON. At least we will be in Washington after March 4 and not up in Milwaukee.

Mr. SCHAFER. That may be so, but I am frank to say that the people in Milwaukee will be watching the Members of the gentleman's party. The industry of Wisconsin, which is being crucified by reason of excessive importations from depreciated-currency foreign countries, has the Democratic Party and its platform pledges in the spotlight right now. The Democratic Legislature of the State of Wisconsin has also passed a resolution asking for the legislation which was refused yesterday by the Democratic caucus.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CLYDE W. EDWARDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5801, for the relief of Clyde W. Edwards.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Clyde W. Edwards, postmaster at Adair, Iowa, in the sum of $448.83, due the United States on account of loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the First National Bank of Adair, Iowa: Provided, That the said postmaster shall assign to the United States any and all claims he may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN MOORE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5947, for the relief of John Moore.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the United States, the sum of $7,500 to John Moore, of Detroit, Mich., on account of personal injuries sustained in line of duty as an employee of the War Department on the 18th day of August, 1919.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of John Moore, on account of injuries sustained by him while employed by the War Department at Detroit, Mich., on or about August 18, 1919, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said John Moore had made application for the benefits of the act entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 7, 1916, as amended, within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, after the word "injuries," insert the words "claimed to have been."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DR. CHARLES T. GRANGER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7655, for the relief of Dr. Charles T. Granger.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be very glad to yield either to the gentleman who reported the bill or to the author of the bill.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I reported the bill. The facts in the committee report are correct. The department, in my opinion, in its suggestions that this man ought to have gone to a Government hospital overlooked the situation.

This was an emergency. An Indian boy was run over by a truck and sustained a fractured leg. He was taken to the nearest hospital and received the kind of treatment he should have received. Any suggestion that some other course should have been pursued is out of the question. I know that territory. I have been over the road where this accident occurred. The right thing was done at the right time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The only question I have in mind is the amount charged this boy. If he had not been connected with the Government and had had his leg injured in this accident and had gone to this doctor, the doctor probably would have set it for him and treated him for probably $25, but because the Government of the United States is involved he charged $290.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Has the gentleman examined the charges? X rays were taken. The boy was in the hospital 44 days. I do not think the charge is at all excessive. The doctor in the case is one of the most highly respected doctors in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the doctor ought to be paid and I think the hospital ought to be paid. I think it was an emergency case; and I think it was foolish of the department to expect them to take him 55 miles across country to another hospital. The question in my mind is simply the amount that has been charged. Doctors do mulct the Government all the time.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. This man is not that kind of a doctor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps the gentleman has forgotten the facts. This man was in the hospital 44 days, which, at $5 a day would account for over $200 of the amount charged.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $290 to Dr. Charles T. Granger for hospitalization and medical services rendered Joseph Abbett, an Indian patient at the Granger Hospital, McGregor, Minn.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 3, after the word "the," strike out the word "Treasury" and insert "Department of the Interior."

Line 5, after the word "of," strike out the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof "funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: In line 7, after the word "settlement," insert the words "of all claims and demands."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Page 1, line 7, after the word "settlement," insert "of all claims and demands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CLARENDON DAVIS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 658 on the calendar for consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300 to the legal representative of the estate of Clarendon Davis, deceased, Camilla, Ga., for war-savings certificates for the reason that the evidence submitted, while indicating registration, does not show that the certificates were actually delivered to the purchaser by the postmaster.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

C. N. HILDRETH, JR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11461, for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the merits of the bill, but I do not think we should carry in the bill the statement in the last clause, and I shall offer an amendment striking out that part of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of C. N. Hildreth, jr., former collector of customs for collection district No. 18, with the sum of $89.10, representing the amount of a payment made to the A. A. A. Garage of Miami, Fla., on voucher 851 in his August, 1928, accounts, and heretofore disallowed by the Comptroller General, such payment covering repairs to a Ford car damaged by a truck which had been commandeered by a customs officer in an effort to apprehend a violator of the customs laws, and such payment is hereby validated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: In line 10, after the word "General," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A. ZAPPONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10124, for the relief of A. Zappone, disbursing clerk, United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the bill, but I wanted to call my friend's attention to this situation.

Here is an item of $173 that is to be paid by the Government for advertising a certain bid in Washington newspapers for something that is to be done over in the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia when there is no law authorizing such an expenditure in Washington. It was against the law, and yet the bureau chief in the Department of Agriculture spends this money foolishly. I want to call the attention of my friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] to this matter because he is the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

I mentioned the other day about the so-called scientists being sent to the wilds of Mexico and South America to hunt up a wild potato, and I want to let my friend know just what that has cost the people.

From August 3, 1930, to October 13, 1931, our Department of Agriculture had the scientist, Mr. P. G. Russell, in old Mexico, and his expenses amounted to $1,129.85, in addition to his pay of $700. He was hunting a wild potato.

The department had another man by the name of Donald Reddick from September 28, 1931, to December 10, 1931, over in the wilds of Mexico, having a good time on a junket trip, which was all he was doing, and this cost $745.46 of the taxpayers' money for this man's expenses in hunting wild potatoes.

The department had Carl Erlanson from December 20, 1930, to March 17, 1931, over in old Mexico hunting wild potatoes, and they paid him $800 in salary and $1,284.76 as expenses, or a total of $2,084.76.

The department had Max Souviron from August 3, 1930, to March 17, 1931, over in the mountains and wilds of old Mexico hunting wild potatoes, and he was paid $675 for the three months' work and $2,928.45 for expenses, or a total of $3,603.45 for hunting wild potatoes in Mexico.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I am anxious to know is whether they found any potatoes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, of course, they did not.

I also want to call your attention to what they have done in South America, junketing in Chile, Peru, and Bolivia hunting wild potatoes.

They had Dr. H. G. MacMillan from December 12, 1931, to July 17, 1932, and paid him $2,760; and his expense account, in addition to his pay, amounted to $3,256.58, or a total expense for his wild-junket trip in South America, paid out of the taxpayers' Treasury, of $6,016.58.

They also had Carl Erlanson, the same man that went to Mexico, from November 9, 1931, to June 27, 1932, and his expense account was $2,312.38 and his pay was $1,600, or a total of $3,912.38 for hunting wild potatoes in South America.

This is an outrage on the people of the country for the Department of Agriculture, through these long-haired scientists, to waste the people's money in these times of depression on any such junket trips, and it ought to stop, and I confidently believe that my colleague from Texas is going to help me stop this in the next session of the Congress. [Applause.]

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of A. Zappone, disbursing clerk, Department of Agriculture, with payments in the sum of $173.20, being the aggregate of four payments, amounting to $113.40, to the Washington Star, and two payments, amounting to $59.80, to the Washington Post, during June and July, 1931, for the publication of advertisements for bids for construction work in the Shenandoah National Park near Luray, Va., and the Colonial National Monument near Yorktown, Va., inserted in these newspapers in contravention of the terms of the act of July 31, 1876 (19 Stat. 105; U. S. C., p. 1436, title 44, sec. 321).

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Virginia," strike out the remainder of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES J. GIANAROS

The Clerk read the next bill, H. R. 3037, for the relief of James J. Gianaros.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I think the bill should be amended so as to provide that no pension or emolument shall be held to accrue following the passage of this act. If the author of the bill is willing to accept that proviso, I shall not offer an objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is present. I thought the very purpose of the committee in reporting the bill without the proviso was to extend the benefits of the compensation law to this soldier. There are one or two bills on the calendar where the Committee on Military Affairs did not append the customary clause that no pension or allowance or emolument should be paid prior to the enactment of the act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. There is nothing in the report to show that this man is in need of compensation at the present time. It merely corrects his record so as to give him a status for citizenship.

Mr. McSWAIN. Let me say to the gentleman that that was an oversight, and the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I understand that at the time the man was inducted into the service he was an enemy alien, a citizen of Turkey. This man did not perform any service, but was used as a guard, for a nonmilitary purpose.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield, I should like to convey some information to the House. I have a bill before the Committee on Military Affairs where a man served as a soldier until a few days before his organization was to go abroad. He wanted to go with the organization and pleaded with the officers to let him go—that he wanted to do his bit—but they discharged him. Did they give him an honorable discharge? No; they discharged him because he was an alien. He was willing to go and willing to give his life for his adopted country. He returned home, registered in the draft, and, although married and with children, waived all his rights that would have exempted him. He had sufficient funds for his family to live on. They would not call him because he was an alien—he was listed as an alien enemy although willing to go to war against his native country.

They took men of our allies by the thousand and made citizens of them, but men who came from the countries that were at war with us, no matter how they pleaded, they discharged because they were aliens, instead of letting them become naturalized. It is an outrage, and the Congress should correct the error now. The man I refer to served six months.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman is confirming everything that I have said.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This man was a soldier; he was not merely a potato peeler.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Why should some have special legislation passed in their favor and for their benefit when others do not get it?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We should have general legislation to meet the situation.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE W. EDGERLY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8669) for the relief of George W. Edgerly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This appears to be another bill of an officer who held an advanced rank during the war period and whose resignation was accepted and his emoluments fixed at the grade in which he was at the time he was given temporarily a higher office, and he now seeks to be advanced to the higher grade and have the emoluments run for the rest of his lifetime at the higher grade. Several of these bills have been presented, and all have been objected to. For that reason I am constrained to object to this one, because there are no special circumstances in this bill greater than in any other bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. I think the gentleman will find that this case is markedly different from the two cases objected to yesterday. Although the language of the bill is the same, the facts are very different in this one. The gentlemen who were seeking relief in the bills that were objected to yesterday were in their right mind at the time they resigned, whereas the facts show, if the gentleman will observe the report, that this man was mentally incompetent at the time of his resignation, and the sole question here is whether or not we will hold strictly to his discharge voluntarily made by him at the time of such mental incompetency. He is now and has been ever since his discharge incompetent, and is confined in a Veterans' Bureau hospital. He is rated 100 per cent disabled, and has a guardian or a person of equivalent authority under the laws of the State where he is adjudged to be incompetent. The man was not responsible for his resignation and can not be held to be so responsible. The difference in compensation between the $100 that he receives now and the $150 that he would receive if this bill were enacted into law is so slight it seems to me as not to justify our holding him to the sharp line of accountability, when the evidence is undisputed that he was then and is now and ever since has been incompetent.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If this man is and has been mentally incompetent, why should we now pay any more attention to this man's request than to the request of any other man who is insane?

Mr. McSWAIN. It is made by his guardian in his behalf; by his wife, who is no doubt now in the gallery, who is his guardian under the law. It is made in his name by her. If this bill were to become a law, as an incompetent he would be summoned before the medical board of the Army to see whether or not his mental disability existed at the time of his discharge, and whether or not that disability was a natural incident to his service.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the report shows, over the signature of Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War, that at the date of his resignation he was examined by a medical officer who found that he was mentally and physically sound, and the Secretary of War further states that the enactment of the proposed legislation would constitute a preferential treatment of an individual of a class, to the prejudice of others in the same category, to whom similar treatment has not been extended. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think we are justified in taking the report of the medical board who examined him at that time.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman were entirely familiar with the procedure in this case, he would understand that usually the examination at the time of discharge, especially following resignation, is absolutely perfunctory. If he will look on page 3 of the report, he will find there is another report signed by Patrick J. Hurley, dated February 26, 1930, and in that he will find that Colonel Cavenaugh, who relieved this officer at the time of his discharge at the University of Arizona, in June, 1919, ascertained at the time, though not a medical officer, that Edgerly's mind was not sound, and that he was not responsible for his conduct, and he was relieved on that account.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman would recall the great glee with which these captains who served as majors, or lieutenants, who served as captains, took their command without any thought at all of emolument, I think he would agree with me that this man was retired at his proper rank and grade at the time of his retirement; and it does not come in good grace for anyone in his behalf now to come and say that he was insane at the time, and, therefore, that he should be advanced to a higher grade.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman seems to think that this involves a matter of promotion. If the gentleman objects to his being retired at the rank of major, which he temporarily held, then let him be retired at the permanent rank of captain.

His permanent rank was captain. I think we would be justified in accepting an amendment that he be retired as captain.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. He has been retired as captain.

Mr. McSWAIN. No. He has not been retired as captain. He resigned.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Well, he resigned as a captain. He has been determined 100 per cent disabled by the Veterans' Bureau, and is getting the full benefit of his age, rank, and grade at the present time. What difference does it make in dollars per month or per year?

Mr. McSWAIN. It makes a difference of $50 a month. He will get three-quarters of his base pay if he is retired, which will be $150 a month. He is getting $100 a month now. As I said, it is a matter of $50 a month. We ought not hold an insane man responsible for his conduct.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CARL C. BAXTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9053, for the relief of Carl C. Baxter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, certainly the first sentence of section 2 should be eliminated. It is not the policy of the Government to correct a military record as is provided in the following language:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to grant to the said Carl C. Baxter a discharge certificate showing that he is held and considered to have been honorably discharged as of such date.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. If the gentleman will read the report, he will see that this man filed a questionnaire showing that he was under bond to await the action of the grand jury. The War Department and the drafting board knew that when he was drafted. He did everything he could as a soldier, and upon his return and delivery to the civil authorities, owing to the fact that he had a large family and his friends advised him the best thing to do was to plead guilty and take a suspended sentence, he did that. At the end of the 5-year period a motion for a new trial was granted and the case dismissed. If this man is not entitled to this relief, I do not know of a case that is.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood from the record he was sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. With a suspended sentence. The suspended sentence law in Texas is that at the end of that time, if the man's record is good, there is a motion for a new hearing filed, and the new hearing is granted and the case dismissed. This man did everything he could as a soldier. The authorities knew when he was drafted that he was under bond to appear before the grand jury.

Mr. STAFFORD. The difficulty I have with the case is not granting him a pensionable status, but with our authority to direct the Secretary of War to grant a discharge certificate.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Undoubtedly the man ought to be granted an honorable discharge to place him in statu quo where and in the condition the Government found him when he was drafted, but I am not in favor of giving him a status that would result in the Government's pensioning him, because he has not rendered any service to the Government. He was drafted on August 6. He went to Camp Dix. About the 8th of September it developed that he was under indictment for murder. He was in the service just about a month. He was not really in the service, because he knew all the time that he was under this charge for murder. He rendered no service to the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. The Government knew that when they drafted him. They knew that he was under bond to appear before the grand jury. They sent him to Camp Dix.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the Government did him a service by drafting him and taking him away from that murder charge even for a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. If the gentleman knew the man and knew how he stood in the community, he would not make that statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of granting him an honorable discharge, but providing definitely that he shall have no pensionable status whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. But soldiers who serve 90 days have that.

Mr. BLANTON. No, no. He did not serve 90 days. On August 6 he was inducted into service. On September 8 he practically left the service, because he was arrested under the murder charge.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. He was in service until November 18, and the Government knew this when they drafted him.

Mr. BLANTON. He was under arrest, in charge of the officers on September 8. He was one month and two days in the service after he was inducted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. But it was not his fault, because the authorities knew that when they drafted him.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not the fault of the Government that he was charged with murder.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. No; but knowing that that charge was against him, why did they not leave him?

Mr. BLANTON. I think he ought to be restored and put in status quo by having his discharge made honorable, but there should be a provision here that he shall have no pensionable status in the future, because otherwise, sooner or later, we will find him on the pension rolls of the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Oh, no; he did not serve 90 days.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the reaction of the author of this bill to the criticism leveled against the bill by the gentleman's colleague, because it impressed me very strongly. When I read this report I had difficulty in concluding wherein he was entitled to any benefits by reason of running away from a charge of murder.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. He did not run away.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, whether he ran away or whether he was inducted into service does not matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. The authorities knew his status, and he showed that on the questionnaire.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Did he come to them and ask them to protect him by letting him enlist, so as to get him away from the murder charge?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. No. He was drafted. The Government knew that when they took him, and they knew he was liable to call.

Mr. STAFFORD. But he rendered no service whatsoever to the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. It was not his fault, because the Government knew that when they took him in there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it was his fault, because there was hanging over his head the sword of Damocles.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Why did not the Government leave him there and not draft him?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not going into that. I do not know whether he was willingly inducted into the service or not.

I think a majority of the people in his situation, having a charge of murder against him, would have been only too glad to have been inducted into the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I may say to the gentleman this man is a member of one of the best families in the community. He is a good man. The prominent men of that community are for him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does he sue for a pension?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. He asked me to introduce this bill to get him an honorable discharge.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he gets it, will he make an effort to get a pension, too?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. That I do not know. I did not discuss that with him.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us so amend the bill that he can not. I shall offer an amendment on page 2, line 9, after the word "shall" to strike out the balance of the paragraph and add "ever be allowed a pension."

Mr. STAFFORD. No; we should add the words "shall have been held to have accrued by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. BACHMANN. The next Congress can change that, if you do put it in.

Mr. BLANTON. They will hear from some of us if they do.

Mr. BACHMANN. What is the use of passing the bill at all if we amend it in this way? Is not that the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. This man wants to have an honorable discharge. There is all the difference in the world between an honorable discharge and one that is not honorable.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is that all he wants?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. As far as I know, it is. At least, that is the extent of the request that was made of me.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I venture to say Congress has no power to authorize or direct the granting of an honorable discharge to any soldier. That is a power entirely in the War Department and the officers of the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Legislation of this character has been passed by Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I think not. Congress can say, and Congress has repeatedly said, that in the administration of the military laws, including those relating to pensions, a former service man is to be considered as having been honorably discharged.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Where is a man dishonorably discharged to get relief if he is entitled to an honorable discharge if it is not from Congress?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We passed laws which provide that for certain purposes the former soldier shall be considered as having been honorably discharged, that he may have the benefits that accrue to honorably discharged soldiers, but Congress has no power to set aside the verdict of a court-martial or the act of discharge.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. There was no court-martial in this case.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And it can not set aside the act of discharge by an Army officer.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. His discharge could not have been other than what it was under the rules. It is neither honorable nor dishonorable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the point of the observation just made by the gentleman from Illinois, I may say to him, was made by me when this bill was first considered. I called the attention of the author of the bill to the fact I had difficulty in reconciling myself to the provision directing that the Secretary of War provide an honorable discharge. I think the farthest we can go, and I want to help the gentleman, is to say that the Secretary of War is authorized to grant, rather than directed to grant.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, their widows, children, and dependent relatives, Carl C. Baxter shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry, on February 12, 1920.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to grant to the said Carl C. Baxter a discharge certificate showing that he is held and considered to have been honorably discharged as of such date.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "February 12, 1920" and insert in lieu thereof "September 8, 1918."

Page 2, line 4, after the word "date," add the following: "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the World War adjusted compensation act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled to by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out the balance of the paragraph; and on page 2, line 1, strike out "SEC. 2."; and in line 4, of page 2, strike out the words "of such date"; and insert in lieu thereof "of September 8, 1918."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD to the substitute amendment: Page 2, line 4, after the word "discharged," insert the words "as a private, Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that is an amendment in the third degree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled.

The amendment to the substitute amendment was agreed to.

The substitute amendment as amended was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out the words "the said," on page 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 2, after the word "grant," strike out the words "the said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the hybrid nature of the bill as it is now, I ask that we may have the bill read in its complete form.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. We give this man an honorable discharge and cut off the pension. This ought to suit the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND AND ROBERT N. GOLDING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10107, for the relief of Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and shall object unless the chairman of the committee cares to make a statement.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not insist on making a statement, but if the gentleman wants any information about this bill I will be pleased to give it.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The information, as I find it, is all contained in the report—that the appointment of these gentlemen as attorneys provided "You are to serve without compensation other than paid you by the United States Railroad Labor Board as the attorneys representing the board in a contempt proceeding by the board against two witnesses."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, this bill came to me from the Attorney General with the request that I introduce it.

It seems these attorneys were brought into a contempt proceeding to which the Railroad Labor Board was a party. They were appointed regularly by the United States Attorney General and were to be special assistant attorney generals. In notifying them of their appointment the Attorney General stated that they were to get no compensation except that which would come out of the appropriation for the Labor Board. It so happened that there was no appropriation for the Labor Board to take care of attorneys. These men went along and performed their service, were duly sworn in as assistant attorney generals, and were engaged on this litigation for some period of time. The Attorney General evidently, in making the appointment, was under the impression that there were funds under the control of the Labor Board to pay for the work of these men. It happened there was no such appropriation, and the Attorney General now recommends that they be paid by direct appropriation as a measure of relief.

There is no question about the fact they performed the services, and the amount of their fees for the services performed has not been questioned. They are left in the position that they have worked without pay, due to an error of the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice recommends payment to cure this fault of their own. I think the gentleman ought to be fair in the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, from my reading of this report I am led to believe these men agreed to serve without any compensation whatever.

Mr. BLACK. That is not true. The designation was that they were to serve without compensation except that coming from the Railroad Labor Board. Evidently the Department of Justice thought that these men, at the time of the designation, were regularly in the employ of the Railroad Labor Board. It was entirely a misapprehension on the part of the Department of Justice and these men have done the work.

Mr. GRISWOLD. If the gentleman will permit, these were special attorneys employed for this special case, which came up in Kansas, according to the Supreme Court reporter, and they were appointed merely to give them an official standing as United States district attorneys, not because they could perform the services better than anybody else, and this was contrary to the law.

Mr. BLACK. They were appointed as assistant attorney generals in order to give them official status in these proceedings, but all the time the Department of Justice thought they were actually in the employ of the Railroad Labor Board and that they would be paid in due course out of their appropriations.

I think it is highly unfair not to pay these men. They have done the work for the Government, and the error is chargeable to the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice has gone to the trouble of preparing a bill and sending it to me and asking me to introduce it.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE AND TREASURY DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1934

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD] to ask unanimous consent to send a bill to conference.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, as I understand this measure there has been put on this bill at the other end of the Capitol some entirely new and far-reaching legislation, much more drastic than any legislation of this character that has ever been presented to the House.

Of course, I know that the Members on the Democratic side will oppose this new legislation, because last winter when we proposed some measures along this line that were much less far-reaching, much less drastic, the Democrats bound their Members by caucus rule to oppose those recommendations in toto, because they were not going to abrogate their right as a legislative body.

I do not know how much farther this legislation goes than what we were willing at that time to stand for. My position in this matter is exactly the same as it was previously. I do not intend to change it because there is a change in the administration on the 4th of March. I have taken the position all along that authority must be given to some one to do certain work in this direction. But I do not want to go so far as to abrogate all rights of the American Congress as a legislative branch. [Applause.]

I feel that we should have some indication from Members on the other side as to what their attitude will be in regard to this new and novel legislation.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. BYRNS, chairman of the Appropriations Committee and chairman of the subcommittee making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, is unavoidably absent to-day.

Mr. SNELL. That is one reason why I think this ought to go over until the gentleman who is to manage this conference is here.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman from Tennessee asked me to bring this matter up at this time. As the gentleman from New York says, the amendments placed on the bill by the Senate are very complicated. The gentleman understands that these amendments are in the nature of legislative amendments. It will be quite a task for the conferees to work this matter out, and it will take considerable time. We are interested in getting it in conference as soon as possible.

The gentleman from New York also understands that these being legislative matters put on in the Senate they will as a matter of course have to come back to the House, and the House will have an opportunity to pass upon these matters directly.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, I understand that matter, and I know that the gentleman from Tennessee, who will control the time, can move the previous question, which will cut off all discussion by the minority. I have had experience in that matter, and I know that may be done.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think the gentleman from New York understands that the gentleman from Tennessee is always fair and liberal and that he will give the House plenty of time to discuss these matters.

Mr. SNELL. And that depends upon the definition of what is fair and reasonable. I am not making any personal criticism against the gentleman from Tennessee, but I think the matter should go over until we understand what his attitude is going to be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The purpose of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], then, is to wait and find out whether or not he can secure some favorable agreements from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] with reference to this conference report?

Mr. SNELL. I do not intend eventually to object to this, but I would like to have the matter go over a day or two so that we might have a little longer time to consider it.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as these material amendments have to come back to the House for consideration, I see no reason why we should not let this bill go to conference and let us get busy upon it.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman from New York had not had experience along that line, he would see no reason for it, but I know what may happen in this House, as does also the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, it will take considerable time for the conferees to work this matter out, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and those who are interested will have plenty of time to study the matter and be thoroughly informed when the matter comes back to the House.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman be one of the conferees?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell the House what his attitude is going to be upon this matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. I can not tell at this time what my attitude will be. I can not anticipate what might come up in the conference.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman knows the main principle at stake, and he knows how the Democratic majority voted at the last session and in the early part of this session. I take it for granted that the gentleman is against it, because he has voted against it always. What I want to know is what position our side wants to take on this important new legislation. We ought to have a little time to study it.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman will have plenty of time to consider it, because it will take quite a little while for the conferees to work that out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we are going to have plenty of time to discuss this now, or I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may have all the time he wants.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I think the matter is thoroughly understood, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman demands the regular order, there is nothing left for me but to object, and I do object.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, that is all that we can do at this time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ADA B. (GOULD) GOLLAN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3694) for the relief of Ada B. (Gould) Gollan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Under existing law, would the beneficiary of this bill, the daughter of the deceased, have been able to collect and receive this money if she had known of the death at the time and had known that the money was in the hands of the estate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think she would.

Mr. BACHMANN. What difference would it make?

Mr. BANKHEAD. She was the only possible heir to this property.

Mr. SCHAFER. It would make a great deal of difference. If she had known of the death of her stepmother and had known of the funds and would not have had title to those funds under the law, why should she have title to them under a special act of Congress after they have been turned in to the Treasury under existing law?

Mr. BACHMANN. I assume that that is the situation or the gentleman from Alabama would not have introduced the bill. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin think that this is a meritorious bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. I am trying to obtain some information, and I wish the gentleman from West Virginia would confine his attention to bills that he intends to object to. In view of the information supplied by the author of the bill, I shall not object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the preamble will be omitted and the Clerk will read the bill.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the sum of $576.41 to the said Ada B. (Gould) Gollan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said payment being the amount rightfully due to the said Ada B. (Gould) Gollan growing out of the disposition of the estate of Mary D. Gould, deceased (her stepmother), and which was paid into the Treasury of the United States at the close of the administration of said estate; and such payment shall relieve the said Secretary of the Treasury from any obligation to the said District of Columbia for the said sum of money so deposited.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out the preamble and at the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 4, at the end of the line, strike out the word "the," and at the beginning of line 5 strike out the word "said."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHARLES R. THORNTON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2144) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a patent to certain lands to Charles R. Thornton.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to inquire what equities Mr. Thornton has in this land. There is nothing in the report to show that he has any interest in it whatever.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, he has an equity of some improvements placed on the ground. I think no one will object to the bill if I may have about five minutes in which to make a statement. These lands were originally in an Indian reservation. In 1872 the Government took over the lands provided they might be entered under two laws, the homestead law and the preemption law, and no other law. Under the general laws the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow the sale of what we call isolated tracts, when all the contiguous land to a tract of less than 160 acres has been taken.

That particular law does not apply to these lands. This man, Doctor Thornton, assumed that the general law did apply to it. He found a 40-acre tract not occupied by anybody, owned by the Government, all the rest of the land having been occupied for 30 years. He filed on it under the so-called isolated tract law. After a long, tedious examination, it was held there was no law authorizing the Secretary to sell the land in these 15 townships set apart to be disposed of under the homestead and preemption laws. He therefore now asks the Secretary of the Interior to sell him the land at what the Secretary may say is a reasonable figure, not less than $1.25 an acre. Originally the land sold under the preemption law for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is my understanding that all the lands around this have been entered.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Then why should not this tract be put up at public auction and allow everybody to bid on it, as the law provides?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. But there is no law providing that the land within this reservation shall be sold that way.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The Commissioner of the Land Office states in his statement:

I know of no reason why the special privileges conferred by this bill should be limited to Mr. Thornton and, if the tract is ordered to be sold, why the sale should not be at public auction, as provided by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. But previous to that he tells you that if you are going to pass any law, you should pass a general law, making it applicable to any other lands in these 15 townships. The objection to selling it at public auction is that this man had some claim to it for the last 10 years. He has put some improvements on it. The land is probably worth $1.25 or $2.50, but he has put some improvements on there. If anyone would go in and bid against Doctor Thornton for the land, he would not have to pay Doctor Thornton for the improvements which he has put there.

Mr. GRISWOLD. But he had the same right to enter on this land as other people who entered on other lands surrounding it.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Oh, yes; but in the meantime they repealed the preemption law, and it is possible the man did not have a homestead right; or, if he did, he might not want to exercise it on 40 acres of land worth $50. I am sure the bill is meritorious. It comes to me from Senator WALSH and has passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the acts of June 5, 1872 (17 Stat. 226), and February 11, 1874 (18 Stat. 15), the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to approve the isolated tract application of Charles R. Thornton, of Missoula, Mont., No. Great Falls 076803, covering the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 24, township 10 north, range 20 west, principal meridian, Bitter Root Valley, Mont., and to grant to said Charles R. Thornton a patent in fee to such land upon payment by him of a reasonable price therefor as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, but not less than $1.25 per acre.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS H. LAIRD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5769, authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Thomas H. Laird.

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, did the gentleman from Georgia introduce this bill?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. I notice the bill, as originally introduced, requested Congress to present a medal of honor. The committee changed it to the distinguished-service medal. I wish the gentleman would explain to the House just what is involved in this particular bill and why we should change it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. As the one who reported the bill which passed the subcommittee and the full Committee on Military Affairs unanimously, let me say we felt the congressional medal of honor should be reserved primarily for gallantry of men in the uniform of the United States. This man was not in the military or naval service of the United States. He was harbor master at that harbor. He performed a distinguished service. He showed unusual initiative and vigilance in safeguarding the interests of the United States, and we simply reduced the distinction from that of a congressional medal of honor to the distinguished-service medal, thinking that that would be a recognition of his services.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. I notice in the committee report that Wallace J. Pierpont, the mayor of the city, ordered the ship moved by Captain Laird. I also notice, on page 2 of the committee report, that David A. Barrel, of Savannah, took charge of the ship and arrested the officers. Now, if you are going to grant a medal to the beneficiary of this bill, why do you not include a medal for David A. Barrel, a civilian, who singlehanded, captured and arrested all the officers on this enemy ship?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I would not have any objection to the consideration of that matter.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am serious. Let us not make fish out of one and fowl out of another. I would like to have some information as to why a man who, singlehanded, captured all the officers and men of this enemy ship, should be ignored.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Well, there is no bill in his behalf that has been presented to the Congress. That is the best answer I can make to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER. Would the gentleman offer an amendment to this bill? Otherwise, if you are going to leave out the man who really did perform distinguished service, I am going to object to consideration.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I may say I would have no personal objection, but I would say to the gentleman it would seem to me that to offer an amendment to this bill in behalf of Mr. Barrel, without its having first been considered by the Military Affairs Committee as to his connection with the incident, would not be proper.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman have the Committee on Military Affairs look into the facts regarding the service performed by David A. Barrel, who, singlehanded, captured the entire crew, officers and men, with a view to giving him recognition?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on April 6, 1917, just before war was declared by the United States on the Central Powers, there was a German warship lying in the harbor at Savannah. The crew, expecting war to be declared, had already destroyed some of the machinery and were getting ready to sink that German warship in the harbor of Savannah and thereby block the harbor for the duration of the war. The harbor master, Captain Laird, within 10 minutes after war was declared, went aboard and interned this foreign warship and made prisoners of the crew.

I think this is a meritorious bill. So does the Committee on Military Affairs. I certainly hope the gentleman will not object to it.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did the gentleman state that the beneficiary of this bill arrested the crew?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. He was in charge.

Mr. SCHAFER. On page 2 of the committee report the statement is made that "immediately upon the declaration of war between the United States and Germany the Collector of Customs, David A. Barrel, of Savannah, took charge of the Hohenfelde, arrested its officers and crew, and ascertained that the ship's machinery had been dismantled," and so forth.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. He did it through the harbor master; he did it through Captain Laird.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does not the gentleman believe that David A. Barrel, who arrested the crew, should be recognized?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. No. The collector of the port did not do it. He had nothing to do with it, except through Captain Laird.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WILLIAM W. M'ELRATH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9915, to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, adjudicate, and enter judgment on the claim of William W. McElrath against the United States for compensation for the use or manufacture of an invention of William W. McElrath covered by reissue letters patent issued by the Patent Office of the United States on the 19th day of February, 1924.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the objection if the gentleman wishes to make a statement.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was originally introduced the War Department filed certain objections to it, as set out in this report. The bill has been reintroduced to meet and obviate the objections the War Department made to it. The War Department has no objection to it in its present form.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia about the bill. After setting forth the facts the War Department makes this statement:

It appears that if the War Department has made any use of the structure disclosed in the McElrath patent, that such use has been no more than of an experimental nature regarding which no court would feel justified in hearing patent litigation and that the proposed legislation is unnecessary and would tend to produce only unjustifiable litigation.

What about that?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is in the report, but the War Department has no objection to this party's having a right to go into the Court of Claims. As a matter of fact he had very valuable patent rights in this engine and it was taken over by the Government and actually used. Substantial evidence will be introduced if he is ever given an opportunity to present his case in the Court of Claims.

The gentleman will notice in the letter filed by Mr. Young that a board was created to determine the case. But before the proceedings could be brought to a conclusion one of the claimants filed a suit in the Court of Claims—not the beneficiary of this bill. I may say that Mr. Young served as chief of the patents division in 1917.

This bill merely gives him the right to go into the Court of Claims.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it is seldom you find in one report the reasons both pro and con.

The gentleman speaks of this man, Robert H. Young, whom I take to be a lawyer and who, as a former chief of the patents division, no longer with that office, has the crust to make an affidavit for presentation to the Congress concluding with this language:

> I think I can say that he, McElrath, has at no time suspended or relinquished any effort to accomplish the settlement from the Government.

What right has this man, the chief of the bureau of examiners of the Patent Office, to exert his interest for the benefit of Mr. McElrath? It merely shows he has done something as a favor.

The Secretary of War, Patrick J. Hurley, states:

> I have given this case rather extended consideration, because it apparently started out in an absolutely fair way to give a man an opportunity to exercise a right which he had inadvertently lost, but when we review the case we find that he did not inadvertently lose his right.

In another paragraph he says that he gave up the patent which he obtained in 1916 and obtained a reissue as of date 1920. At no time was he at any disability to pursue his legal rights if there was any kind of an infringement. He goes on to say what the situation would be in the event that evidence should be produced before the committee showing that Mr. McElrath was under a disability, but no such evidence has been shown here.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is examining the bill to find, if he possibly can, some reason to object to it. Of course, he can object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No; I am trying to find in the bill a reason not to object to the bill.

The further statement of the Secretary of War is a statement of reasons why this bill should not be passed, and his recommendation is that the proposed legislation be not enacted into law.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the original bill. If the gentleman will read the report with regard to this bill, he will find they have no objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The distinction between the two bills is that in the first bill he sought an option to go into either the United States court or the Court of Claims, whereas in this bill he seeks permission only to go into the Court of Claims. That is the only change in the bills.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman will see from Mr. Young's affidavit there that this board was created and proceeded to consider the matter. They took a great deal of time. In the meantime the statute ran against him. All he is seeking is an opportunity to present his claim in the Court of Claims.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In the pursuit of his legal rights he and his lawyers permitted the statute to run against him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLIVE SPROUSE AND ROBERT F. MOORE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10756, for the relief of Clive Sprouse and Robert F. Moore.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entries of Clive Sprouse (Salt Lake City serial 046562) and Robert F. Moore (Salt Lake City serial 048376), embracing land within the former Uintah Indian Reservation, are hereby validated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LLEWELLYN B. GRIFFITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3954, for the relief of Llewellyn B. Griffith.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, this amounts to a direction to a retiring board to put this man on the retired list in case the bill is passed. In other words, can such an inference be drawn, and would this be regarded as a declaration of policy on the part of the House or a direction to the retiring board to retire this man?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not so understand it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. So the retiring board will be perfectly free to use its own judgment in the matter?

Mr. ROGERS. The retiring board will be perfectly free to inquire into the matter and use its own judgment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I call attention to a typographical error in line 9, page 1; "in his judgment" should be changed to "in its judgment." I shall ask that this correction be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, here is a West Point graduate, born in 1894, who saw service in France and was gassed. On his return he attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology under the direction of the Government and was graduated with the degree of bachelor of science in 1921, and later was graduated from the United States Engineering School. On July 1, 1922, he requested to be discharged with one year's pay. On August 1, 1922, he requested to be ordered before a retiring board, claiming he had suffered attacks of asthma. The board found no indications or symptoms of asthma, and his request to appear before a retiring board was refused. He again asked for retirement, with one year's pay. On September 15, 1922, there was again found no evidence of asthma.

As I read this report, this man did not have any disease at the time of his discharge which showed that he was not fit for military duty. He might have had some sneezing or shortness of breath, but two boards found he was fit for military duty, and if he was fit for military duty he should have continued in the service.

Now, perhaps, after the lapse of 10 or 12 years, conditions may have changed so that the board may find he may have disabilities making him unfit for service. I question whether this man, with this record, is entitled to go before a retiring board for further examination.

Mr. ROGERS. As the gentleman will recall, this matter was gone into fully not only before the subcommittee, but the entire Committee on Military Affairs, and the gentleman will recall that in 1929 he had been found to have a 40 per cent disability. When he left West Point he was a man of superior physical stamina and ability, but by reason of the nature of his work he gradually developed this lung trouble, so that in 1929 he had a disability of 40 per cent and had already submitted to two operations, the nature of his work was such——

Mr. STAFFORD. To what operations did he submit—nasal operations? I have had nasal operations which made me more fit rather than more unfit.

Mr. ROGERS. As I recall, they were more serious operations than nasal operations, although I would not attempt offhand to state the exact nature of them; but there were very few records kept of his disability, because of the nature of his work. He was detached from troops, although he was severely gassed in action during the war.

All that is asked is that he be permitted to go before a retiring board, so that the matter may be fully gone into.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the regular order is demanded now, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

WILLIAM W. M'ELRATH

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 683, the bill H. R. 9915, which was just objected to by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON]. I have prepared an amendment that makes the bill satisfactory to the gentleman, and I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. In view of the fact that the bill was just passed, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia for this purpose, but the Chair wants to make a statement in this connection.

It is bad practice to return to bills that have been objected to. The order of the House is that we shall begin at a certain number and continue the call of the calendar and consider bills unobjected to. If the Speaker recognizes gentlemen to ask to go back to bills that have been objected to, it is possible that the gentleman who objected has left the Chamber and will not have an opportunity to object to returning to the bill. Moreover, if we return to bills that have been objected to, we will not give the House an opportunity to consider bills on the calendar that should be reached.

The Chair is going to recognize the gentleman from Virginia for this purpose simply because the bill was objected to less than five minutes ago, and the gentleman has an amendment which he states will make the bill unobjectionable. However, the Chair makes the statement now that it is bad practice to return to bills on the calendar that have been objected to.

Is there objection to returning to Calendar No. 683?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, during the discussion a moment ago it was said that this claim had practically no merit to it, that it was simply sent to the Court of Claims as a matter of form. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODRUM. No, I do not think that is correct.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Texas said there was no merit in the claim itself.

Mr. BLANTON. I was quoting what the department said about it, that it was encumbering the docket of the court with litigation.

Mr. WOODRUM. The bill has been drawn in a different form since then.

Mr. DYER. The more cases we send to the Court of Claims, the more expense it is to the Government. I think it is a bad practice to send bills of that character to the Court of Claims, but in view of my high regard for the gentleman from Virginia, I do not want to object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, what is the amount of damage carried in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is a question for the court to determine on the use of certain patent rights.

Mr. SCHAFER. Can not the gentleman approximate it?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it would amount to only a few thousand dollars—it is not a large claim.

Mr. SCHAFER. I notice that in the report there is an affidavit of Robert H. Young. Was he, at the time he gave the affidavit, in the Patent Office?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not at all.

Mr. SCHAFER. In a case like this, why did not the committee get information regarding the status of the matter from the Patent Office of the United States? Why did not the committee obtain a report from the Patent Office instead of from some former employee?

Mr. WOODRUM. This was a reputable, high-class man who gave the information to the committee in the form of the affidavit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia to return to Calendar No. 683?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and empowered to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment on the claim of William W. McElrath for reasonable compensation arising from the use without lawful right by the United States of an invention described in and defined by the claims of Reissue Letters Patent No. 15769, reissued by the Patent Office of the United States to said William W. McElrath on the 19th day of February, 1924: Provided, That within one year from the date of approval of this act said William W. McElrath shall file in the said Court of Claims a petition setting forth a statement of his claim for reasonable compensation for the use and manufacture by or for the United States on and after February 19, 1924: Provided further, That any statutes of limitations ordinarily applicable be, and the same are hereby, waived and shall not be considered or applied by the Court of Claims in considering and adjudicating such claim: And provided further, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, except as otherwise herein waived.

SEC. 2. From any decision of judgment rendered in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party as is provided by law in other cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "without," insert the word "purported."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "use," insert "on and after the date of reissue of patent 15769, namely, February 19, 1924."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "or for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the figures "1924," insert "and further the determination in connection therewith and other matters in showing the validity of said patent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "act," insert "appeal may lie as in other suits for infringement of patent to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and from the decision of the latter court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE-TREASURY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution for printing under the rules:

House Resolution 373, Rept. No. 1990

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 13520, with Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, to the end that all Senate amendments be, and the same are, disagreed to, and a conference is requested with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

LLEWELLYN B. GRIFFITH

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 685, H. R. 3954, for the relief of Llewellyn B. Griffith.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The Clerk will call the next bill.

CLAIMS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL FOR DAMAGES, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8401) to authorize the settlement of individual claims of military personnel for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. COLLINS. I withhold it.

Mr. PITTENGER. I hope this bill will not meet with objection. There is a little dispute here between the Comptroller General and the War Department. The law under which appropriations for bills of this character are made, according to the construction of the Comptroller General, is not broad enough to authorize these payments. This bill is favorably reported by the War Department. Only about $4,000 is involved. All they ask is authority to pay these claims out of funds already appropriated in the possession of the War Department.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I have been over this bill very carefully and I am obliged to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. I object.

WILLIAM W. M'ELRATH

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings whereby the bill H. R. 9915 was passed in order to offer an amendment to the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, adjudicate, and enter judgment on the claim of William W. McElrath against the United States for compensation for the use or manufacture of an invention of William W. McElrath covered by reissue letters patent issued by the Patent Office of the United States on the 19th day of February, 1924.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the title offered by Mr. STAFFORD: In the title strike out the words "use or."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DISBURSING OFFICERS, UNITED STATES ARMY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8403) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States, and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. COLLINS. I withhold it.

Mr. PITTENGER. In order to say in connection with this bill that only three or four hundred dollars are involved. It is a bookkeeping proposition.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can not get away with that statement, because it is not in line with the facts. There are thousands of dollars involved in this bill and I have been requested by the Comptroller General to object to it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FLORENCE MAHONEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3036) for the relief of Florence Mahoney.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is there any one here who knows anything about the facts in this particular bill?

Mr. BLACK. I can not add anything to the report. It is a short report. The accident was caused by an intoxicated driver of an Army truck.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman know whether the injury is permanent or not?

Mr. BLACK. I can not say offhand. I have not looked into the matter for some time. I think I should say at this time that I think it is not incumbent upon the chairman of the Committee on Claims to be familiar at the time any bill is called in the House with all of the details in respect to it. If a Member is interested enough to have his bill presented to and passed through the committee, I think he should be here when his bill is called.

Mr. BACHMANN. I think it is true that there are too many bills on the calendar to expect the chairman of the committee to know the details of all of them.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, the author of the bill is unavoidably detained. I reported out the bill. On page 2 of the report it will be seen that the injuries were suffered by reason of an intoxicated Government driver of a truck, and also that this woman is suffering from traumatic neurosis, and a moderate strain of the right sterno cleido muscle, and shock. The board, after careful investigation and hearing, awarded her $1,000, but they had no power to pay that.

Mr. BACHMANN. How bad is the injury?

Mr. SCHAFER. It is a permanent injury. I agree with the report of the impartial board of Army officers.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin who made this report has gone into the case so thoroughly and states to the House on his responsibility that it is a meritorious claim, I shall not object.

Mr. SCHAFER. The only complaint I have to offer is that $1,000 is not enough, but we had to reduce it because we felt that the conscientious objectors here in the House would not let it go through for more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $2,500, to Florence Mahoney, of Newport, R. I., for injuries received as the result of a collision involving an Army vehicle in Newport, R. I., on June 4, 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$2,500," and insert "$1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GEORGE TATUM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5770, for the relief of George Tatum.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I read this report correctly, when this man enlisted he went home; he was sick and he remained home, and of course he was charged with desertion. He seeks now to come in and charge the United States Army and the United States Government with the cause of his sickness and put himself on the pension list. Is that not correct?

Mr. GOSS. He was inducted into the Army and was there about a month when he was taken sick and went home. During his stay at home he was in touch with the county sheriff and others in authority. It is brought out in the report on page 1. We had affidavits to that effect. As soon as his sickness was over he surrendered himself to the company which he left and was then put in the stockade. About a month after he had been in the stockade he was ordered to the base hospital for further treatment. The gentleman will notice in the report of the War Department that his ailment was acute, not chronic. It came upon him about a month after he came in.

In serving on a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have been very, very careful in connection with desertion cases, especially in the World War. We thought there were extenuating circumstances in this case, on account of the sickness which came upon the soldier soon after he enlisted, and after that he was in touch with the sheriff and others during his illness, and he reported immediately after he was able to get back to camp. The committee unanimously felt it was a worthy case and the bill should be passed.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What service did this man ever render to his country in connection with the World War?

Mr. GOSS. He was in the service for one month and contracted acute pharyngitis, which affected his heart.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Did the gentleman not say it was chronic?

Mr. GOSS. I said it was acute. That shows that it happened after he went into the service in good health. Acute means that it comes on quickly.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Has it since become chronic?

Mr. GOSS. No.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is that the reason he is coming here now trying to get on the pension roll?

Mr. GOSS. I do not know what his physical condition is to-day, but they sent him to a base hospital after he surrendered himself at camp.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The basis of my objection is these words over the signature of Maj. Gen. C. H. Bridges. He states that this man deserted August 10, 1918.

Mr. GOSS. That is right.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And he remained absent in desertion until on or about February 13, 1919, when he surrendered himself and was delivered to the Eighth Company, Second Receiving Battalion, One hundred and fifty-seventh Depot Brigade, at Camp Gordon, Ga., and then he was confined in the One hundred and fifty-seventh Depot Brigade stockade. He was transferred March 18, 1919, to the Thirty-eighth Company, Tenth Receiving Battalion, and was admitted to the base hospital at Camp Gordon, Ga., April 5, 1919. At that time he was suffering with acute naso-pharyngitis and valvular heart disease, with aortic regurgitation, where he remained until April 17, 1919, when he was discharged from the service by reason of desertion and physical unfitness for service.

Mr. GOSS. I will say to the gentleman further that the board could not find that he really had deserted. I would say he would have been given a dishonorable discharge if that had been a very serious matter.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Oh, he has no dishonorable discharge?

Mr. GOSS. No. He has a blue discharge. That is different from the yellow ones, I will say.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Here is a man who was 43 days in a camp, and under the terms of this bill no back pension can accrue.

Mr. GOSS. No. Absolutely not.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But the minute this bill becomes law he is entitled to register under the Veterans' Administration law.

Mr. GOSS. No. I will offer an amendment that even exempts him from the veterans' law prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. Prior to the passage of this act; but this man develops a disability which, under the rules of the Veterans' Bureau, will be recognized as having been service connected, and then from the date this bill passes he will be eligible, with 43 days' service, to be taken care of by the Veterans' Bureau. I am opposed to it, and I object, Mr. Speaker.

WILLIAM M. STODDARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1825, for the relief of William M. Stoddard.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear what the gentleman from Texas has to say about this old soldier.

Mr. THOMASON. He was a good soldier, a country boy from Arkansas who, when a mutiny broke out down in Anniston, Ala.——

Mr. EATON of Colorado. They just could not hold him, but he went down to the arsenal and stole some pistols.

Mr. THOMASON. No. They called out a certain number of troops, and the soldiers could not stop the mutiny, and the sheriff then asked for these men, and this boy, along with others, went along. They had no arms, and they went to the arsenal and got pistols and helped stop the mutiny. Later this boy was court-martialed. Still later it was found that the court-martial was illegally constituted. The result was he was given a dishonorable discharge. Later he reenlisted and served with honor and even with distinction and received an honorable discharge. The War Department recommends that this bill be passed.

Mr. THOMASON. I know the man well. He is one of the substantial farmers of my district, an honest, upstanding man.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection on the recommendation of the War Department.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William M. Stoddard, who was a member of Company D, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 13th day of February, 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "13" and insert "25," and in line 10 strike out "1898" and insert "1899" and add the following: "and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CLARENCE R. KILLION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2445, for the relief of Clarence R. Killion.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa explain that part of this case that alleged the man was charged with seeking safety in the rear. If he was not, in fact, a coward and ran away, I think this bill ought to stand. If it is true that he ran to the rear and was court-martialed properly for that, I think it would be a shame if this bill should be passed.

Mr. KOPP. I shall be very glad to answer the gentleman's inquiry. This young man served on the border in Texas in 1916. Early in the World War he again entered the Army, and was assigned to the One hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry. His work in the Army was to establish and maintain telephone communications between regimental headquarters and the front during battle and during trench warfare. He was in nearly every great American offensive, and on numerous occasions was under shell fire more than a week at a time. He has a very remarkable record and the evidence will convince anyone of this fact. At Chateau-Thierry he was under continuous shell fire for 30 hours without relief.

His regiment had been withdrawn to the rest area, about 4 miles back of the front lines, when his absence occurred. There the men sat about, and then some of them went back to a little village where they drank together some of the wine and other liquors. I want to say that this man was in no sense given to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. He is a young man of excellent character.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. In very few cases could a man become intoxicated on good wines such as they have in France.

Mr. KOPP. I am not as much of an authority on that as is the gentleman from Wisconsin, so I must accept his statement as correct.

This man became intoxicated, got into a box car, and the next morning awoke to find himself further back of the lines. This occurred on October 10. He returned to his regiment as quickly as possible. He was immediately put in the service and again went over the top and was in active duty until the war ceased.

He did not have a trial by court-martial until after they had entered Germany, and he knew nothing about the court-martial until the morning the trial was to be held. That morning he was ill, as is substantiated by the officer who acted as counsel for him. He was so ill he could not speak out loud. He could only whisper. He had no chance whatever to confer with his counsel. His counsel could not confer with him. There was no evidence taken except a brief statement by himself which had to be repeated by another in order to be heard by the military court. His counsel did not procure witnesses, and no witnesses were present.

These are the facts, and all the affidavits attached to the report show that he never faltered, no matter where he was. He was under fire time and again. Again and again he risked his life for his country.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. One more question, Mr. Speaker: Is this the man who participated in the Champagne-Marne offensive, the Aisne-Marne offensive, the St. Mihiel offensive, and the Meuse-Argonne offensive?

Mr. KOPP. He participated in all of them. He participated in practically every great American offensive of the World War. His comrades have borne eloquent testimony to his courage and bravery. One mistake, made when he was worn out, when for many days he had gone without rest or sleep, can not wipe out such a magnificent record. That record still stands.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, a similar Senate bill, S. 2148, has been passed. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill and have it considered in lieu of the House bill. I shall then offer the amendment which the House committee adopted.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are the amendments identical? Instead of "honorably discharged" it should read "discharged under honorable conditions."

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman offer such an amendment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Clarence R. Killion, who served in Company M, One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, Forty-second Division, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said division on the 1st day of December, 1919: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KOPP: Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KOPP: On page 1, in line 10, after the word "no," strike out the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Bounty, back pay, pension, allowance or any payment provided under the World War Veterans Act, 1924, as amended, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled to by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

This amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. In line 8, strike out the word "honorably," and after the word "discharge" insert "under honorable conditions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short statement made yesterday by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I ask the gentleman to what it relates?

Mr. BACON. It relates to depreciated currency.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman seen the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] about this?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I object, Mr. Speaker.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make a statement. The gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. OWEN], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER], and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR] inform the Chair that certain bills have been objected to on the calendar, but they have consulted the people who objected to them and they now ask the Chair to recognize them to ask unanimous consent to return to these bills.

While the Chair thinks this is bad practice, generally, it is now 20 minutes to 4 o'clock, and unless some one objects, the Chair is going to recognize these Members to ask unanimous consent to return to the bills referred to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I must object to two of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards it as bad practice to return to bills on the calendar, and this is the last time the Chair is going to recognize anyone to make the request to return to bills that have been objected to.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. OWEN].

Mrs. OWEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 617, the bill (H. R. 4973) that has been passed on the calendar.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If we return to the bill, I will have an opportunity to object?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection to returning to this bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in line with the practice we have followed with respect to every bill, I must object. We have not gone back before this to any bill that was called the day before.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 682, the bill H. R. 5769.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 612, the bill (S. 3536).

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 374

Resolved, That on Friday, February 10, 1933, after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to consider bills on the private calendar unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call of bills on said calendar to begin where the last call ended.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the District of Columbia appropriation bill will not be ready for consideration to-morrow?

Mr. RAINEY. That bill will not be ready to-morrow.

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if when he is going to move to take up the Private Calendar, he will not give us a little more notice? We have been in session on the Private Calendar for two days, and we have to examine these bills. We can not intelligently take care of these bills unless we have time to examine them.

Mr. RAINEY. I will give the gentleman as much notice as I can. It has to be done by unanimous consent.

The resolution was agreed to.

STAMP MONEY

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a letter from Hon. H. A. Griffiths, of Caldwell, Idaho, in which he sets forth his plan for the issuance of an emergency currency. I thank Mr. Griffiths for his letter; and while I can not approve his plan for raising revenue, I feel that its mechanics is worthy of consideration and of preservation in the RECORD.

Mr. Griffiths, in seeking to provide for the issuance of what he terms gold notes to aid in the revival of commerce and industry and for the purpose of stimulating business and relieving distress due to unemployment, would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury, in cooperation with the Postmaster General, to issue and redeem this circulating medium.

Mr. Griffiths's plan further provides that as soon as practicable after the date of its enactment and at suitable intervals thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute to the persons entitled thereto such gold notes in the denominations of one, five, ten, and twenty dollars, and of sufficient size for the attachment of reconstruction revenue stamps, as provided in his bill.

This gold note of the United States, payable to the holder when reconstruction revenue stamps are attached thereto, at least 2 per cent of its value, shall be legal tender in payment of all debts and dues, public and private, under Mr. Griffith's plan, and, if necessary, is to be reissued by the Government until sufficient stamps are attached for its redemption. The gold note shall be redeemable by the United States Government in gold any time after the reconstruction stamps attached thereto amount to 100 per cent of the face value of the gold note.

Each designated revenue agency would be required to indorse on each gold note the date of its distribution and the name of the agency, and to keep such records thereof as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The Secretary of the Treasury would keep on sale at all times and until the time had expired for the redemption of the final issue of the gold notes at all United States post offices, and at such other places as he may designate reconstruction revenue stamps of the denominations of 2, 10, 20, and 40 cents.

In case gold notes provided for in the plan become worn-out or mutilated bank notes, they would be replaced in the manner of worn-out or mutilated bank notes, and the new gold note shall have credited upon it the value of the stamps of the gold note which it replaces.

All sums received from the sale of the reconstruction revenue stamps shall be covered into special fund in the Treasury to be known as the reconstruction revenue fund. All moneys in such fund would be appropriated and made available for the redemption of the gold notes and for the administration of the act, including salaries and other necessary expenses in connection with the gold notes division.

For the purpose of administering the provisions of the act there would be established in the Department of the Treasury a separate division, to be known as the gold notes division, and the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to appoint, without regard of the civil service laws, a director of the gold notes, who would be at the head of the gold notes division, at a salary to be fixed by Congress, and to appoint, subject to the provisions of the civil service laws, such other officers and employees as he may deem necessary, whose salaries shall be fixed in accordance with the classification act of 1923.

The Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to confer and impose upon the director of gold notes such rights, privileges, powers, and duties as he may deem necessary for the proper administration of the provisions of the act, including those necessary for the preparation of the gold notes and stamps provided for in the act and the dissemination of such information as will promote the acceptance and use by the public of gold notes as a medium of exchange in domestic commerce.

The average price level as shown by the United States Department of Labor and prices for all of the articles of commerce, including labor for the year 1926, would be established and maintained as the normal price level for the United States.

The amount of gold notes would be regulated as follows: The normal trend of the revenue of the United States would be determined by comparing the revenue receipts of the current year with those of the normal year of 1926. In periods of boom, when revenues are above normal, the gold notes would not be issued for any purpose, and surplus revenues of the Government would be used to cancel indebtedness. In case of financial distress, when the revenues fall below the normal revenue trend, then taxes would not be raised on objects of taxation or extended to other objects subject to taxation, but all deficits caused by the falling off of revenue would be met by the issuance of gold notes as provided in the plan.

It would be the duty of the director of gold notes to make and issue gold notes as provided in the act to all persons entitled thereto. Any department of Government having determined that the Government owes a sum of money to any person which is not paid because of lack of funds shall cause the disbursing officer of that division to make requisition to the department of gold notes for gold notes to pay the same, and the same shall be paid to the person entitled thereto in gold notes as other debts of the Government are paid.

In the administration of the act the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to cooperate with other Federal agencies and other departments of the Government and to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary.

Mr. Speaker, this completes my statement concerning the mechanics and purposes of Mr. Griffiths' plan. I heartily approve Mr. Griffiths' purposes, admire the mechanics of his plan, but do not conscientiously believe that this method of raising revenue, even during this depression, would be good for our people.

In an open letter to President Hoover concerning this plan, Mr. Griffiths, in part, said:

> This plan provides for the immediate emergency caused by the excess of debts, both public and private, now prevailing among the people of the United States.
> It also provides an automatic control of the tendency to inflate or to deflate the currency of the United States.
> It provides that for every dollar of debts evidenced by the gold notes herein provided it will effect the liquidation of $50 of private debts.

There is much merit in Mr. Griffiths's plan, but I feel that it contains more evil than good. I have heretofore expressed my views rather fully on this and similar plans and, therefore, shall not enter into a further discussion at this time except to say my most serious objection is to its sales tax provisions.

SENATE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1933

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, without whose help our labor is in vain, renew in us at this morning hour the sense of Thy gracious presence, and let it be to us this day a constant impulse to courage, trustfulness, and peace.

Thou hast committed to us a life of high vocation; let now Thine own breathing in our hearts interpret for us its sacred opportunities to serve the people of this Nation without stint of self, to share each other's burdens, and face with courage and discernment these pressing human problems with their changing tangled worth.

Touch with Thy glory every cloud of sorrow, shine with Thy light through the dull atmosphere of care, and above all else grant that humility may be our sanctuary and Thy service the very joy of our souls. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—THE CALENDAR

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I submit the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That after routine morning business shall have been disposed of the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under the 5-minute rule, beginning with Order No. 1212 (where the Senate left off yesterday), and upon its completion that the Senate then take up the calendar at the beginning under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator why we should go back to the beginning of the calendar today, in view of the call of the calendar yesterday?

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator had observed the reading of the unanimous-consent proposal, he would have noticed that it provides that unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning where we left off yesterday, shall first be considered.

Mr. KING. I so understood.

Mr. McNARY. Thereafter we will return to the beginning of the calendar and proceed at once under the provision of Rule VIII, which permits a motion to be made to take up a bill if there is objection to its consideration. The limitation of the unanimous-consent agreement is 2 o'clock.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to submit a motion at the beginning to take up a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done at this time. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BROOKHART. If unanimous consent is not given, I hope it will be in order to submit my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not be in order until after routine morning business is disposed of.

Mr. BROOKHART. If it will be in order immediately after the close of routine morning business, that is all I care to know.

Mr. McNARY. The unanimous-consent agreement preserves the rights of Senators. If the Senator has a bill which he wants to move to take up, it is covered in the second provision of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BROOKHART. But not until after we have completed the calendar. That would be too late, because some one would be able to filibuster on the bill until 2 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. First we would dispose of unobjected bills on the calendar, which would be run through very hastily. Then a motion can be made by any Member of the Senate to take up a particular bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. If that will take only a little while, I am satisfied.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Scott, president of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation, Chicago, Ill., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD; and as the joint resolution is on the calendar, I ask that the letter may lie on the table.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, December 17, 1932.

The Hon. HERBERT HOOVER,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In the crisis which the Nation faces at the present moment in regard to the liquor question, I take the liberty, as president of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation, of submitting the following statements of fact, which comprise our answer of economic findings to the question, "What of industry if beer returns to business?"

Those who profess to see in the relegalizing of beer an asset to legitimate business and an aid to the return of prosperity, ignore, or at least overlook, the following facts:

(1) The commodity of the brewing traffic, beer, is always and everywhere a direct competitor with legitimate business for the people's current income.

(2) The return of the legalized liquor traffic, of which the beer trade was 90 per cent of the total in preprohibition days, would directly and destructively affect many legitimate industries which have grown remarkably since the enactment of the eighteenth amendment, and which, contrary to the effect of the beer traffic, have through their own growth permanently benefited countless other legitimate businesses.

(3) Wherever in the old days the liquor traffic and the beer trade were legalized and licensed, there local industry in the long run always suffered, and crime, disorder, disease, and destitution inevitably followed.

AVAILABILITY

Even superficial examination of the reasons for this would reveal that the cause in all cases was not the saloon nor any specific variety of drink but the availability of law-protected alcoholic liquor in beverage form.

DEMAND

A very large proportion of the alleged "demand" for alcoholic beverages was always the result of high-pressure salesmanship of a product legalized and protected by the Government. Stripped of the artificial stimulations of advertising and Government sanction, the liquor traffic, condemned by the findings of science, the demands of industry, and the moral judgment of civilization, can only continue as a result of our failure to educate the people regarding it and to more adequately administer the laws which protect the Nation from its legal ravages.

CONSUMPTION

Because of this it is natural to find that there has been an emphatic decline in the production and consumption of beer since the coming of prohibition, and authentic surveys confirm this conclusion.

Let us take for the purpose of comparison the years 1914 to 1930, since 1914 represents practically the peak of consumption of all alcoholic liquors in the United States. In that year, according to Government records, 2,252,272,000 gallons of liquor were consumed, which, on the basis of the formula approved by the United States Government, shows a total of absolute alcohol consumed of 156,583,383 gallons.

Following 1914 began a steady increase in local and State prohibition territory throughout the country. In 1917 the total consumption was, in round figures, 2,095,000,000 gallons. The rapid increase in prohibition territory was still further reflected in 1918, when the total consumption dropped to 1,894,181,043 gallons, which, in terms of absolute alcohol consumed, was approximately 117,761,451 gallons.

BEER CONSUMPTION DROPS

In 1930 an exhaustive and scientific survey was made by the Government of all possible materials entering into the manufacture of illegal alcoholic liquors and the figure for possible production based upon this survey, including a liberal estimate of even smuggled liquors, revealed a possible consumption of absolute alcohol of 73,831,172 gallons, a drop of 65 per cent over the 1914 figures.

The same survey indicated that, while the amount of distilled liquors had distinctly declined, the amount of beer consumed had been reduced from 2,056,407,108 gallons in 1914 to 683,000,000 gallons for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930. Even the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, the most radical wet organization in the country, through its statistical department, admits that the consumpion of beer in 1930 did not exceed the Government estimate.

These figures for absolute alcohol do not include those for denatured alcohol for use in industry and the arts, which, as noted on Table II, page 19, of the United States Treasury Department Bureau of Industrial Alcohol Statistics Concerning Intoxicating Liquors (December, 1931), show that a total of 17,811,078 proof gallons of ethyl alcohol were withdrawn for denaturization in 1914 and the annual total of such denatured alcohol steadily grew, the 1930 figure being 148,303,438 gallons.

The answer to the question, "Will the brewer's dray bring prosperity with beer?" should be obvious to the merest tyro in the field of industry. Every beer truck under a relegalized traffic would be a concrete threat against the prosperity of every legitimate business within the vicinity of the brewers' retail outlets.

A modern truck carrying a load of 40 barrels of legalized beer would be sold for an ultimate retail total, conservatively estimated, of approximately $700 per load.

Spent for beer in any community, this $700 would be diverted from legitimate channels of trade and entertainment, and as a result the butcher, the baker, the grocer, the milk dealer, the soft-drink dispenser, the candy and ice cream retailer, the clothier, the shoe store, the dry-goods merchant, the radio store, the movies, the auto sales agencies—these and a host of others would suffer. And multiplied into a hundred million barrels, which the proponents of beer profess to believe would be sold when relegalized, we would have 2,500,000 truck loads of competition with all retail industry of necessities and wholesome luxuries, which at the moderate $700 estimate per load as above noted would divert $1,750,000,000 from legitimate business to the capacious pocketbooks of the brewers.

IF BEER RETURNS TO BUSINESS

Therefore "if beer returns to business," relegalized by State and national governments and freed from the ban upon its advertising, open display and high-pressure sale, the result would simply be that several billion dollars a year would probably be coerced from the people's pockets to buy intoxicating beer, and this total would, therefore, automatically be diverted from legitimate industry.

The claim of the brewers and their champions that the beer they desire to have relegalized will not be intoxicating is, and in the nature of things must be, a flat misstatement. There would be no liquor problem to-day were beer—the beer it is proposed to relegalize—actually nonintoxicating. As the brewer well knows, a nonintoxicating beer would necessarily have to be a beverage so dealcoholized as to lack liquor habit-forming power. If it were not habit forming they would never expect to coin billions out of it and if it were not habit forming there would be no objection to it now or at any other time.

If the brewers did not hope to be granted the right to market beer containing sufficient alcoholic content to make their product a habit-forming intoxicant, there would be no propaganda on its behalf.

Everything depends then, so far as the brewers' expectations go, upon legal sanction to sell a beverage, every drink of which will automatically create a thirst for more.

From the point of view of legitimate business, therefore, could there be anything more absurd than such a proposal of the brewers and their apologists?

The great need of America to-day in emerging from the present depression is the strengthening of constructive industry, which self-evidently means every kind of trade, craft, or business that not only gives value for value received but aids in promoting demand for other legitimate products and adds to the well-being of society.

In these three essentials the beer trade, legal or illegal, fails completely.

Let us look for a moment at the specious claim that to relegalize beer would promote the return of prosperity.

Relegalized beer, so they say, would immediately mean reemployment for many thousands; would reestablish a market for millions of bushels of grain; would help the cooper, the bottle maker; would increase the demand for coal, power, and transportation; would prove a boon to real estate and advertising.

All of these much-advertised prospective benefits of a reestablished beer trade fade into unsubstantial illusion and mirage when viewed in the light of the unavoidable industrial damage done by the traffic under all conditions.

Under old license conditions there was a continuous army of millions of men wholly or partially incapacitated by beer and other liquors, their labor efficiency reduced, their economic standing imperiled or destroyed, as victims of the habit-forming appeal of the legalized liquor shop. Under the reestablishment of the beer trade, that army would once more be rapidly recruited.

So far as the farmer is concerned, facts show that prohibition has benefited him in many concrete ways. For example, in a single expanding field since the beer trade and the liquor traffic were legally banned, the demand for dairy products alone now require the production of more than three times as much grain as was used by the entire liquor traffic in its most prosperous days.

Instead of prohibition dealing a blow to the barley farmers of the country, the production of that grain alone has increased from 256,225,000 bushels in 1918, the highest preprohibition point of production, to 325,893,000 bushels in 1930, requiring for its growth 12,437,000 acres, as compared with 9,470,000 acres in 1918, the highest average before national prohibition.

As far as legitimate business is concerned, consider a few facts. From 1917 to 1929 (for 10 years under the eighteenth amendment) the per capita consumption of milk increased from 754.8 pounds to 997.5 pounds.

Another even more significant fact is the growth of the soft drink business during the past decade. The total value of soft drinks produced in 1930 is estimated by the Association of American Bottlers of Carbonated Beverages as $625,000,000, a production increase of 100 per cent since 1922.

BEER AND THE AUTOMOBILE

The automobile industry is best gaged by the fact that the registration of automobiles has grown from 9,232,000 in 1920 to 25,814,103 in 1931. During that time the production of inexpensive cars has advanced from 59 per cent of the total production in 1920 to more than 83 per cent of the total production of 1930, an actual production of 26,180,346 low-priced cars in the 11 years, 1920 to 1930.

The owners of these low-priced cars are, for the most part, to be found naturally among the 68 per cent of the people whose annual income is $5,000 or less. And it is from this more than two-thirds of the American people that the brewers must expect the larger part of their prospective income were beer relegalized.

Similarly, since prohibition was enacted, the movie theater business has grown from a baby industry to one whose returns now exceed $1,500,000,000 annually.

The assets of the building and loan associations since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment have grown from $20 to $67 per capita at the last report, in 1928, while memberships in these associations have increased from 41 to 100 per 1,000 population. Meanwhile savings deposits show a growth from $144 to $233 per capita, while life insurance in force has grown from $342 per capita in 1921 to $858 in 1929.

The difference in many other lines is marked, and all these figures to a large extent afford a significant explanation as to why millions of unemployed have been able to endure the present depression with less distress than in previous similar periods.

If the beer trade and liquor traffic had been legalized during all three years and were now competing with business in the old and flagrant way of license days, our industrial conditions would be far more critical than they are.

The conclusion of our discussion may be summed up in brief as follows:

(1) Relegalizing beer would simply afford Government sanction and protection to what was always in license days a dangerous competitor for the people's dollar in all legitimate industry.

(2) The "demand" for beer and alcoholic beverages was always in the old days to a large extent the result of artificial stimulations of open sale, advertising, and Government sanction.

(3) According to all estimates, there has been a startling drop in beer production and consumption under prohibition as compared with the heyday of liquor prosperity.

(4) Relegalizing beer would be a costly means of "priming" the pump of prosperity, because it would immediately and damagingly affect legitimate business in the process.

(5) Local industry and, per se, national industries directly represented by these local outlets always suffer, both directly and indirectly, by the open competition of beer and the liquor industry.

(6) The beer now sought to be relegalized by the brewers and their champions is both patently and essentially an intoxicating beverage, as a nonintoxicating beer would necessarily have to be a beverage so dealcoholized as to lack habit-forming power, and therefore lack the element of superprofits for the makers.

(7) The great economic need in hastening the return of prosperity is the promotion of constructive industry and a more intelligent and effective support of the Government's able and unfaltering administration of prohibition.

I believe it is the duty and the plain common sense of all thoughtful American business executives and industrial leaders to stand as one man against these insidious bribes of an outlawed and discredited traffic and rather point the way, not back to the economic and destructive period of license but forward to a saner and more adequate State and local administration of our beneficent prohibition legislation.

In my opinion, the eighteenth amendment should be supported by American industry as a reasonable industrial safeguard and legislative advance that, given necessary time, will help to lift our Nation economically and socially to more efficient bases of commerce and ultimately higher standards of living.

Sincerely,

RICHARD H. SCOTT,
President American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation.

PROGRAM OF NATIONAL ECONOMY LEAGUE RELATIVE TO VETERANS' BENEFITS

Mr. ASHURST presented a resolution adopted by Morgan McDermott Post, No. 7, American Legion, of Tucson, Ariz., which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas under recommendations of the Economy League Federal aid to veterans' widows, and orphans in the State of Arizona would be reduced annually approximately $5,459,922, or 80 per cent of the total expenditure, which was $6,824,903 in the year 1932. Elimination of this amount would increase local and State taxes fully 20 per cent and, in addition, place a heavy burden on local and State charity organizations if the league's program as recommended is adopted; and

Whereas the burden of hospital care and compensation is now borne by the Federal Government and, of course, the cost comes out of Federal income derived from big incomes, which is just and proper, and is a moral obligation of the Federal Government for which these ex-service men served in a great emergency, and the burden should not be shifted to the shoulders of the property owners who pay local and State taxes; and

Whereas the veterans affected are mostly either bed-ridden or unable to follow continuously a substantially gainful occupation it would be practically compulsory for the cities, counties, and State to provide them with proper hospitalization and the necessities of life; and

Whereas the National Economy League's program recommends that all veteran activities be conducted at one office in Washington, which, if accomplished, would eliminate the branch of the Veterans' Administration in Phoenix, thereby depriving worthy veterans of the prompt, essential, and beneficial care and relief now given them by that office: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Morgan McDermott Post, No. 7, American Legion, Tucson, Ariz., in regular session assembled on this 2d day of February, 1933, hereby respectfully request that Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST read this resolution before the Senate of the United States and insert the same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PRICE OF ROYALTY OILS IN WYOMING

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I have here a joint resolution passed by the Wyoming Legislature. It has to do with the prices now being paid in Wyoming for royalty oils, both Federal and State. It is in the form of an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior to exercise such influence as he may to induce the operators and refiners either to pay a better price for these royalty oils, in which both the Federal Government and the States are interested, or to exercise every consistent authority he has in reducing the production in those fields.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of Enrolled Joint Resolution No. 5, Senate, Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, approved by the governor on February 4, 1933, at 4.50 p. m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 6th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] A. M. CLARK, Secretary of State.
By C. J. ROGERS, Deputy.

Resolution urging the necessary action by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States and the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Wyoming to establish an equitable basis and fair market value and price for the crude oil produced from Federal and State owned lands in the Salt Creek field, Natrona County, Wyo.

Whereas the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920, provided that 37½ per cent of the amounts derived from bonuses, royalties, and rentals received upon oil and gas leases granted by the United States of America shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands are located and 52½ per cent of such amount shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress; and

Whereas sections 78-402, Wyoming Revised Statutes, 1931, provides that the said moneys so received by the State of Wyoming from such royalties, bonuses, and rentals shall be utilized for the benefit of the schools, highways, university, and counties of this State; and

Whereas the development of the State of Wyoming requires the construction of additional reclamation projects within the State limits by the Federal Reclamation Service; and

Whereas the major crude-oil producing and purchasing companies operating in the Salt Creek field in Natrona County, Wyo., utilize their production in their own refineries; and

Whereas it would seem that the posted field price for the oil produced from such Salt Creek field is so low as to be unwarranted by the market price of its refined products; and

Whereas the basis for such reduction in the posted price is alleged to be in part the bootlegging of gasoline within the State of Wyoming and adjacent States; and

Whereas the production and sale of crude oil from the Salt Creek field at unwarrantedly low posted prices will cause a material reduction in the oil royalties to be received by the State of Wyoming and the Federal Reclamation Service; and

Whereas the creation of such low posted and market price for crude oil within the State of Wyoming by the companies which not only produce, purchase, and/or refine such oil but also pay taxes upon the value of such oil at an assessed valuation equal to the posted price, if unwarranted by the values and market prices of refined products obtained from such crude oil, is arbitrary in its nature and unfair in its results and reduces the taxable property valuation of the State, to the detriment of all other taxpayers whose property has not been and can not be likewise reduced; and

Whereas it is to the best interests of the Federal Government, of all States benefiting from the Federal Reclamation Service, and of the State of Wyoming to compel operators of leases in the Salt Creek field to keep the crude oil in the ground rather than produce and sell it at a price which is unwarranted; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming is the owner of a school section located in the said Salt Creek field, has leased said land to a major oil operating company, and is receiving royalty as the result of the operations and the producing of crude oil from said land: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested and urged to take action forthwith under the leasing law of February 25, 1920, and the decision in the case of Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior, v. Texas Co. (40 Fed. Rept. (2d series) 787) to prevent the production and sale of oil from lands operated under Federal leases in the Salt Creek field at a price which is unfair to the Federal Government, the State of Wyoming, and all States benefiting from the Federal Reclamation Service; and be it further

Resolved, That the Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Wyoming be requested and urged to cooperate with the Secretary of the Interior of the United States for the purpose of obtaining a fair price for all production from said Salt Creek field through necessary action in relation to the production from its leased lands, even though such action may result in a radical curtailment of the production from that field until such time as the market price for the said crude oil is established upon a basis which is equitable to all those interested; and be it further

Resolved, That one certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, one copy to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, one copy to each member of the Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Wyoming, and one copy to each member of the Wyoming congressional delegation.

BIMETALLIC CURRENCY

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I present a resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which, under the rule, I ask may be read and appropriately referred.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolution respecting bimetallic currency

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill to establish a bimetallic system of currency, employing gold and silver, to fix the relative value of gold and silver and to provide for the free coinage of silver, and for other purposes; and

Whereas it is the sense of this senate that the needs of the citizens of Nebraska and of the United States will be best served under present economic conditions by some sound system of inflating the currency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska in Forty-ninth regular session assembled:

1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate to consider favorably the Wheeler bill (S. 2487) now referred to and in the hands of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate to the end that relief may be afforded to those States of the Union in which silver is mined in order that price of silver may be normally stabilized; that the aspects of the silver question be dealt with in so far as legislation is concerned as a necessary commodity as well as a monetary problem.

2. That certified copies of this resolution be sent to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Nebraska.

Introduced January 12.
Adopted January 13.

MEXICAN MIGRATORY LABOR

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I present another resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which, under the rules, I ask may be read and appropriately referred.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

Resolution, Mexican migratory labor (introduced by Senators McCarter and Van Kirk)

Whereas the regulations and the restrictions of aliens migrating from the Republic of Mexico into the State of Nebraska and surrounding States is a Federal problem; and

Whereas the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization of the Departments of Labor and Commerce has been designated by Federal law with the duty of enforcing Federal statutes on the subject of alien immigration; and

Whereas all questions relating to the entrance of aliens into the United States and the restrictions upon their movements while within the United States have many times been held to be Federal problems and within the purview of the Federal Labor Department; and

Whereas Mexican migrants, constantly increasing each year in number, are each year, coming into the State of Nebraska and lowering the standard of living of our splendid citizens who are skilled and trained in connection with the production of sugar in the sugar-beet industry of the State of Nebraska; and

Whereas no legislation enacted by the State of Nebraska can ever be enacted which will bring relief to the great mass of our sugar-beet workers without remedial legislation by the Congress of the United States limiting the quota of the Republic of Mexico or by more general powers granted to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska in forty-ninth regular session assembled, 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate to act favorably upon any proposed legislation which will restrict and limit the perennial influx of cheap Mexican labor which seek admission to the United States; and that at least during the present session of Congress that the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization be directed to investigate ways and means of relieving Nebraska labor from competing with Mexican labor.

2. That a certified copy of this resolution be sent to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Nebraska.

Introduced January 18, 1933.

Adopted January 20, 1933.

MEMORIALS OF THE LEGISLATURE OF IDAHO

Mr. BORAH. I present two memorials passed by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

House Joint Memorial 4 (by Smith (Custer), and McAffee)

To the honorable the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the United States of America:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Idaho, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

Whereas the future growth and prosperity of the south-central Idaho counties of Butte and Custer depend largely upon the action taken with regard to an application on file to borrow funds to purchase additional water for the lands in the valley proper; and

Whereas certain waters of Big Lost River are now made appurtenant to a Carey Act project contiguous to the lands supplied by natural-flow rights; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated for more than 12 years that diversion of this large quantity of water to the Carey Act project is detrimental to the prosperity of the people of Big Lost River Valley; and

Whereas the said condition can be remedied by purchase of the Carey Act project and its elimination from the irrigated area served by Big Lost River; and

Whereas the people of Big Lost River Valley have applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan with which to purchase the waters and storage rights of the Carey Act Co., and thereby eliminate from future competition of agriculture approximately 15,000 acres of land; and

Whereas Dr. Elwood Mead, Commissioner of Reclamation of the United States Department of the Interior, has made a personal inspection of the Big Lost River Valley irrigation system and has given his approval of the engineering feasibility of the plan; and

Whereas the application for a loan is now before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and

Whereas the twentieth session of the Idaho Legislature memorialized Congress to loan $500,000 to the settlers of Big Lost River for the purpose of acquiring the Carey Act rights, and therefore the plan has been officially indorsed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (Senate concurring), That we most respectfully urge the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to favorably consider the application for a loan, so that the improvements above referred to may be accomplished; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to forward this memorial to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and that copies hereof be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

This house joint memorial passed the house on the 30th day of January, 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial 7 (by judiciary committee)

To the honorable the SENATORS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent:

That relief through appropriate legislation must immediately be extended to those engaged in agriculture, to home owners, and to others who now find themselves in a condition, because of a depression which is not of their making, that they can not meet obligations that have been justly incurred and, through no fault of theirs, are about to lose the savings and accumulations of a lifetime;

That the relief that can be had under the proposed amendment to the national bankruptcy act recently passed by the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States (H. R. 14359) will be more effective, more far-reaching, and more uniform in its operations than any relief that can be had through State legislation;

We would, therefore, most respectfully but earnestly urge your honorable body to promptly pass the proposed amendments to the national bankruptcy act, and we would urge that such action be taken at the earliest possible date, to the end that if relief in this national crisis can not be had through Federal legislation, that we may have time before the adjournment of our regular session to enact such State legislation, inadequate as it may be, to remedy a situation that seems to imperil our social and economic systems: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the Senate concurring), That the secretary of State be instructed to send immediately by air mail copies of the foregoing memorial to the Vice President of the United States and to Senators WILLIAM E. BORAH and JOHN THOMAS.

This house joint memorial passed the house on the 3d day of February, 1933.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY MASS MEETING OF CITIZENS OF TULSA, OKLA.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on Monday night a thousand citizens of Tulsa, Okla., made up of bankers, business men, and real-estate men met in mass convention and adopted two resolutions. I present the first resolution, in the nature of a petition to Congress, and ask that it may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolution

Be it resolved by this mass meeting of citizens of the city of Tulsa, Okla., duly assembled in the Convention Hall of said city, That—

Whereas for many years there has been a shortage of money in circulation sufficient to carry the credit structure of the country and resulting in the inability of banks to carry a proper cash reserve; and

Whereas the situation has become more critical since credit has been demoralized; and

Whereas the relative value of the gold dollar, compared to commodities, has been increased from approximately 60 cents, when most of the existing debts were contracted, to $1.60, so that it now in effect takes $1.60 to pay a 60-cent debt; and

Whereas the present dollar is therefore a dishonest dollar, and the existing depression is a direct result of this fact, and the obvious remedy is to depreciate the value of gold to where it was when the debts were contracted which, under the natural law of supply and demand, can be done by lessening the demand for gold; and

Whereas we realize that one urgent need of to-day, in order to promote the general welfare, is a more plentiful supply of a cheaper, sound money, having, so far as is practicable, an intrinsic value 100 per cent of face, and depending as little as possible upon credit of Nation, bank, or individual, together with measures which will stabilize the relative value of the dollar to commodities; and

Whereas it has always been the declared purpose of the United States Government to adopt the free coinage of both gold and silver if same could be adopted by international agreement; and

Whereas practically all foreign nations have abandoned gold as a single monetary standard: Therefore be it

Resolved—

First. That we favor an expansion of the national currency, including the immediate remonetization of silver, and also favor the stabilization of commodity values, and, in this latter connection, we give our unqualified endorsement to the Rankin-Thomas bill.

Second. That instead of issuing tax-free short-term certificates of indebtedness for the necessary operating expenses, the Government issue United States notes in denominations of $5, $10, and $20.

Third. That all money issued by the United States Government shall be legal tender at face value for all debts—public and private—including duties on imports and interest on public debt.

Fourth. That a copy of this resolution be sent to Senators THOMAS and GORE and to Congressman DISNEY and other Representatives in Congress from this State.

Adopted unanimously at Tulsa, Okla., this 6th day of February, 1933.

Attest:

MERRITT J. GLASS, Chairman of Meeting.
C. C. ROBERTS, Secretary.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that the resolution just read may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The second resolution which I present calls for two points to be considered by the Congress: First, that as to such foreclosure proceedings as are controlled by the Government, that is, under Federal land bank laws and the Federal home-loan bank system, and likewise the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, those agencies be requested and laws be passed, if necessary, to prevent the further institution of foreclosure proceedings upon their loans; second, that if foreclosure proceedings have been instituted they be withheld from further action. That is the first petition.

The second is that Congress take steps to influence the Comptroller of the Currency in the examination of national banks to cease his present policy of valuing stocks and bonds offered for collateral at their present market value and ask that the comptroller be instructed to have values placed upon such stocks and bonds at their actual value rather than their market value.

I ask that this resolution may be printed in the RECORD in full and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions (by R. W. Kellough)

Be it resolved by this mass meeting of citizens of Tulsa, Okla., duly assembled in the Convention Hall of said city, That Senator ELMER THOMAS and Senator T. P. GORE and Congressman W. E. DISNEY are hereby requested to immediately take steps to obtain orders from the proper Government authorities directing that all banks, insurance companies, building and loan companies, or other institutions which have borrowed, or are attempting to borrow, funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or from any other department of the Federal Government, including the Federal home-loan bank, shall not institute any foreclosure suits, and if they have already commenced any that no further proceedings be taken therein; and be it further

Resolved, That these Senators and Congressman are hereby requested to immediately, in their official capacities, request the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency that proper orders be issued to all national banking institutions and their subsidiaries directing that no foreclosure proceedings be commenced and that no further proceedings be taken in those already begun; and be it further

Resolved, That Senator THOMAS and Senator GORE and Congressman DISNEY are further requested to immediately take steps to obtain from the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency orders directing all examiners of national banks and their affiliated, subsidiary, or allied companies to immediately and henceforth disregard the quotations of the New York Stock Exchange on all stock lodged in such institutions as collateral on loans therein, and to value such collateral at its actual value as shown by the last financial statement of the corporation issuing such stock held as collateral; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, signed by the chairman of this meeting, be sent to each, Senator THOMAS, Senator GORE, and Congressman DISNEY.

Dated this 6th day of February, 1933.

Passed and approved this the 6th day of February, 1933.

ADVANCE PLANNING OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a bill introduced in the Legislature of the State of California providing for the advance planning of public works so that public works may be accelerated in times of depression and retarded in normal times. The reason I make this request is because the action is modeled after the one which Congress enacted two years ago as a national policy for the advance planning of public works.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly bill No. 892, introduced by Mr. Dempster, January 24, 1933; referred to committee on unemployment

An act to amend the title of and to revise an act entitled "An act to provide for the extension of the public works of the State of California during periods of extraordinary unemployment caused by temporary industrial depression, and regulating employment therein, and authorizing the board of control to enforce the provisions hereof; and repealing all acts inconsistent with the provisions hereof," approved May 26, 1921, relating to advance planning and long-range budgeting of public works

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The title of the act cited in the title hereof is hereby amended to read as follows: "An act to provide for advance planning and longe-range budgeting of public works by the State as a means of furnishing employment during periods of depression, and making an appropriation therefor."

SEC. 2. Said act is hereby revised to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. There is hereby created a board to be known as the public works planning board, to be composed of 7 members, 3 to be appointed by the governor and to hold office at his pleasure and 4 to serve ex officiis. Such ex efficiis members shall be the director of finance, who shall serve as chairman, the director of public works, the director of social welfare, and the director of industrial relations. The members of the public works planning board shall receive their actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties.

"SEC. 2. The board shall appoint and fix the salary of a qualified administrator who shall be exempt from civil service, and, subject to civil-service regulations, such a staff of technical assistants and such other employees as the work may require.

"SEC. 3. For the purposes of this act, and except as the context otherwise requires, "construction" means and includes (1) all physical improvements paid for in whole or in part by public funds; (2) maintenance, repairs, and alterations paid for in whole or in part by public funds; (3) the purchase of such materials, supplies, and equipment as is necessary as a part of or incident to construction, as herein defined; and (4) the hiring of such services as is necessarily incident to construction as herein defined.

"SEC. 4. The public works planning board shall have the following functions:

"(1) To prepare a 10-year construction program for all State public works, coordinating the construction plans of the various State departments, such program to include a tentative assignment of each project to a given year.

"(2) To administer the 10-year construction program in such manner as to restrain construction of public works during years of active business conditions and employment, and to accelerate such construction during years of depressed business conditions.

"(3) To modify said program at the end of each biennium, adding projects for two additional years, or for such number of years as may be necessary to insure that there shall be at all times a construction program planned 10 years in advance.

"(4) To approve each construction program prepared by a State department before funds are made available for its consummation.

"(5) To require the various State departments to have on hand detailed plans for construction projects one year in advance.

"(6) To promote among the municipalities, counties, and other political subdivisions of the State the formulation of programs for the advance planning of public works.

"(7) To stimulate the construction of State, county, and municipal public works projects during the present and future periods of widespread unemployment.

"(8) To report biennially to the governor and legislature upon its activities, the construction program in process and contemplated.

"SEC. 5. For the purpose of properly timing public works, with a view to restraining such works during periods of prosperity and accelerating such works during periods of slack economic activity, the public works planning board shall have power and authority to secure information and data from any State department or official, to take steps to expedite the completion by the various State departments of their plans and programs for construction work, to amend, revise, approve, or reject the construction programs; and to determine what part of the construction program assigned to a given year shall be withheld until a later year or advanced to an earlier year. Such determination shall bind all parties involved therein.

"SEC. 6. As a means of aiding in the prevention of unemployment during periods of business depression, the board may direct the acceleration during such periods, to such extent as practicable, of the approved programs.

"The initiation of such accelerated program of public works shall be at the discretion of the public works planning board. In taking such action, the board shall be guided by the employment and pay roll indexes of the State department of industrial relations and by other suitable indexes of economic trends and by such other information of any character as it may consider pertinent.

"Whenever in the judgment of the board, based upon the best information available, a period of depression and unemployment is developing within the State, it shall authorize the initiation of the accelerated program of public works. Immediately thereafter the board shall determine the projects to be undertaken in addition to those authorized for the current year, and shall notify the various State departments to proceed immediately with the construction thereof.

"SEC. 7. The public works planning board shall prepare and submit to the fifty-first regular session of the legislature recommendations as to what methods of financing should be employed by the State to make effective the purpose of advance planning and long-range budgeting of State public works contemplated in this act.

"SEC. 8. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the State to arrange the construction of State public works, so far as practicable, in such manner as will assist in the stabilization of industry and employment through the proper timing of such construction, and that to further such policy there shall be advance planning and long-range budgeting of public works by the public works planning board and by the various departments of the State.

"SEC. 9. Each State department having charge of construction work shall have the following functions in connection with the program of advance planning and budgeting:

"(1) To prepare a 10-year construction program containing a tentative assignment of each project to a certain year, and including an estimate of the cost of each project, the estimated cost of land and of new construction to be shown separately for each item.

"(2) To submit such program to the public works planning board for revision or approval, when so required by said board.

"(3) To submit to the public works planning board, at the end of each fiscal year, proposed amendments and additions to the 10-year program.

"(4) To prepare and submit to said board detailed construction plans for projects one year in advance of the time proposed for their initiation.

"SEC. 10. There is hereby appropriated from any money in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000 to be expended in accordance with law by, and for the expenses of, the public works planning board for the eighty-fifth and eighty-sixth fiscal years."

RELIEF OF COTTON FARMERS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the State, of Columbia, S. C., in reference to the substitution of certain cotton in lieu of production, and also certain telegrams relating to the same subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial and telegrams are as follows:

[From the State, Columbia, S. C., February 8, 1933]

LACK OF LEADERSHIP IN WASHINGTON—WHY NOT REVERT TO SENATOR SMITH'S PLAN?

More distressing than the allegation that many Congressmen are crooks is the present seeming lack of leadership in Washington. The charge of corruption can be heavily discounted, but the charge of futility seems only too true.

The disagreements, the inability to agree among even those Democrats upon whom dependence is generally placed, are far from cheering. Are these jealousies aroused over "plans"? Does one decline to give study to a plan of which he does not happen to be the father? Why can not something be done for agriculture now? Why wait for the extra session, when those who will direct legislation then are now in Congress?

Ninety million dollars has been made available for borrowers of money with which to buy seed, but so far as the South is concerned, two things are vital: One is to obtain wider world markets for cotton; but that will require time and cooperation of statesmanship. The other is to insure against a cotton crop in 1933 which will cause the existing surplus to continue or be increased. This can be provided for immediately.

The one practical plan to this end is Senator E. D. SMITH's plan promulgated 18 months ago. Why? Because under it it was proposed the Government would purchase some millions of bales of cotton at prevailing prices, and give cotton farmers who abstained from planting or who planted only enough to enable their tenants to keep going, a contingent ownership in that cotton bought and held by the Government.

Under that plan if a farmer cut his production, say 100 bales, and because of the general reduction of several million bales in the crop, prices advanced, that farmer would have the privilege of buying from the Government at cost of the year before 100 bales, and of enjoying the profit on said increase in price. He risked nothing.

That direct, personal interest in wiping out the cotton surplus would give every grower who signed up to reduce his acreage, a direct interest in general reduction. That interest would take the form of exercising a moral influence upon his neighbors. Bankers and supply houses and business generally would have the same incentive in curtailment.

Voluntary promises to reduce are worth less than nothing. That has been demonstrated time and again. The farmer must be able to see where he can have cotton to sell at a profit when he plants no cotton. That is what the Smith plan revealed to him.

Why not try the Smith plan? If producers have already sold their cotton, why not use part or all of the 3,500,000 bales now held by the Government to carry out the Smith plan? Hold it for the benefit of the farmers who cut production by that quantity!

ATLANTA, GA., February 8, 1933.

Senator ELLISON D. SMITH,
Care Senate Agricultural Committee, in Session:

Have carefully analyzed Smith cotton bill, now in committee, and believe it will save this year's cotton crop and be the salvation of cotton producers, therefore urge its approval by the committee without delay.

H. LANE YOUNG,
Chairman Agricultural Commission,

CHARLESTON, S. C.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
United States Senator:

Your cotton bill, as reported in to-day's paper, if enacted, will unquestionably in our opinion bring about the desired result, particularly to the producer. It is far-reaching and easily workable. It is the only proposition we have seen which is feasible and is ultimately of benefit to all interests directly and indirectly connected with cotton.

JOHN F. MAYBANK & CO.

INTERGOVERNMENTAL DEBTS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials dealing with the subject of intergovernmental debts which appeared, respectively, in Collier's magazine in the issues of January 7 and 21, 1933.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Collier's, January 7, 1933]

MAKE SELFISHNESS PAY

Get the facts straight about the war debts and we won't have much trouble finding the right answer.

Both political parties in their platforms demanded payment and opposed cancellation. To agree to cancellation or even reduction would be unpopular. This is the fact with which both Congress and the President must deal.

Another fact is that our own self-interest is going to determine our policy. Self-interest, not humanitarianism, generosity, or anything else, is going to rule. Self-interest, however, can be enlightened and intelligent.

We loaned the Allies about $10,000,000,000 to pay for food, munitions, clothing, and other things connected with the World War.

All of our creditors except Russia and Armenia have signed agreements to pay.

Between 1923 and 1926, through a reduction of interest rates, debts owed us were in effect reduced by about 51 per cent.

Payments were suspended June 30, 1931, by the Hoover moratorium. The first deferred payments came due December 15 last.

Of all our creditors the British owe the largest sum. The December 15 payment was scheduled at $95,500,000. The total due from Great Britain was $3,788,500,000.

Her payments were to be made during 62 years in annual installments ranging from $159,940,000 to $187,350,000.

The British and other nations borrowed commodities, not gold. Wheat and cotton, munitions, and manufactured products were shipped abroad.

The debt agreements call specifically for payment "in United States gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness or its equivalent in gold bullion" or in United States bonds.

The world supply of gold at the end of last October amounted to $11,696,000,000. Of this the United States held $3,818,000,000.

Obviously, therefore, the amount of gold outside the United States—$7,878,000,000—is less than the sum of the war debts owed us.

If we demanded and got all the gold in the world, the war debts would still be unpaid.

The British Government had a total of $678,000,000 in gold at the end of September. If we took all the British gold, our debt would be paid less than 20 cents on the dollar.

Obviously payment can not and will not be made in gold. The necessary gold supply does not exist.

The only possible way by which payments could be made is through imports of commodities and services.

We don't want any nation to return to us wheat, cotton, munitions, or any of the other commodities we loaned them. We erected tariff barriers, very high tariff barriers, for the precise purpose of keeping foreign goods out of the United States.

So the situation comes down to this: The debts can't be paid in gold. We won't accept payment in goods. Still we insist that payment must be made.

Plainly we are in a blind alley. Politically we insist upon a policy which practically is impossible of fulfillment.

It is easy to understand the politicians' difficulty. The debts owed us are represented by United States bonds. The bonds must be redeemed by taxes. If foreigners don't pay, Americans must. There's the rub.

But foreigners can not pay with anything we are willing to accept. Consequently the bare fact is that the greater part of the debts will not be paid. Annoying, but simple arithmetic.

What course, then, does our self-interest suggest in these circumstances? Shall we force our debtors to scrape the bottom of the cash box and give us all they have?

They might default, but assuming that they were willing to strip themselves clean of gold, would it profit us to take the last ounce?

Certainly not. The less gold a nation has the less valuable its currency becomes and the more disturbing it is to the well-being of other nations.

Have you thought about the recent great expansion in exports from Japan, not only to the United States but elsewhere?

The explanation is very simple: The Japanese yen is ordinarily worth 50 cents. Likely it went below 20 cents. With the yen at 20 cents, tariffs were not high enough to restrict Japanese imports.

Take the gold reserve vitally needed by Great Britain and at once the pound will drop in value. Directly and indirectly every class of Americans will be hit.

A hundred years ago Great Britain stood where we stand. Great Britain financed the wars against Napoleon. The Napoleonic war loans were largely written off because the British decided it was more profitable to forgive the debts than to accept payment.

We shall serve ourselves best if with all possible expedition we negotiate new agreements in tune with these times.

The President and the Congress who have the courage to put national interest above political fears will deserve well of this Republic. In the long run we tend to get what we deserve.

[From Collier's, January 21, 1933]

LET'S PARK OUR PREJUDICES

More than a hundred years ago a group of New Yorkers wanted to establish a bank. Banks were few and unpopular.

So the legislature was persuaded to grant a charter authorizing the establishment of a water company. The water company was, incidentally, empowered to carry on a banking business. Thus secretly was founded one of the oldest and most reputable banks in the United States.

This little episode is typical of our history. Throughout our life as a Nation we have tried by prejudice and by law to forbid and to prevent natural economic development.

We tried, both through Federal and State laws, to prevent the establishment of corporations. So widespread was the feeling against corporations that Illinois forbade their owning land except as safe-deposit institutions. Consequently, any corporation which wanted to buy land had merely to qualify as such.

In endless other ways we have tried vainly to dam the currents of economic change.

When we reconciled ourselves to the existence of small corporations we decided to outlaw large ones. Thus we got our antitrust laws. Only the mentally blind, deaf, and dumb imagine that purpose was accomplished.

In spite of every political prejudice and every hostile act of legislation, more than any other people we transact our business through corporations. During a century and a half we have shown ingenuity enough to circumvent any impracticable law we were foolish enough to enact.

We are not unique in this. When Diaz was overthrown and Mexico was arranging a new constitution a delegate proposed a thoroughly foolish financial plan.

Another delegate argued that the suggestion was impossible since it violated the economic principle known as Gresham's law. Gresham's law is merely the observation that bad money drives out good, that people conceal and hoard gold if irredeemable paper is circulating.

The Mexican advocate of bad money was not stopped. He merely said, "repeal Gresham's law."

It sounds silly when a foreigner says it, but we, too, have tried to repeal habits and customs and instincts by an act of legislation. The eighteenth amendment is a hollow monument to futility.

We face many issues to-day which we are trying to settle with our prejudices and emotions rather than by a cool and intelligent consideration of the facts.

Congressmen, for example, are talking about the necessity of making money cheap because the farmer needs help.

Of course the farmer needs help. It is also true that from the days of Daniel Shays onward during the last 146 years rural politicians have cast sheep's eyes at cheap money.

We are not going to debase the American dollar. Our own self-interest will step forward, regardless of what laws we pass, and stop the process. Lots of good time and energy can, however, be wasted in pursuit of this false hope.

On the foreign front both we and the French, for that matter, have done more feeling than thinking about war debts.

We have never taken the pains to discover just what sort of settlement would benefit us most. "They hired the money, didn't they?" has been repeated as a complete summary of practical wisdom on this subject. As a matter of history, the answer is "No." They didn't hire the money. They hired munitions, food, and many other commodities but not the money.

Not that this matters now. It does matter, however, that at no time since the armistice has any convincing political leader had the wit or the courage to talk frankly to the American people concerning our own interest in these matters.

Two men, Senator BORAH and ex-Gov. Alfred E. Smith, did speak out last summer. But other matters diverted their attention, and nothing more was done.

What we want is not another political settlement dictated by prejudice and possibly in anger, but a clear-headed, discerning policy which projects a course that actually can be followed.

As to war debts, we say "let the foreigner pay." As to taxes, it is good political talk to say "soak the rich." All right in both instances, but only as far as it is practicable.

We seem to have reached the limit so far as the rich are concerned. Increased levies yield decreasing returns because the incomes are not there to be taxed. The money will have to come from other sources.

We shall unquestionably muddle through these difficulties even though we continue to refuse to think about them. There is enough strength and resource in this country to guarantee the future, whatever we do or neglect to do.

But we can hasten the time of recovery immeasurably if for once in our history we lay aside partisanship, prejudice, and claptrap and focus all the intelligence we possess and can employ upon the large matters immediately in front of us. We face no difficulty which we lack the mind to solve if only we are willing to work our minds and rest our prejudices.

EQUALIZATION OF TARIFF DUTIES

Mr. HULL. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a few extracts from the recent testimony of Chairman Robert L. O'Brien, of the Tariff Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT L. O'BRIEN, CHAIRMAN, UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION, BEFORE A SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WHICH HAD UNDER CNSIDERATION EQUALIZATION OF TARIFF DUTIES BY COMPENSATING FOR DEPRECIATION OF FOREIGN CURRENCIES, ON THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1933

I have a clipping in my pocket which I think has appeared in your record on the situation in Holland, which is so clear as it relates to this bill that it ought to be repeated.

The legislative body in Holland asked the Finance Minister what were the advantages of depreciated currency, or of Holland's going off the gold standard. This Finance Minister said that they were partly illusory and partly temporary, and those that were not temporary were illusory and those that were not illusory were temporary.

That is the whole story, as it can be demonstrated very conclusively.

The two sets of bills here that are under consideration—the old Hawley bill and the Hill bill, and perhaps others—rest upon the illusion that you create an advantage by changing the measure of value.

The new Hawley bill, which has quite a little support—it has many merits and some defects—addresses itself to the temporary character of the thing. In other words, we want to keep squarely in mind the difference between the temporary side of this thing and the illusive or delusive side.

I was talking the other night with a man, a Republican who had served with honor and distinction on this committee, and had gone to even higher honors, who told me that this general currency-depreciation legislation reminded him of the man who had a fever. The doctor put a clinical thermometer under his tongue and it came out 105. The doctors and all present held up their hands in horror. "This man is terribly sick." Said a man in the room, "I will fix that all right." He had a clinical thermometer in the process of making, upon which the graduations had not been put. He marked some new graduations on it, stuck it under the man's tongue, and brought out that the man's temperature was 98.6. "He is well; his fever is gone."

Now, that is the picture. That is what might be called the delusive side of this thing, the theory that by changing a unit, or the measuring stick, or the clinical thermometer, you change the condition or the fever of the patient.

Mr. Chairman, I would crave the privilege to give a few illustrations from the past which I think it does no harm for this committee to take cognizance of. When I was a boy the gold dollar was worth $1.14 in this country. It did not become par with gold until 1879 under the secretaryship of the Treasury of John Sherman and in pursuance of the Republican platform of 1876, which had declared for a resumption of specie payments.

Now, with that level of $1.14 we were further off the gold standard in that period of the seventies than Canada is to-day, or has been. Did other countries levy extra duties, extra taxes, against us because we were producing things "so cheaply," because we had such an "undoubted advantage"? When it took $1.14 of our money to buy $1 in gold in the seventies, were we producing things more cheaply, so that other countries should have had a heavier duty against us? Was our competitive efficiency in the world increased by our gold being worth $1.14?

To suppose so is to indict the entire Republican administration of that period. I had grown up to believe that the resumption of the specie payments in this country on January 1, 1879, was a wise thing, in pursuance of the platform of the Republican Party of 1876 and carried out by John Sherman, the Republican Secretary of the Treasury.

If there is one scintilla of basis behind the theory of the Hill bill, of the original Hawley bill, Mr. Sherman, the Secretary of the Treasury, was leading his country into an abyss of error; he was leading his country away from a low production cost and from a superior competitive efficiency.

The phrase is used constantly in the discussions of this matter, the "advantages" that countries have by going off the gold standard. If it were an advantage, we were enjoying it in the seventies. Were we producing things more cheaply because we were off the gold standard? Was our industry handicapped when we went back to specie payments in 1879? If so, Secretary Sherman was a blundering idiot to do it.

I wish to say further that there is no escape from the conclusion that if countries are better off, if their competitive efficiency is increased by being off the gold standard, then we ought to go off the gold standard. Every man in the House of Representatives who votes on February 13 for the unadorned Hill bill, for the unadorned principle that a country is a more serious competitive factor when off the gold standard, is voting to take this country off, and this country ought to go off. There are limits to which you can miseducate the people of a country with safety. That is my great objection to this general theory that underlies the old Hawley bill, the Hill bill, and others. It is that by the inescapable logic of it we ought to go off the gold standard ourselves.

I believe our going off the gold standard would be the paramount calamity of this entire disordered period. It would be a terrible thing and a needless thing, but one that is exactly called for by the logic of this line of legislation.

* * * * * * *

Our imports to-day are at a very low ebb, both in quantity and price. There is still a very heavy balance of trade in our favor, both in quantity and in value. We are not being flooded with imports.

* * * * * * *

Now, this whole affair is one upon which I am perhaps speaking a little feelingly—the Associated Press last year said I spoke vehemently. This is a period of popular madness. This depreciated-currency matter is a great lesson in the world of the power of propaganda. Every person tells everybody else and it keeps on going until people believe it.

I saw a very good man, a journalist, in the hotel here the other day who showed me a beautiful overcoat and said, "I was able to get that because England had gone off the gold standard."

I said, "Is that so? How is that?"

"I was over there. This coat would have been worth $100 (we will say) several years ago, but because England is off the gold standard I could buy it for $70 now."

I said, "Have you been in any clothing stores here of late? You have noticed comparable declines in prices in the United States?" I said, "There is Liggett's drug store right across the street, where they tell me their articles are practically all American, and yet the drop in prices in hairbrushes—every sort of article you can pick out—has been just exactly as great. The only thing is the countries that are on the gold standard, like the United States, are expressing their price decline in a definite drop in prices. That is, the thing you bought and paid a dollar for, to-day you buy it for 50 to 75 cents."

The countries that have gone off the gold standard express part of that decline, or perhaps all of it, in the lessened value of the money. That is all there is to that.

Take Vermont and Maine. Every article in Vermont is being sold at a much lower price than formerly. Vermont friends of mine are selling milk at $2.80 a hundred quarts that cost them $5 to produce. Why? Is it because Vermont has gone off the gold standard? Is New York being flooded with Vermont milk because Vermont has gone off the gold standard?

The same is true of Maine, the potatoes in Maine. The same is true all over, but people have started this gold-standard story and everybody is telling it to everybody else; and there are people who want the duties increased—and I do not necessarily blame them; I think there is a good deal of argument for an embargo of all imported goods that can be produced here. But if you want that embargo, go ahead and pass it. Let us do things honestly and intelligently. An embargo or a horizontal increase in tariff applied to countries both on and off the gold standard would seem to me to have much of merit.

But I would like to see my countrymen act on this subject with the intelligence that the Hollanders are acting on it, in following their great Finance Minister.

And I want to say right here now that Holland has nothing on us in having a Finance Minister who told them the truth with such power and clarity. We have such a Finance Minister in this country.

I have here before me a speech made by Ogden L. Mills, whose clarity of thought in financial matters, whose courage and intelligence in voting for what he believes, or in advocating what he believes, seems to me unexcelled.

He went up to Columbia University the other night and addressed the faculty and students of Columbia University on the economic troubles of the world.

I read his speech through, as I have read every speech that he has made during the entire campaign. I read everything that Ogden Mills writes. You can not find in this speech one scintilla of support for the principle behind the Hill or the original Hawley bills.

In other words, this theory, the theory of curing the fever by changing the gradations on your instrument, there has not been a word from Ogden Mills in support of that. There is—in fact, I put my pencil on it—something that is entirely inconsistent with that theory, from Ogden Mills.

* * * * * *

I said that in here there are some things in the Mills speech utterly inconsistent with that theory of these bills. Here is a line:

"Of those countries in Europe which through force of circumstances rather than choice experienced the panacea of inflation." * * *

"Rather than choice." The theory behind the present depreciated-currency legislation, as I get it from various people—letters that I could quote—is that these countries, seeing what a trick they could come on our tariff and how cheaply they could produce if they were only off the gold standard, did it as a trick to get in under us, to circumvent our tariffs; that it was just a device of theirs, a trick of theirs, to do us.

Mr. Ogden Mills gives no support to that. Of course, that trick theory is too ridiculous to discuss. The British people dislike very much the abandonment of their historic and ancient standards. They would go back to stabilized currency any moment that they could. They can not go now. They can not go back until world economic conditions are restored.

And yet the theory of this depreciated-currency legislation rests upon the belief that this is a trick that somebody else put over on us. If it is a trick and is a good trick, we ought to be doing it, and we ought to correct the blunder that we made in America in 1896 when we did not accept a trick currency that would have given us that preeminence in efficiency in the markets of the world.

We ought to revise our estimates of John Sherman and the Republican Party, that put us back on specie payments in 1879 when by staying off of them we could have had so much more prosperity, and power, and have pushed our way into other markets with so much success.

Gentlemen, this is a very serious time in the history of the world. That is a time when we ought not be acting without frankness and soundness. And that is where I commend our great Secretary of the Treasury. You may search his speeches and his public utterances in vain for any of the theories behind this fundamental depreciated-currency legislation. I respect and honor him for it, just as I do the Hollander whom I quoted who said this thing was part an illusion and part temporary and what was not temporary was an illusion and what was not an illusion was temporary.

* * * * * *

The Tariff Commission has taken action on this widely proclaimed footwear matter that came out in the papers this morning. We are changing the rate of duty on footwear for reasons prescribed by the statutes and we are passing it out with even hand since it applies equally to Japan, which is off the gold standard, and to Czechoslovakia, which is on the gold standard. Under the terms of our law it is the difference in costs of production in the two countries beside our own which determine the decision.

* * * * * * *

I remember coming down here one night from Boston, with a very successful business man who said, "People are not cutting trees in Maine this year because Canada has gone off the gold standard. That is a question I know about. They are not cutting trees in Maine because Canada has gone off the gold standard."

I said, the Saturday Evening Post, selling 3,000,000 copies a week, used to print 256 pages to a copy and is now printing 78 pages. The difference between 78 and 256 pages on 3,000,000 copies a week accounts for a good many trees.

In other words, you may overexplain the situation. The great thing in this affair is the world depression. The small thing is whether the countries are on or off the gold standard.

As far as this temporary measure is concerned, the new Hawley bill facilitates and increases the Tariff Commission's power to weigh and act on these things.

I think it not unfair to say on the rubber-footwear matter—of course, they make that in Massachusetts where I have a friendly interest, although, of course, I could take no judicial cognizance of that; but I am pleased to see the Massachusetts manufacturers saved from a little competition—but I do not think the cutting off of Japanese and Czechoslovakian footwear is going to create such a boom in that industry in Massachusetts that the unemployed of the rest of the Union might make a trek there to take up the jobs.

In other words, the tariff relationship is very much smaller than most people suppose. I think I am disclosing no improper secret to you gentlemen, who are the makers of our laws, when I say that this conclusion that we sent down yesterday had a dissenting addendum attached to it by my friend, Mr. Page, who is here with us to-day. There was another member of the commission, a Republican, Doctor Coulter, who signed it on condition that we should put in a clause that at the end of one year we would look over the facts again. In other words, it was not so dead open and shut a matter that all my associates wanted to make the change, willy-nilly. And yet that is the greatest single article of trouble from Japan.

The great trouble with Japan is its enormous depression. There is a man in the Library of Congress named Victor S. Clark who has just returned from Japan and his story of conditions there is perfectly terrible. Their budget is not balanced, their international trade is in awful shape, their military expenses are so heavy.

Japan has always been a dangerous, a hard competitor. In the last century Gen. William F. Draper, of Massachusetts, a Member of this House of Representatives, afterwards ambassador to two or three European countries, made a trip to Japan and came home with the belief that we, the American people, must have an embargo on manufactured products from Japan, that Japan has such great imitative faculties, such low-priced labor, that we must shut out Japanese products just as we do the Japanese people under our immigration laws.

That was the conclusion that Mr. Draper reached in the last century. Whether Japan was at that time on or off its gold standard, whether its yardstick was 18 or 36 inches, I do not know; whether its clinical thermometer was graded for 105 degrees for fever, or 98, I do not know; nor is it very important that I should know. The important thing is that Japan was and is and remains, because of the character of their people, industrious, hard-working, vegetarian-living people—a very serious competitor.

If they should go onto the gold standard to-morrow, it would not end the seriousness of their competition any more than their going off the gold standard started the seriousness of their competition.

These seem to me fundamentals that I hope this honorable committee in the consideration of legislation will bear in mind. The seriousness of this thing lies in its relation to the maintenance of the gold standard. That is the sheet anchor of economic soundness in the world.

See Ogden Mill's speech at Columbia University in which, in five columns on the evils of the world and the things that should be done to straighten out existing disorders, there is no mention of legislation against depreciated-currency countries. I do not even see Mr. Mills here to-day urging any of these bills.

I doubt if any of the Republican Members would testify that they were urged to go into this thing—to go into what we will call the original Hawley bill—and the Hill bill by the request of our great Secretary of the Treasury. That is extremely significant.

Now, I see that one of the Senators from South Carolina has introduced a bill deliberately to take the United States off the gold standard. I think it would be a calamity inexpressibly great and needless to do that.

But, gentlemen, you are going to vote on the 13th of February on whether you think that would be a good thing. Anyone that votes for the unadorned Hawley bill or the unadorned Hill bill is expressing his belief in the superior competitive efficiency of countries off the gold standard, from which there can be but one logical conclusion. It is inescapable that if the countries off the gold standard are so much more efficient competitively than we are, we ought to derive that advantage ourselves by going off the gold standard, but I do not believe that. I do not want to see that done.

Of course, the test of this thing is the price. When things are sold cheaply, those people become dangerous competitors. We can all ask this question: Are things cheaper measured in human sacrifice, in effort, in the realities? Are things cheaper in countries that have gone off the gold standard?

They are cheaper in this great period of distress everywhere, and it does not seem to make a great deal of difference whether the country has or has not gone off the gold standard. The panic, the depression that we are in, is greatly accentuated. We have had a perfectly tremendous drop in prices.

Take the products of the Iowa farm lands. If one were to look at the proceeds in the value of agricultural products in America now and in 1929 or earlier, he would see a perfectly tremendous drop. That is not because the United States has gone off the gold standard. If any country were buying these things of us, they would get them very cheap. That is not because we have gone off the gold standard. A country that had gone off the gold standard would also be selling cheaply, too. It is, perhaps, fair to say that the countries that are off the gold standard are in the worse economic plight. I rather think that is more or less true, and that might be a factor of some weight.

* * * * * * *

When I first went to France a franc was worth 19 cents. To-day it is worth a little under 4 cents. The same 10 francs to-day do not buy—40 cents—the same dinner that $1.90 bought before.

According to the theory of this bill, it should buy just the same.

This whole affair is an illustration of the power of propaganda. For instance, I have received advertisements from a tailor who says, "Since England has gone off the gold standard, cloth is so much cheaper, you can get a suit now for so many dollars that you used to have to pay so many dollars for." One very good friend of mine writes me a letter "Isn't this proof that depreciated currency is doing what this bill seeks to correct?"

It is only proof that the tailor thinks that is a good thing to advertise; a good thing to talk about. Now, I have the greatest respect for tailors and for their sales methods, but I should not think a national policy should be based upon the talking points of a tailor's advertisement.

* * * * * * *

What the world needs now is the healing effects of improved international relations rather than the destructive effects of further antagonistic activities. We ought to act as sanely as we can and as calmly and as rationally as we can. That is what the world needs.

* * * * * * *

In this period of great upset, many people are doing different things with their commodities from what they ever did before.

The Brazilians are pumping coffee out into the harbor and are using it for locomotives, I understand.

In Nebraska they are using corn for fuel. All of which are abnormalities, not because Nebraska has gone off the gold standard but because of the abnormality of this world situation. It ought to be handled in a way that will restore normal thinking or normal reasonableness rather than jumping in the opposite direction.

* * * * * * *

There are very few countries in the world to whom we do not sell more than we buy from.

As to Great Britain, the balance is very heavy. Even as to Japan, which has been the source of all this discussion, according to the last figures prepared by the Department of Commerce and issued by the National Chamber of Commerce, the difference was very slight; I think it was $199,000,000 one way and $195,000,000 the other way. It is true that they would like to sell to us more than they do.

* * * * * * *

The balance of world trade has been so adverse to Great Britain for a number of years that she could not make the payment of her exchanges in gold, and was forced off the gold standard; and once being forced off, her money fluctuates just as ours did when we went off the gold standard. In the Confederate War, it took $2.80 in our money to buy a dollar in gold; and, as I say, in my boyhood it had got down to $1.14. It all depends upon the likelihood of countries balancing trade. Trade balance has a great deal to do with it—the balance of trade in both directions, and the ratio of the National Budget. England was very badly behind in making ends meet, as a government, just as Japan is, in a very much more extreme degree to-day, and we have something to show in the way of a deficit ourselves. Our Budget is not altogether in very good shape, and so on; but it is a very delicate thing, this world standard, and I wish to correct and make clear my relations to Ogden Mills. He does not know me by sight. I have hardly ever spoken to him in my life. I have no right, license, or authority to quote him. What he said in a paper, however, I think I have a right to read. I have read him throughout the entire campaign. I do not believe there is a speech he has made in the last two years I have not read. All I have said was, that a man, having five columns in which to address himself to the economic evils of our times, if this Crowther bill would have been a correction of the evils of the time, I should have thought he would have included it. I still think so. There used to be an old saying, about somebody being conspicuous by his absence. I think the most conspicuous thing in this whole discussion here is the absence of Ogden Mills.

* * * * * * *

I will say, however, that the whole depreciated-currency thing itself is a tremendous factor in politics. It has been the greatest exhibit that I have ever seen of the power of propaganda. I remember when anybody who did not believe chopping off Belgium babies' hands was the chief enjoyment of the German soldier was regarded as pro-German. I was one of those who labored under the stigma of being pro-German because I did not believe all of the crazy things that propagandists of that period passed out. Had I been living in Salem, Mass., I hope I should not have joined in the destruction of the witches. It is very easy to see how it happened. Everybody tells everybody else, all the people who have a selfish interest, and want the tariff increased, if they all talk on one side, and they get the papers and the organs of opinion all in a state of mind where they tell everybody else that this is a good thing. Then you see what happens. There are those who for selfish interest say, "We want an increase of tariff. We have talked the old arguments a long time, and we want something new. Let us talk about depreciated currency."

* * * * * * *

In that respect, the prices in the countries that have gone off the gold standard—back in England a pound to-day will buy what the pound bought before. In other words, $3.30 will buy what $4.86 bought before England went off the gold standard.

In Vermont to-day $3.30 will buy what $4.86 bought two years ago. In France to-day the same. The world-wide depression in prices is the big thing, and the thing we should not lose sight of. The only thing, Mr. Hill, that I can't agree with you on, and I say this with profound respect and regret, is when you speak, as you steadily do, of concrete benefits and advantages in being off the gold standard. If that be true, I want to undo my whole background. I am angry with John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, for having put us back on the gold standard when we, back in the seventies, according to your theory, had the "advantage" of being off the gold standard, and of producing things more cheaply. John Sherman, of the Republican Party, got us back on the gold standard. Should they be blamed for that? Should I be blamed for voting against Bryan in 1896?

If one believes in this legislation, we ought to get off the gold standard as quickly as we can. I don't see how one can escape from that, when people refer to the countries off the gold standard as having great advantages, and speak of the benefits they have. Everybody that wants this legislation speaks about the benefits the other countries have. If it is a benefit, can't I have it? Can't we as Americans have it? If it is an advantage to be off the gold standard, we could have got it in 1896. We did have it in the seventies, but through the possible blundering of John Sherman we got out of it. He "blundered" us onto the gold standard and so deprived us of the low prices we are trying to effect equalizations for now.

It is our duty to do it if the theory behind these bills is correct. If it is an advantage to have a small yardstick, we ought to get off. If Massachusetts made 24 inches a yard, and textile manufacturers derived such enormous profits by it that all the other States around there put up tariffs against Massachusetts's cloth because they were making it so much more cheaply, they would wisely go to the 24-inch yard themselves. My theory is that it doesn't make any difference what they use, that that thing adjusts itself, as it has in all human history, as it did in France between the 19-cent franc and the 4-cent franc, as it did in Germany with the mark, the Italian lira. The Italian lira has been established at 5 cents. It used to be 25 cents. American manufacturers who have products coming in from Italy want the Italian stuff to go up because the Italians are producing so cheaply there. They tell exactly the same story.

I think the value of the committee system is to get specialized judgment and specialized information; and if I were a member of this honorable body, which I never expect to be, I would never vote to discharge any committee from its investigation and the performance of its duty. I should think the 21 members of this committee would be a great deal better able to decide on this thing than the total membership of the House or a referendum of the State of Massachusetts, or anything else. I think this committee ought to be allowed to lead; and I think this committee, under the leadership of our great Secretary of the Treasury, would undoubtedly work out a plan that would be helpful and beneficial; and if I were a Member of Congress, I would act under that leadership.

INVESTIGATION BY TARIFF COMMISSION—CALF AND KIP UPPER LEATHER

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have a resolution on the desk, being Senate Resolution 335. I should like to have action upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will report the resolution referred to by the Senator from New York, coming over from a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 335) submitted by Mr. COPELAND on January 18, 1933, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purposes of section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, the difference in the cost of production between the domestic article and the foreign article, and to report at the earliest date practicable upon calf and kip upper leather.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

SALE AND ENCUMBRANCE OF KICKAPOO LANDS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there is now on the Vice President's desk a message from the House of Representatives transmitting an amendment of the House to Senate bill 4439. I ask the Chair to lay the amendment before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4339) repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma, which was, on page 2, to strike out lines 1 to 8, inclusive, and insert:

SEC. 2. All restrictions upon said lands, which were removed by operation of said act are hereby reimposed for a period of 10 years from the date of the approval of this act on all of such lands as are still held or owned by the Indians: Provided, however, That valid encumbrances now resting against any of said lands shall not in any manner be affected by the provisions of this act, but any of such lands so encumbered, if still owned by the Indians, shall, when such encumbrances have been removed, become subject to the provisions of this act as fully and to the same extent as if such lands were now unencumbered: Provided further, That the President may, in his discretion, in accordance with existing law, further extend the period of restriction herein provided for.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN FLOOD-CONTROL AREAS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does it relate to some matter now before the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. It relates to a resolution pending before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. About a month ago the Committee on Commerce reported with a favorable recommendation a resolution, which had been submitted by me, providing for an investigation of labor conditions in the flood-control areas, the resolution having been presented as the result of charges made by some very responsible organizations in this country as to the exploitation of labor in those sections.

The resolution provided for an appropriation, and, therefore, went to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate about a month ago. I understand that that committee has taken upon itself the duty of determining the merits of the resolution, with which, as I understand the law and the rules, it is not concerned. I make this public statement because for three weeks at least I have pleaded with the chairman of the committee to hold a meeting and determine the amount which the committee might think proper as the expense to be incurred in the investigation. I am not so much interested in that as I am in securing some action by the Senate, and thus far there has been no action taken by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses. I think there ought to be an explanation of the delay.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New York that there is no intention on the part of the committee to hold up the resolution to which he has referred. The committee will hold a meeting at 1.30 o'clock p. m. to-day, at which the resolution will be considered and a report ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

IDA E. GODFREY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed. The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to Calendar No. 1134, being House bill 3033. I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who objected to the bill yesterday, will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1134, being House bill 3033. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3033) for the relief of Ida E. Godfrey and others, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ida E. Godfrey, of Cookstown, N. J., the sum of $750; to the estate of Annie L. Davis, of Wrightstown, N. J., the sum of $500; to Thomas N. Emley, of Cookstown, N. J., the sum of $750, damages by fire on June 11, 1921, to certain cranberry bogs adjacent to the rifle range at Camp Dix, N. J.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney, or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of that bill yesterday. I had examined the report, and I found that the then Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, had reported adversely on the bill. I do not object to its consideration now; but I shall vote against the bill, and, from the facts presented by the report, I confess that I do not see any merit in it.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and other Members interested in this legislation, I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

The bill (H. R. 13742) to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will be passed over.

DES MOINES RIVER BRIDGE, ST. FRANCISVILLE, MO.

The bill (H. R. 9385) authorizing Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Des Moines River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near St. Francisville, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Missouri, the State of Iowa, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Missouri and Iowa, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.

The bill (S. 5539) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant a perpetual easement of 15 feet in width to Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a California utility corporation, over, across, in, and upon the site of the lighter-than-air base, near Sunnyvale, in the county of Santa Clara, in the State of California, for an existing 20-inch gas main was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from California explain the bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the only purpose of the bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant an easement to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. to continue to maintain a 20-inch gas-pipe main under the Sunnyvale lighter-than-air base at Sunnyvale, in Santa Clara County, Calif.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that the bill is approved by the Secretary of the Navy, so I have no objection to it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There is a committee amendment, very wisely suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], which should be considered first.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Government," to insert "and subject to reversion to the United States in the event of abandonment or nonuser by the grantee for the purpose herein specified," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to grant, under such terms and conditions as will best conserve the interests of the Government, and subject to reversion to the United States in the event of abandonment or nonuser by the grantee for the purpose herein specified, a perpetual easement to Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a California utility corporation, over, across, in, and upon the site of the lighter-than-air base, near Sunnyvale, in the county of Santa Clara, in the State of California, for the maintenance and operation by said company of an existing 20-inch gas main: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall include in his annual report to the President a full and complete statement respecting such easement, when granted, which statement shall also include the name and address of the grantee, the extent and purpose of the grant, and the benefits accruing to the United States or to the public therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant a perpetual easement to Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a California utility corporation, over, across, in, and upon the site of the lighter-than-air base, near Sunnyvale, in the county of Santa Clara, in the State of California, for an existing 20-inch gas main."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5555) to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego and the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah please give me his attention?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. KING. I object to it, Mr. President. I will say to the Senator that I think the whole plan is unwise. I believe it is an adventure that is not justified by past experience or warranted by the present condition of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5498) to authorize an increase in the limit of cost of one aircraft carrier was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MICHAEL J. BUDZINSKI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5214) to correct the naval record of Michael J. Budzinski, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, benefits, and privileges upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Michael J. Budzinski shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 15th day of December, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest that the proviso should be amended in the form agreed upon yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee will be agreed to.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," and to insert:

Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Michael J. Budzinski."

EXCHANGE OF LANDS WITH CITY OF SAN DIEGO

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will state it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Are we operating under the 5-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On unobjected bills.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Where some Senator, without knowledge of the bill, objects, may we reply to his observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not if any Senator calls for the regular order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I propose, a little later on, to reply to the observations of the Senator from Utah with respect to this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. A moment ago I interposed an objection, as I supposed, to Order of Business No. 1219, Senate bill 5498. I have no objection to Order of Business No. 1218, Senate bill 5555.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I objected to that bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the always courteous and generous Senator from Tennessee not to object to it? It is approved by all the departments and unanimously approved by the committee. The Government received some two hundred and forty-odd acres of land which the Navy wants.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has a different bill from the one to which I objected. I objected to Order of Business No. 1219, Senate bill 5498, the authorization of a $19,000,000 aircraft carrier. I have no objection to Order of Business No. 1218.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to returning to Order of Business No. 1218? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5555) to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego and the United States, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the city of San Diego, Calif., free from all encumbrances and without cost to said city of San Diego, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the lands contained within that part of the Marine Corps Base, San Diego, Calif., described as follows: Beginning at a point on the United States bulkhead line as established in February, 1912, distant 300 feet northwesterly from station No. 104 on said bulkhead line; thence north 7° east a distance of 2,160 feet; thence north 60° 34′ 59″ west to an intersection with the prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street; thence southwesterly along the prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street to an intersection with the United States bulkhead line, as established in February, 1912; thence south 83° east along said bulkhead line to the point of beginning, in consideration of the transfer to the United States by said city of San Diego, free from all encumbrances and without cost to the United States, of all right, title, and interest in and to the lands contained within the following-described area: Beginning at the intersection of the prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street with the United States bulkhead line as established in February, 1912; thence southwesterly along the prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street to the pierhead line as the same has been or may hereafter be established by the United States; thence northwesterly and southwesterly along the said pierhead line to its intersection with the prolongation of the northeasterly line of Lowell Street; thence northwesterly along the prolongation of the northeasterly line of Lowell Street to the United States bulkhead line as established in February, 1912; thence northeasterly, easterly, and southeasterly along the United States bulkhead line as established in February, 1912, to the point of beginning; and also all of block 16, municipal tidelands subdivision, tract No. 1.

LIMIT OF COST OF AIRCRAFT CARRIER

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Now, Mr. President, as to Order of Business 1219, Senate bill 5498, that does not call for any appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is an authorization of $21,000,000.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Unhappily we have a Navy, and other nations have; and the present appropriation for this particular aircraft carrier is $19,000,000. I say "unhappily," but it has become necessary, according to the Navy Department, to increase that appropriation by $2,000,000. I hope the Senator at least will permit this bill to go through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his opposition?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am sorry, but I can not do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE, THE DALLES, OREG.

The bill (S. 5502) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. According to the calendar, this bill is similar to Order of Business 1257, H. R. 14060.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask to have the House bill substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14060) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg., authorized to be built by Dalles City by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931, heretofore extended by act of Congress approved February 11, 1932, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from February 20, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 5502 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5035) amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from California be good enough to explain that bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in justice to the views of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I call his attention to the bill that is now before the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I think the bill should go over. It is a matter of major importance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FLOOD-CONTROL WORKS, LOWELL CREEK, SEWARD, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 6733) for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the flood-control works at Lowell Creek, Seward, Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to submit for the consideration of Congress such estimates as are, in his judgment, necessary for the proper maintenance of the flood-control works at Lowell Creek, Seward, Alaska, construction under authority contained in Public Resolution No. 52 (69th Cong.), approved February 9, 1927.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SYSTEM, MOLOKAI, HAWAII

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 311) to approve Act No. 268 of the session laws of 1931 of the Territory of Hawaii entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within the island of Molokai," which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., The act No. 268 of the session laws of 1931 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within the islands of Molokai," passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii and approved by the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii on April 30, 1931, is hereby approved: Provided, That the authority in section 16 of said act for the amending or repeal of said act shall not be held to authorize such action by the Legislature of Hawaii except upon approval by Congress in accordance with the organic act: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as an approval by Congress of the theory of establishing value on the actual cost of reproducing or replacing property as contained in section 18 of the said act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can we not have some explanation of this bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that this bill is in the usual form. It is impossible for the Territory of Hawaii to give a franchise to any public-utility company without the permission of the Congress. The Territorial legislature has granted such a franchise, and it is necessary for the Congress to ratify the action of the legislature. It is not a monopoly, and is in the usual form granted to such companies. The island of Molokai at present is without any electric-light plant at all; and this bill grants the people of that island an opportunity to have a small company to give them electric light.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 7503) to repeal the Executive order of November 23, 1909, making the enticing of laborers from the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Railroad a misdemeanor was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this bill and the following 10 bills—11 all together—relate to the laws of the Panama Canal Zone. The bills come here from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

In 1928 Congress passed an act providing for the revision and codification of the laws applicable to the Canal Zone. Pursuant to that act a skilled codifier, an employee of the West Publishing Co., experienced in work of that character, as most Senators know, was employed to effect the revision and codification. He brought to his aid a judge of the Canal Zone, Judge Lennon—a man of very high character and reputation—as well as the district attorney, and they did the work of revision and codification. The Governor of the Canal Zone then called to his aid an advisory body consisting of 9 members—3 lawyers and 6 laymen. The bar of the Canal Zone also reviewed the work, and it has the approval of all of those, and likewise had the study of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. The bills should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the pending bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Executive order of November 23, 1909, making the enticing of laborers from the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Railroad a misdemeanor, be, and it is hereby, repealed.

The bill (H. R. 7506) to repeal an ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission August 5, 1911, and approved by the Secretary of War August 22, 1911, establishing market regulations for the Canal Zone, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ordinance enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission on August 5, 1911, and approved by the Secretary of War on August 22, 1911, establishing market regulations for the Canal Zone be, and it is hereby, repealed.

The bill (H. R. 7508) to provide for the inspection of vessels navigating Canal Zone waters was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all vessels navigating the waters of the Canal Zone, except public vessels of all nations, and private vessels merely transiting the canal, shall be subject to an annual inspection of hulls, boilers, machinery, equipment, and passenger accommodations; and the governor is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations concerning such inspection, provided that such regulations shall, as nearly as practicable, conform to the laws and regulations governing the Steamboat Inspection Service of the United States.

SEC. 2. A foreign vessel of a country which has inspection laws approximating those of the United States, having an unexpired certificate of inspection duly issued by the authorities of the said country, shall not be subjected to an inspection other than that necessary to determine if the vessel, boilers, and life-saving equipment are as stated in the certificate of inspection; but no such certificate of inspection shall be accepted as evidence of lawful inspection unless like privileges are granted to vessels of the United States under the laws of the country to which such vessel belongs.

SEC. 3. When the board of local inspectors of the Panama Canal approves a vessel and its equipment, a certificate of inspection, in triplicate, will be issued by the canal authorities, two copies of which shall be displayed in conspicuous places in the vessel where they are most likely to be observed by passengers and others, and there kept at all times framed under glass.

SEC. 4. Should the board of local inspectors not approve the vessel or its equipment, a certificate of inspection will be refused, and the board of local inspectors will make a statement in writing giving the reasons for failure to approve, filing such statement in the records of the board, and giving a copy thereof to the owner, agent, or master of the vessel.

SEC. 5. Any vessel, other than those excepted in section 1 of this act, that navigate the waters of the Canal Zone without having an unexpired certificate of inspection issued by the canal authorities or by the Steamboat Inspection Service of the United States, or an unexpired certificate accepted by the canal authorities under section 2 of this act, shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $1,000; and whenever any passenger is received on board a vessel not having certified copies of the certificate of inspection placed and kept as required by section 3 of this act, or whenever passengers are received on board a vessel in excess of the number authorized by said certificate of inspection, such vessel shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $100 for each passenger so received. Fines shall be recovered in the district court of the Canal Zone, and the amount so recovered shall be a lien upon such vessel, and it may be seized and sold to satisfy same, as well as the costs of the court proceedings.

SEC. 6. In case a vessel holding an unexpired certificate issued by the canal authorities shall change its condition as to hull, boilers, machinery, equipment, or accommodations for passengers in such manner as not to conform to the regulations under which such certificate was issued, the board of local inspectors is authorized to make an inspection and to recommend revocation of the certificate of inspection, and upon approval of such recommendation by the marine superintendent, or such other officer of the Panama Canal as may be designated by the governor, a notice of revocation will be issued to the owner, agent, or master of the vessel; and after such notice of revocation the navigating of Canal Zone waters by such vessel shall subject it to the penalty prescribed by section 5 of this act.

SEC. 7. Other than public vessels of the United States or of the Republic of Panama, small vessels propelled in whole or in part by machinery shall be required to be registered, certificated, and numbered, and to display the numbers assigned in a conspicuous place in prescribed form. Such vessels shall not be operated except by an operator holding a license to operate, issued after examination by the board of local inspectors, and approval of such examination by the marine superintendent or such other officer of the Panama Canal as may be designated by the governor.

SEC. 8. Small vessels not propelled in whole or in part by machinery shall be registered and numbered, and when numbers have been assigned they shall be displayed in a conspicuous place in prescribed form.

SEC. 9. Vessels under 65 feet in length, before carrying passengers for hire in the Canal Zone waters, shall obtain a certificate from the Canal Zone authorities to engage in this business, and such certificate shall specify the number of passengers and life preservers and fire-fighting apparatus which the vessel must carry. Such vessels shall be subject to annual inspection, and the certificate referred to will be granted for one year only. Small vessels carrying passengers without having first obtained a certificate from the canal authorities, or carrying passengers in excess of the number authorized by such certificate, shall be liable to a fine of not exceeding $100 for each passenger so carried.

The bill (H. R. 7514) in relation to the Canal Zone postal service was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the postal service of the Canal Zone shall be governed by such of the laws, rules, and regulations of the Postal Service of the United States as are not inapplicable to the conditions existing in the Canal Zone, and the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to establish new post offices or discontinue those already established, to provide such rules and regulations as are necessary for the operation of the service, to appoint the personnel thereof, and to prescribe the postage stamps and other stamped paper which shall be used in such service: Provided, however, That the expenses of operating the Canal Zone postal service shall be defrayed, so far as possible, from the revenue derived therefrom, the use of which for that purpose is hereby authorized.

SEC. 2. That deposit money orders issued in the Canal Zone in lieu of postal savings certificates in accordance with rules and regulations heretofore established by the President, or that may hereafter be established by him, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum.

SEC. 3. That the interest received from the Canal Zone money-order funds deposited in banks under Canal Zone regulations shall be available to pay the interest on deposit money orders authorized by the preceding section. Such interest, which shall form a part of the postal revenues, shall also be available to pay the losses which are chargeable to the Canal Zone postal service.

SEC. 4. That all other laws for the operation of the Canal Zone postal service, excepting section 43a of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, are hereby repealed.

The bill (H. R. 7515) to provide for the establishment of a customs service in the Canal Zone, and other matters, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to inquire about that bill. Is it the purpose of this measure to give the Governor of the Panama Canal the right to prescribe a scale of duties?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. My recollection is that the bill merely provides for the enforcement of the duties.

Mr. REED. The first section provides:

That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall have control for customs purposes over all articles, including passengers' baggage, introduced into the Canal Zone, and he is authorized to establish rules and regulations governing the entry and importation of goods into said zone, the disposal of goods brought into the Canal Zone in violation of such regulations, and to alter and amend such rules and regulations from time to time.

I do not understand whether the customs are to be collected on a scale of rates fixed by the governor, or on the rates fixed by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My understanding is that the act relates only to the provision for the collection of the customs prescribed by the act of Congress.

Mr. REED. Is it the Senator's understanding that the tariff act at present in force applies to the Canal Zone?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would not some amendment be required to make the matter certain—that "nothing herein shall be construed to modify or repeal existing revenue and tariff acts enacted by the Congress of the United States"?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no objection whatever to that.

Mr. KING. In the interest of clarity, it would seem to me that something of that character ought to be added.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Whatever the fact may be, Mr. President, this is merely an affirmation of a practice that has been observed there since we exercised authority over the Canal Zone.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, apparently the act does not give any authority to fix rates of duty. An examination of it discloses that it merely permits the regulations, and orders for their enforcement, with respect to merchandise and baggage coming into the Canal Zone.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not insist upon the proposed amendment. If there should be any controversy later, Congress could very quickly pass a joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall have control for customs purposes over all articles, including passengers' baggage, introduced into the Canal Zone, and he is authorized to establish rules and regulations governing the entry and importation of goods into said zone, the disposal of goods brought into the Canal Zone in violation of such regulations, and to alter and amend such rules and regulations from time to time.

SEC. 2. That general powers of search, seizure, and arrest are hereby conferred upon customs officers in the Canal Zone, including deputy shipping commissioners and boarding officers when performing customs duties. In the exercise of these powers customs officers are authorized to enter any building, other than dwelling houses, to stop vessels and vehicles, and to search vessels, vehicles, and their contents; and to stop and search persons and any packages carried by them. Such right of entry, stopping, search, seizure, and arrest shall be exercised only when there are reasonable grounds for suspecting violations of the customs rules and regulations authorized hereunder or of the United States applicable in the Canal Zone.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful to enter or import, or attempt to enter or import, any articles or merchandise into the Canal Zone until the entry or importation of such articles or merchandise has been approved by the proper officers of the Canal Zone, and that it shall further be unlawful to pass, or attempt to pass, any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice or bill or other paper, for the purpose of securing the entry or importation into the Canal Zone of any articles or merchandise in violation of the rules and regulations to be promulgated in pursuance of the authority contained in the first section of this act, and any article brought into or obtained in the Canal Zone in violation of such regulations may be seized and held, and, unless within a period of 30 days from the date of seizure such articles are entered in conformity to the rules and regulations to be promulgated by the governor, they may be confiscated and disposed of as provided in such rules and regulations. Any person violating the provisions of this section or any of the rules and regulations authorized hereunder, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. That if any vessel arriving at the Canal Zone from any port, other than a port in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama, is found to have on board merchandise not manifested, the master of such vessel shall be liable to a penalty equal in amount to the value of the merchandise not manifested, and all such merchandise belonging to or consigned to or for the officers or crew of the vessel shall be forfeited: Provided, however, That such penalty shall not be imposed if it is made to appear to the customs officers, or to the court in which the trial is held, that no part of the cargo has been unloaded, except as accounted for in the master's report, and that the errors and omissions in the manifest were made without fraud or collusion; and in such case the master may be allowed to correct his manifest by means of post entry. A permit shall not be granted to unload any such merchandise so omitted from the manifest before post entry or addition to report of manifest has been made.

SEC. 5. That if sea stores are found on board of a vessel from any port, other than a port in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama, which are not specified in the list furnished the boarding officer, or if a greater quantity of such articles is found than that specified in such list, or if any of such articles are landed without a permit being first obtained from the customs officer for that purpose, all of such articles omitted from the list or manifest, or so landed shall be seized and forfeited, and the master of the vessel shall be liable to a penalty treble the value of the articles so omitted or landed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7518) to amend an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "public health board" and to insert in lieu thereof "Board of Health," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved August 21, 1916 (ch. 371, 39 Stat. 527), is hereby amended to read as follows: "That, until otherwise provided by Congress, the President is authorized to make rules and regulations in matters of sanitation, health, and quarantine for the Canal Zone or to modify or change existing rules and regulations and those hereafter made from time to time: Provided, That the President, under such regulations as he may prescribe, may authorize the Board of Health of the Canal Zone to issue licenses to practice the healing art, which regulations shall include conditions under which such licenses shall be issued and include provisions for revocation for cause of licenses issued. Violations of any quarantine regulations provided for herein shall be punished by fine not to exceed $500 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; and a violation of any sanitary or health regulation authorized hereunder shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Each day such violation may continue shall constitute a separate offense."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7519) to amend the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with amendment.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 26, to strike out lines 6 to 24, inclusive.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this appears to be a revision of the Penal Code. It is therefore apparently a very important measure. Does the Senator from Montana wish to have the bill considered under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am only able to say to the Senator from Arkansas that the legislation was prepared with the care to which I have heretofore alluded. The Committee on Interoceanic Canals went over the bill with some care; and while I could not undertake to say that a critical analysis of it was made, I feel certain that it is, on the whole, an advisable penal code.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of complaints were made to me several years ago and, indeed, within the past year, of alleged arbitrary acts upon the part of officials of the Panama Canal Zone, not only executive officials but also judicial and administrative officials. Some complaints were made with regard to the method of enforcing the criminal statutes. I was wondering whether any hearings had been had by the committee and the matters to which I have referred taken up.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Nothing of the kind was suggested. Another one of the bills provides a code of procedure in criminal cases.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Apparently the bill as reported carries an amendment entitled "section 115," designed to prevent the changes contemplated by the revised code from being retroactive. I presume, of course, that amendment should be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 57, after line 16, to insert section 115, reading as follows:

SEC. 115. Nothing contained in this act shall apply to an offense committed prior to the time when this act takes effect. Such an offense shall be punished according to the provisions of law existing when it was committed in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is an error in the printing of the bill. Page 53 as printed should take the place of page 56 in the printed bill, and page 56 of the printed bill should take the place of page 53.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will be authorized, without objection, to make the correction. The question is on engrossing the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7520) to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 36, line 24, after the word "against," to strike out the word "a" and insert the word "the"; on page 43, line 1, to insert a new side head "Sec. 219"; on page 62, at the end of the bill, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 120. This act shall apply to criminal actions and proceedings from the time it takes effect except that all such actions and proceedings theretofore commenced shall be conducted in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7521) to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 9, to insert the words "1st day of October, 1933."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This is quite a voluminous bill. I suppose it has been carefully worked out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say, with respect to the bill, that this Code of Civil Procedure is founded upon the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California, which is the model of the codes of procedure of nearly all the Western States, including the State of Montana, with the code of which I have intimate familiarity, of course. An examination of this code will disclose that it is practically a reproduction of the California Code of Civil Procedure.

The next amendments of the committee were, on page 128, line 11, to strike out the word "actions" and insert in lieu thereof the word "action"; on page 191, line 24, to strike out the word "encumberance" and insert in lieu thereof the word "encumbrance"; on page 233, line 13, to strike out the word "and" before the word "undertaking" and insert in lieu thereof the word "an"; on page 315, line 24, to transpose lines 24 and 25. Insert line 24 reading "ing, a trial by jury must be had, as in cases of the contest of" immediately after line 25; on page 334, line 17, to strike out entire line 17 and insert the words thereof reading "law, to the duties of executor or administrator, which oath must" immediately after line 14; on page 335, line 19, to strike out entire line 19 and insert the words thereof reading "chapters 23 to 36, the sureties must justify thereon in the" immediately after line 17; on page 378, line 21, to strike out the word "Orders" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Order"; on page 388, line 8, to strike out the word "Adminstrators" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Administrators"; on page 443, line 20, to strike out the word "defandant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "defendant"; on page 459, line 19, to strike out the word "that" and insert in lieu thereof the word "than"; and on page 485, line 13, to strike out the word "discharge" and insert in lieu thereof the word "discharge."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I observe, from the expression on the face of the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] that in a way he regards this bill as a tribute to the State of California. I might suggest that, the bill being very voluminous, it leaves nothing to the imagination. Practically every detail of the civil code is written into this code so that all opportunity for construction by applying the common law will be avoided.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, permit me to say that in drafting the California Code we borrowed largely from the learning of Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7522) to provide a new Civil Code for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Civil Code, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, lines 9 and 10, to insert the words "1st day of October, 1933."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ought to say, in this connection, that these changes in the law covered by the Code of Civil Procedure and by the Civil Code seemed to be necessitated and required by reason of the change of conditions in the Canal Zone. When it was originally taken over it was occupied by people of Spanish descent, and the laws, as well as the procedure, were such as those people were familiar with. All those people have been removed from the Canal Zone, and there are now there only those whose training has been in the other system of law, founded upon the common law of England, and that necessitates these changes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendments.

The next amendments of the committee were, on page 101, line 6, to strike out the entire line reading "witness subscribed his name thereto as a witness" and insert same words immediately after line 13; on page 121, line 17, to strike out the word "or" at the end of the line and substitute therefor the word "of"; on page 147, line 6, to strike out the letter "s" from the word "assignees," so as to make it singular, "assignee"; on page 202, line 9, to strike out the word "requires" and substitute therefor the word "acquires"; on page 206, line 6, to strike out the word "it" between the words "if" and "at"; on page 368, to strike out lines 7 to 11, inclusive, constituting section 1167; on page 378, to strike out lines 7 to 11, inclusive, constituting section 1217 and cross reference; on page 378, to strike out lines 14 to 16, inclusive, and the numeral (2) in line 17.

UNEMPLOYED PERSONS AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that bill was reported adversely.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DRAINAGE DISTRICT NO. 1, RICHARDSON COUNTY, NEBR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4589) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make payment of part of the expenses incurred in securing improvements in drainage project of drainage district No. 1, Richardson County, Nebr., and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the words "out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "from funds now or hereafter on deposit to the credit of the individuals concerned," and on page 2, line 9, to strike out the proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That the amount paid on account of any allotment shall be reimbursable out of funds under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior belonging to the respective allotment owners or out of the proceeds of the sale of such allotment.

SETTLERS ON FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 5433) for the relief of certain settlers on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any entryman on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, or any of his successors or transferees, who is unable to make payment on his entry as required by law, may obtain an extension of time for such payment, including interest, until November 1, 1933, upon the payment of interest on the total amount involved at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, provided that he shows to the satisfaction of the commissioner of the General Land Office, by affidavit corroborated by the affidavits of at least two persons, the fact of and the reason for his inability to make the payment. Any such person, upon making payment of like interest and furnishing a like affidavit, may obtain an additional extension of one year, but no more, for the payment of any amount so expended.

SEC. 2. Upon failure of any person to make complete payment of the required amount within the period of any extension granted in accordance with the provisions of this act, the homestead entry of such person shall be canceled and the lands shall revert to the status of other tribal lands of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation.

JUAN APODACA

The bill (S. 4590) for the relief of Juan Apodaca was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the word "of" and insert the word "on"; in lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "that no bounty, pension, pay, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof:

That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, or their dependents, Juan Apodaca, who was a private in the Medical Department, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of the Medical Department on the 11th day of April, 1919: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. M'DONALD

The bill (H. R. 4368) for the relief of George W. McDonald was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "soldiers," to insert the words "and their widows," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers and their widows, George W. McDonald, who was a member of Company C, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, mustered in on June 1, 1862, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 1st day of October, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. The bill was reported on adversely from the department.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is because the bill as then submitted to the Secretary apparently required the issuance of honorable-discharge papers. The man McDonald was undoubtedly taken into the service in the regiment in Illinois. The regiment was moved to Harper's Ferry. The Confederates captured every man in the regiment and all the papers of the regiment, and consequently it is one regiment in the Civil War concerning which The Adjutant General is absolutely unable to furnish a list of the members of the different companies. If a man wanted a pension on plausible grounds he ought to have claimed to belong to the Sixty-fifth Illinois, because nobody can disprove it; but McDonald undoubtedly did belong to it.

McDonald was a drummer boy only 11 years old. He was captured with this regiment by the Confederates at Harpers Ferry. There are affidavits in the record from his companions who say they remember him at a fist fight with a Confederate drummer boy for the possession of his drumsticks. He surrendered his drum, but would not surrender his drumsticks. He had a fight with the Confederate drummer boy and won the fight and kept the drumsticks. That is proven by affidavits. There is no question that he was in the regiment.

During his lifetime he himself was given a pension by special act of Congress. Now he is dead and his widow applies for a widow's pension and can not get it because The Adjutant General states his records do not show that the boy was in the service for 90 days. They were married before 1905, I am sure, and yet the widow can not get any pension.

The boy was taken out of the service under habeas corpus proceedings instituted by his mother when the regiment got back to Illinois. In the Chicago fire all the records of the habeas corpus proceedings disappeared, so that between the Confederates and Mrs. O'Leary's cow there is no record whatsoever to show that this young man ever was in the Army 90 days. However, the affidavits show it beyond question.

I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I submit an inquiry to the able Senator from Pennsylvania? There is nothing against the young man's record even when he was in the service?

Mr. REED. No; nothing at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of the widow of George W. McDonald."

LANDS FOR USE OF UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA

Mr ASHURST. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5361) to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of Arizona for the use of the University of Arizona, and I submit a report (No. 1184) thereon. I call the attention of my colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] to the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have a brief statement of what the bill provides?

Mr. HAYDEN. It authorizes the transfer of some 2,000 acres not far from Tucson, Ariz., to the State of Arizona for the use of the State university. The area described is covered with a fine growth of giant cactus. The university authorities are most anxious to have the growth preserved. There has been a movement on foot to make this a national monument or national park. I think it is better to have it maintained in the nature of a State park under the guardianship of the university.

Mr. McNARY. Is it to be used for experimental purposes by the State university?

Mr. HAYDEN. The primary purpose is to preserve the marvelous growth of cactus to which I have referred.

Mr. McNARY. Would not the Senator be satisfied to let it go over for the day? Several Senators wish to look at it. I shall not interfere further with its passage.

Mr. HAYDEN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND IN LOS ANGELES COUNTY, CALIF.

The bill (S. 5537) to convey certain land in the county of Los Angeles, State of California, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 10, after the word "land," to insert the word "not"; in the same line, to strike out "any other" and insert "that"; and on page 3 to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the amount received from the county of Los Angeles, State of California, for the land above described shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the fund known as the military post construction fund, to be and remain available until expended for permanent construction at military posts in such amounts as may be authorized by law from time to time by the Congress.

So as to make the bill read:

Whereas on or about the 22d day of August, 1921, the county of Los Angeles, State of California, conveyed to the United States of America the hereinafter-described tract of land for the use of the War or Navy Departments; and

Whereas the county of Los Angeles, in the State of California, purchased said property for the purpose of making said conveyance at a total sum of $148,655, of which amount the United States of America contributed $55,655 and the county of Los Angeles contributed the sum of $93,000; and

Whereas the United States of America has ceased to use said property, or any part thereof, for military, or naval, or other purposes, and the same is now and for some time has been idle: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the county of Los Angeles the hereinafter-described land, exclusive of such structures thereon which may be designated by the Secretary of War for retention by the War Department with a view to their eventual removal from the premises, to be used for public park, playground, and recreation purposes only, on condition that should the land not be used for that purpose it shall revert to the United States: Provided, however, That the county of Los Angeles, State of California, pay to the United States of America the sum of $55,655, the amount originally paid by the Government on the purchase price of said property, which property is particularly described as follows:

All those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, together with all buildings thereon, situate, lying, and being in the city of Arcadia, county of Los Angeles, and State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit: Lot 4 of tract No. 949 as delineated upon the map of said tract recorded in book 17 of maps, at page 13, records of Los Angeles County, and lots 3, 4, 5, and 6 of tract No. 2409 as delineated upon the map of said tract, recorded in book 23 of maps, at page 23, records of Los Angeles County. The land intended to be conveyed by this deed is bounded on the north by Falling Leaf Avenue, on the east by Santa Anita Avenue, on the south by Huntington Drive and by land now owned by Clara Baldwin Stocker, and on the west by the rights of way of Pacific Electric Railroad Co. and Southern Pacific Railroad Co., and being all of the land claimed or owned by the grantor within the exterior bounds of Arcadia balloon field.

SEC. 2. That the amount received from the county of Los Angeles, State of California, for the land above described shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the fund known as the military post construction fund, to be and remain available until expended for permanent construction at military posts in such amounts as may be authorized by law from time to time by the Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

GASOLINE TAX IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 5823) to increase the motor-vehicle fuel tax in the District of Columbia and to provide for the better administration thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] would explain the bill. I have been informed that the present motor-vehicle fuel tax is more than sufficient to provide for repairs of roads, streets, and so forth. I do not understand why the additional tax is believed to be necessary.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the basis of taxation for the District of Columbia is broadened by this bill. At the present time the funds obtained from the existing gasoline tax are used exclusively for repair and improvement of streets and roads. Under the terms of this bill and in accordance with the recommendation of the District Commissioners, additional uses are provided for the gasoline tax. These additional uses for gasoline-tax funds include park-road improvement and repair; the construction, maintenance, and repair of bridges; expenses of the department of vehicles and traffic; salaries of street and bridge division employees in the highway department; salaries of police officers assigned to the traffic bureau and salaries of crossing policemen.

The commissioners are very strongly of the opinion that the District must obtain additional sources of revenue. The gasoline tax in the District of Columbia is below that of nearly every State in the Union. There are only four States of the 48 that have a 2-cent tax, as is still in force in the District of Columbia. The State of Virginia, adjoining the District, has a tax of 5 cents; the State of Maryland, 4 cents; and the State of Pennsylvania, 3 cents. The receipts from the real-estate taxes are likely to fall off very materially. Receipts from the sale of properties for delinquent taxes already have fallen off very seriously. The District Commissioners and the District tax assessor believe it imperative and urgent that we should undertake to develop new sources of revenue for the District.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not object. This is a reasonable tax. I believe every State in the Union has a higher rate than that existing in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER. All but four.

Mr. BINGHAM. The State of Connecticut has a 2-cent tax and uses the money solely for the roads.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I should like to say in regard to this matter that the tax on automobiles in the city of Washington is perfectly absurd. It is only $1 per year. It does not make any difference how much an automobile weighs, the tax is only $1. The consequence is that the value of automobiles has gone down so far that Washington is filled with old secondhand automobiles from which the city receives practically no tax. This is the only source from which the District might recover some funds for use on the roads and streets.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I will ask that the bill go over for the present. I should like to have an opportunity to look it over before action is taken on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

CHESAPEAKE BAY BRIDGE, MARYLAND

The bill (S. 5503) authorizing the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay from a point in Baltimore County to a point in Kent County, in the State of Maryland, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Maryland, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Chesapeake Bay, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point in Baltimore County, Md., south of Back River, to Hart Island, to Miller Island, and thence to some point in Kent County, Md., between 39° and 12′ and 39° and 13′ and 30″ N. latitude, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act: Provided, That in the interests of national defense, and for the protection of life and property, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered, when, in his judgment, military necessity shall require it, to close said bridge to traffic at such time and during such periods as he may determine.

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Maryland, any political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 30 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Maryland, or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. The said Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of Maryland a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion cost. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of the State of Maryland shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the financing and the construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable cost of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE NEAR BUSHKILL, PA.

The bill (S. 5504) authorizing the Bushkill Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River at or near Bushkill, Pa., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Bushkill Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Delaware River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Bushkill, Pa., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 3. The said Bushkill Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Pennsylvania, the State of New Jersey, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Bushkill Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Departments of the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Bushkill Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This being the unfinished business, the bill will be passed over until 2 o'clock.

FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

The bill (H. R. 14416) to make the Federal gasoline tax effective until June 30, 1934, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Objection has been made to Calendar 1249, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill went over on the objection of the Senator's colleague.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I introduced an amendment to this bill this morning that I should like to have considered at the proper time. This amendment is for the Federal-aid road appropriation for the years 1934 and 1935 as it passed the Senate on June 8, 1932, known as the Oddie bill (S. 36), which passed the Senate as an authorization.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the reason why I objected.

Mr. KEAN. It is a very important bill and it should be passed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Nevada ask that his amendment be printed at this juncture in the RECORD, so that we may know what it is?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes; I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection the bill will be passed over, and without objection the amendment of the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD.

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be expended according to the provisions of such act as amended: The sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934; the sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935: Provided, That in apportioning the foregoing sums among the several States and the Territory of Hawaii for said fiscal years deductions shall be made as reimbursement to the United States of the $80,000,000 emergency advance funds apportioned to such States and the Territory of Hawaii and used in road work, such deductions to be made at the rate of $16,000,000 each fiscal year, in accordance with the item 'Federal-aid highway system' of the act approved December 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 1031).

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5530) to provide for placing the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Washington City post office in the Secretary of the Treasury was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC-BUILDING PROJECTS—ORE AND MINERAL RIGHTS

The bill (S. 5588) authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public-building projects, subject to the reservation of ore and mineral rights, was considered and was read.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the bill ought to be passed. Under the existing law the Federal Government can not hold property upon which there are any restrictions of any kind. The bill permits the Federal Government to make acceptance of properties, with a provision to reserve the ore or mineral rights to the people who have them. I do not think there can be any objection to the bill. It is recommended by the Post Office Department.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it would merely mean that the Government could not get the fee title. It would mean that the Government can get the surface rights, as explained in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is true.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title to sites and additional land for the construction thereon of public-building projects authorized by the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 and subsequent acts may be acquired subject to the reservation of title in and the right to mine ores and minerals on such sites and land.

COLONIAL REALTY CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5382) providing for an exchange of lands between the Colonial Realty Co. and the United States, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon execution and delivery by the Colonial Realty Co. of a deed conveying to the United States, title in fee, free of incumbrance, to approximately 1,420 acres of seeped and unproductive lands, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, in sections 20, 21, 22, 25, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, and 34, township 39 south, and section 3 of township 40 south, range 9 east, Willamette meridian, Oregon, Klamath project, or to such portion thereof as said company may elect so to convey, the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to the Colonial Realty Co., conveying to said company title to approximately an equivalent amount of public lands on the Tule Lake division of the Klamath project in Oregon-California to be selected and designated by said company from available lands in that division: Provided, That in order to avoid the expense of additional surveys, and since many of the tracts to be conveyed to the United States are designated as lots by public-land surveys and for this reason the subdivisions contain areas both less than and in excess of legal subdivision, the areas conveyed to the Government and the areas patented by the Government need be only approximately of the same acreage: Provided further, That should any legal subdivision of the lands herein described consist of more than 50 per cent of unproductive land the whole subdivision may, at the option of said company, be conveyed to the United States, with the right of exchange of an equivalent area as herein authorized.

SEC. 2. That all charges heretofore paid on account of construction and operation and maintenance on the unproductive lands to be conveyed to the United States shall be credited upon the unpaid construction and operation and maintenance charges payable on account of the productive lands, if any, of said Colonial Realty Co. situate within the boundaries of the Klamath irrigation district retained by said company. Should such credits be more than sufficient to pay all construction and operation and maintenance charges accrued and unpaid at the time of conveyance against the productive area retained by said company in the Klamath irrigation district, such excess credits shall be transferred to the irrigable lands in the Tule Lake division patented by the Secretary of the Interior to said company as herein authorized.

SEC. 3. The Klamath irrigation district, upon agreeing to the exchange of lands and transfer of credits herein authorized, shall be credited by the United States with all amounts heretofore paid by it on account of the construction and operation and maintenance charges assessed against unproductive lands in said district conveyed by the company to the United States under authority of this act, and the district shall be relieved of the payment to the United States of any further construction or operation and maintenance charges on account of the land so conveyed.

SEC. 4. The water-right charges payable by said company or its successor on the Tule Lake lands patented pursuant to this act shall be the same as those fixed for similar lands in that district and shall be subject to payment in the same manner, subject to the allowance of credits as herein authorized. Such credits shall be applied in reduction of the construction charge fixed for the Tule Lake division.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon make a brief explanation of the bill and state whether it relates to the Klamath Indian Reservation?

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President; it does not refer to that reservation. The Klamath irrigation district is located partly in Oregon and partly in northern California The company referred to in the bill acquired several sections of land; but on account of the seepage of the Government ditch, it became waterlogged and useless. Consequently, in order to be fair and equitable to the purchaser, the bill simply provides that the Government shall exchange good land in the irrigation district for the waterlogged land which is useless and valueless. The bill has received the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Reclamation who has jurisdiction over the district.

Mr. KING. As I understand, it does not involve any Indian reservation?

Mr. McNARY. Oh, no.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORRISTOWN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, N. J.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5469) to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I stated the other day that from investigations I had made I thought there were entirely too many national parks. There seems to be a mania for putting under the control of the Federal Government every spot of scenic beauty and that has some unique quality. I am rather reluctant to assent to the creation of any more parks at the present time.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. I will withhold my objection for a moment.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, this bill was introduced last year while the country was celebrating the bicentennial of the birth of Washington. It was thought to be exceedingly appropriate that there should be acquired in New Jersey the lands where Washington's troops were camped and also the house in which he lived for three years during the darkest days of the American Revolution. On the soil of New Jersey there were fought more battles during the Revolutionary War than in any other State of the Union. Morristown to-day is a strategic point in the United States if an invading army should ever attempt to invade the United States. It is well known that the site of the proposed Morristown National Historical Park is one of the most historic points in the United States, and I hope the Senator from Utah, coming as he does from a race that has served the United States well, not only in Utah but in other States, and being a patriotic citizen, will consent to passage of this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, after the plea which has been made by the Senator from New Jersey I am sure the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course it is very ungracious, after the very complimentary reference made by my friend, to interpose any objection. I find, however, on page 4 an amendment has been offered which provides—

That no appropriation of Federal funds for administration, protection, and maintenance of said park in excess of $7,500 annually shall be made for the fiscal years 1934, 1935, and 1936.

Whenever a national park is created, the next thing, of course, is to secure a large appropriation. I think the Senator from New Jersey had better eliminate that amendment, and then perhaps the bill may get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I appeal to my friend to eliminate that amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Very well, Mr. President; I will consent that the amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 10, after the name "Morristown," to strike out "to be accepted subject to existing water rights," so as to make the section read:

That when title to all the lands, structures, and other property in the military camp-ground areas and other areas of Revolutionary War interest at and in the vicinity of Morristown, N. J., as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national-park purposes shall have been vested in the United States, such areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people and shall be known as the Morristown National Historical Park: Provided, That the United States shall not purchase by appropriation of public moneys any lands within the aforesaid areas, but such lands shall be secured by the United States only by public or private donation: And provided further, That such areas shall include, at least, Jockey Hollow camp site, now owned by Lloyd W. Smith and the town of Morristown; Fort Nonsense, now owned by the town of Morristown; and the George Washington headquarters, known as the Ford House, with its museum and other personal effects and its grounds, now owned by the Washington Association of New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 4, line 11, to insert:

Provided, That no appropriation of Federal funds for administration, protection, and maintenance of said park in excess of $7,500 annually shall be made for the fiscal years 1934, 1935, and 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 237) authorizing the erection in the Department of State Building of a memorial to the American diplomatic and consular officers who while on active duty lost their lives under heroic or tragic circumstances was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to the American Foreign Service Association for the erection of a memorial to the American diplomatic and consular officers who while on active duty lost their lives under heroic or tragic circumstances. Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether this bill falls within the rule which he announced yesterday?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the exact facts in this case, but I do know that no relief bills of this nature are passed by the full committee without falling within the rule announced yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

NAVAL RESERVE AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5329) to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that measure.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the report sets forth the facts. The bill really was initiated by the Navy Department and they recommend favorable action. However, in compliance with the Senator's request, let me say that he will note in the report, beginning with the second paragraph, the following:

Under present law the Secretary of the Navy has authority to stop the retainer pay of men transferred to the reserve prior to July 1, 1925, who fail to report for inspection. As to men transferred to the reserve after July 1, 1925, the Comptroller General has ruled pay can not be stopped except by the sentence of court-martial; the purpose of this bill is to correct this situation, so that the Secretary of the Navy may have authority to stop the retainer pay of any and all members of the reserve who fail to report for inspection when called.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently acquainted with the measure to be sure, but it seems to change the existing law. I shall not object to its passage with the understanding that I shall call up Mr. McCarl, the Comptroller General, in whom I have great confidence, and if he feels that this is not a modification of the existing law, and does not restrict him in the authority which has been conferred upon him, I shall not move to reconsider; but if he shall report otherwise, I shall move to reconsider and ask the Senator to permit the bill to go back on the calendar. Is that understood?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is understood, and is quite agreeable to me.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9166) for the relief of William E. B. Grant was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I notice there is a similar Senate bill on the calendar. Not knowing which bill the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] desires to have passed, I think I shall ask that the bill go over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

JOHN HUNTZ ROLOFF

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9272) to correct the rating of John Huntz Roloff, Fleet Naval Reserve, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That no bounty, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" and insert "That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That John Huntz Roloff, chief machinist's mate, acting appointment, Fleet Naval Reserve, shall be deemed to hold the rating of chief machinist's mate, permanent appointment, Fleet Naval Reserve, from date of the approval of this act, because John Huntz Roloff was found qualified for the rating of chief machinist's mate, permanent appointment, on July 22, 1922, and recommendation for the promotion was forwarded to the Navy Department, where the papers concerning the advancement were filed and no action taken, and said Roloff was transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve from the active list on September 20, 1922, without having received the promotion for which he had been found qualified and had been recommended: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE BILLS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next three bills on the calendar are House bridge bills, and, without objection, will be considered en bloc.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise being slightly solicitous as to order of business No. 1268, being House bill 14129, and to make sure of its being passed, as it is the great desire of my constituency to have the privilege sought in the construction of the bridge connecting Lake Michigan and the Chicago River, and I may add the definition of the place that attends and attaches to the location is what is known as the Ogden Slip. I may add that this is not the only slip that exists in my community, but it is one in which they are very much interested in having at once bridged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is not objecting to the passage of the bill, is he? [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, no. I am urging its immediate and unanimous passage.

The following bills were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 13974. An act granting the consent of Congress to Bonner County, State of Idaho, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pend Oreille Lake at the city of Sandpoint in the State of Idaho;

H. R. 14129. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and a bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.; and

H. R. 14200. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y.

LOCAL COOPERATION IN WATERWAY IMPROVEMENTS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 235) amending provisions in river and harbor laws relating to local cooperation in the prosecution of waterway improvements was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that joint resolution?

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, under the act of 1930 providing for river and harbor improvements there were a number of cases where contributions of specific sums of money were required by local interests. Since that time the cost of doing construction work has been considerably reduced so that in some cases it is actually being accomplished for not much more than 50 per cent of the cost as estimated at the time the project was undertaken. Under those circumstances it does not seem fair that the local contributions should remain the same as required under the original estimate.

This joint resolution would authorize the Secretary of War to reduce local contributions in such cases so that the local contributions would bear the same proportion to the actual cost of the work as was originally intended; that is to say, that they would bear the same proportion to the actual cost of the work as the fixed contribution under the law bears to the estimated cost of the work.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the joint resolution the approval of the War Department?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think the War Department has not as yet reported on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment, on page 1, after line 5, to insert "subject to the approval of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That when the authorization of a project of river and harbor improvement requires that local interests shall contribute a specific sum of money toward its cost, the Secretary of War, subject to the approval of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, may reduce the sum to be contributed to an amount which shall be in the same ratio to the amount of the required contribution as the actual cost of the work to which said contribution is applicable bears to its original estimated cost as set forth in the project document: Provided, That the reduction hereby authorized shall not extend to contributions heretofore made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. This proposed amendment of the law, it seems to me, is ill advised. It seems to me that the authority ought to rest in the Secretary of War. He is the responsible authority, and to make his action dependent upon what the Board of Army Engineers should advise him seems to me undue infringement on the power of a Cabinet officer. So I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. He naturally would have to get the facts from the Board of Engineers.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. McKELLAR. And he would not approve unless he had their approval, anyway.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the point exactly. Therefore it is unnecessary.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I shall have to object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is objected to and will be passed over.

Mr. BULKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to return to Order of Business No. 1270, S. J. Res. 235. I am now advised by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that he will not insist upon his opposition to the committee amendment, and in that case I understand that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] will withdraw his objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REINTERMENT OF DEAD BODIES IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5052) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Annie Regina Brahler from St. Mary's Cemetery to Cedar Hill Cemetery, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 93 of title 5 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia is hereby amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, That the health officer of the District of Columbia may, in his discretion, authorize the opening, under sanitary precautions, of any such grave, and the disinterment and reinterment in the same grave or other suitable burial ground, of the dead body of any person who has died of any of the contagious diseases enumerated above."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think the Committee on the District of Columbia is to be commended for abolishing the practice of requiring the passage of individual bills granting permission to move dead bodies, where persons have died of a contagious disease, by recommending a general law on the subject. We have too many of those special bills.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to say to my friend from Massachusetts that the District Commissioners would have far greater power than they now possess to deal with these local questions which require special legislation if the people of the District could agree among themselves as to what powers they desire. We have introduced measures from time to time in the committee to enlarge the powers of the District Commissioners so as to enable them to deal with these matters instead of bringing every little question to Congress; but the people of the District have controversies among themselves as to the authority which they desire conferred upon their own commissioners.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think this bill illustrates the absurdity of coming to the Congress of the United States with a bill to get permission to move a dead body from one cemetery in the city to another.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to empower the health officer of the District of Columbia to authorize the opening of graves, and the disinterment and reinterment of dead bodies, in cases where death has been caused by certain contagious diseases."

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BINGHAM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will not the Senator permit us to complete the calendar? We are about to take up the last bill on the calendar.

Mr. BINGHAM. For the purpose of calling the attention of certain Senators who are not present to the bill, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5553) to relieve destitution in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of Senators are interested in this bill, one of whom desires to be heard upon it. In view of that fact, I suggest that it go over. We will have an opportunity to consider it a little later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. That completes the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO ACT

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, under Rule VIII, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 7716, to provide certain amendments to the radio law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with amendments.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think I might make a short statement to explain the nature of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to dispense with the formal reading of the bill and have the committee amendments considered first?

Mr. DILL. I should like to have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this bill consists of several pages; but most of the pages are taken up with a reprint of the present provisions of the radio law that are amended, in order that Senators may know what the law is like when it has been amended. For that reason there are not so many changes as might seem to be the case at first glance at the bill.

The bill is designed first to provide certain changes in the hearings by the commission. The commission never has had any specific statute under which to hold hearings, and this bill attempts to set up a procedure for hearings. Since there are so many hearings by the commission, it seems highly desirable that this subject should be covered by statute.

Then there are certain minor changes regarding the transfer of licenses to holding companies, and certain amendments regarding appeal procedure by the committee. It has been felt that the appeal provision of the present law is somewhat lacking in definiteness, and therefore that this procedure should be more specifically stated by statute.

Then there is an amendment known as the amendment prohibiting the advertising of lotteries by radio, as newspapers are now forbidden, and another amendment of considerable importance enlarging the equality provision of the use of radio for political purposes.

I think we can discuss the amendments as we come to them, if Senators desire to ask questions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether the bill enlarges materially the powers of the commission to deal with wave-lengths, and to extend greater privileges and restrict certain privileges?

Mr. DILL. No; I think it gives no added power to the commission, but only defines probably a little more clearly certain powers of the commission.

Mr. KING. It relates to administration rather than to what might be denominated substantive law?

Mr. DILL. With the exception of the matter of lotteries, it is largely a matter of amendments of a technical nature to the existing statute.

Mr. KING. It does not increase the number of employees?

Mr. DILL. No; it does not.

Mr. KING. Or increase the expenses?

Mr. DILL. We hope it will cut down some of the expenses.

I ask to have the amendments stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICKINSON in the chair). The clerk will read the bill for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 3, line 4, after the name "Guam," to strike out "Eastern" and insert "American," so as to read:

> The Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Alaska, Guam, American Samoa, and the Territory of Hawaii are expressly excluded from the zones herein established, but this act shall otherwise apply to them with equal force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, after the word "member," to insert "or members"; in the same line, after the word "commission," to strike out "or any examiner or other officer or employee thereof," so as to read:

The commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and the ends of justice. The commission may hold public hearings and order testimony to be taken by deposition, at any designated place, in connection with any proceeding or investigation authorized by this act, and may require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. Any member or members of the commission, when duly designated by the commission for such purpose, may hold hearings, sign and issue subpœnas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence at any place within the jurisdiction of the United States designated by the commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 21, after the word "commission," to insert a colon and the following provisos:

Provided, That the commission may authorize examiners to hold hearings and exercise all of the powers herein granted the commission in connection with holding hearings in cases not involving a change of policy by the commission, a transfer of the use of radio facilities from one zone to another, a change of regulations, new devices or developments in radio, or a new kind of use of frequencies: Provided further, That in all cases heard by an examiner the commission shall grant oral arguments on request of either party.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 8, after the word "thereof," to strike out "or before an examiner or other officer or employee thereof" and insert "or an examiner," so as to read:

In case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in case of the contumacy of any witness appearing at any hearing before the commission, a commission thereof, or an examiner, the commission may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States. Such a court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of the subpœna or to give evidence which is relevant to the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 25, after the words "before the," to strike out "commission or" and insert "commission"; on page 6, line 1, after the word "thereof," to strike out "or before an examiner or other officer or employee of the commission" and insert "or an examiner"; in line 4, after the word "commission," to strike out "or"; in line 5, after the word "thereof," to strike out "or of any examiner or other official or employee thereof" and insert "or of an examiner,"; and in line 9, after the word "interested," to insert "as shall all opinions or memorandum opinions filed by the commission in support of its decisions," so as to read:

A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceedings in which he has a pecuniary interest. The commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of the proceedings before it, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party to any proceeding may appear before the commission, any commissioner thereof, or an examiner holding any hearing and be heard in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission, of any commissioner thereof, or of an examiner, in any hearing, proceeding, or investigation, shall be entered of record, and such record shall be public upon the request of any party interested, as shall all opinions or memorandum opinions filed by the commission in support of its decisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 22, after the word "commission," to strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "thereof," to strike out "or any examiner, official, or employee thereof," and insert "or an examiner"; so as to read:

The commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending under this act at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the commission, any commissioner thereof, or an examiner, as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington, having the bill in charge, whether he regards this rather extraordinary conferring of authority upon examiners, to compel attendance of witnesses, and to require individuals to be present and testify is not too great authority to confer upon the examiners?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, perhaps I should say that the authority is conferred upon the commission, and if we are to allow examiners to hold hearings for the commission, we must give them this power.

Under the present procedure the commission has proceeded to do all these things, and is holding practically all of the hearings by means of examiners. I do not believe, and never have believed, that under the statute they had that right, because the law simply authorizes the commission to hold hearings, and then it provides they may appoint examiners. The commission has proceeded to follow a system such as that used in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Senator will note that we have limited the hearings which examiners may hold. All of the new questions and new policies which might be raised before the commission must be considered by the commission or a commissioner.

We have also provided that when an examiner does hold a hearing the commission must permit oral argument. For many months now they have had hearings conducted by examiners, and the cases have been submitted to the commission, and sometimes the parties were unable to get even a hearing before the commission. It is to put a stop to this procedure that this amendment was written in this way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator, with his experience, and knowing the conduct too often of bureaucrats, knows that to confer upon persons, many of whom may not have had large judicial experience, authority to hale witnesses before them and compel them to testify is going a long way.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I may say it is a policy we have followed in connection with the Interstate Commerce Commission; and if a hearing by an examiner is to be effective, of course the examiner must have the power conferred in this amendment. Personally I should have liked to provide that all hearings should be held by the commission itself, or some member of the commission, but I was overridden by the committee in that viewpoint, and I accepted this amendment as a substitute, requiring, as we do here, that all hearings affecting the development of radio or new problems of radio shall be heard before the commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I share the views of the Senator. I think all such questions ought to be heard before the commission, because it is a very important matter, and the importance of radio and its activities will become more apparent as the days go by. But if the Senator has given attention to this and is willing to accept it, I shall pretermit any further objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 11, before the word "any," to strike out "or," in the same line, after the word "commissioner" to strike out "examiner, or other officer or employee thereof," and insert "or examiner," so as to read:

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or answering any lawful inquiry or from deposing or from producing documentary evidence before the commission, any commissioner, or examiner or in obedience to the subpœna of the commission, whether such subpœna is signed or issued by one or more commissioners, or by any other person duly authorized, or in any cause or proceeding, criminal or otherwise, based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act or upon the taking of any deposition herein provided for, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled under oath so to testify, answer, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 5, after the name "Guam," to strike out "Eastern" and insert "American," so as to read:

The provisions of this section shall not apply to the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Alaska, Guam, American Samoa, and the Territory of Hawaii.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Washington whether these amendments are proposed as the result of a hearing that was held.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, some of the amendments are; some of them were prepared as a result of previous hearings.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Was the bill recommended by the committee unanimously?

Mr. DILL. Yes; the report was unanimous. What particular phase of the question did the Senator have in mind?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I attended the hearing, and I found many objections to the bill as it was being considered in the committee.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that the representative of the broadcasters, Mr. Fellows, came before the committee, and has since written me a letter stating that while we did not put in all of the changes they had hoped for that we had remedied most of the things of which complaint was made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator feels that most of the objections I heard raised in the hearing will be eliminated by these amendments?

Mr. DILL. I think so.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 20, after the word "which," to strike out "any officer or director is an alien" and insert "more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens"; so as to read:

SEC. 12. The station license required hereby shall not be granted to, or after the granting thereof such license shall not be transferred in any manner, either voluntarily or involuntarily (or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license), to (a) any alien or the representative of any alien; (b) to any foreign government or the representative thereof; (c) to any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of any foreign government; (d) to any company, corporation, or association of which more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens or their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of a foreign country: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall prevent the licensing of radio apparatus on board any vessel, aircraft, or other mobile station of the United States when the installation and use of such apparatus is required by act of Congress or any treaty to which the United States is a party.

The station license required hereby, the frequencies or wave length or length authorized to be used by the licensee, and the rights therein granted shall not be transferred, assigned, or in any manner either voluntarily or involuntarily disposed of, or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license, to any person, firm, company, association, or corporation, unless the commission shall, after a hearing, decide that said transfer is in the public interest, and shall give its consent in writing.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, that language was inserted by mistake, and was not intended by the committee. I should like to offer a substitute on page 10, line 20, for the amendment as it is printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington as a substitute.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the amendment as printed, the Senator from Washington moves to amend line 20 so that it will read, "of which any officer is an alien or more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, are we considering only committee amendments at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the order.

Mr. WHITE. I give notice that at the appropriate time I will move to strike out this whole section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 22, after the word "revoked," to strike out the comma and "modified, or suspended" and insert "or the station owner fined not to exceed $1,000," so as to read:

SEC. 9. Section 14 of the radio act of 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, sec. 94) is amended by striking out the words "Any station license shall be revocable by the commission," in the first line of said section, and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Any station license may be revoked or the station owner fined not to exceed $1,000 by the commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington knows that there have been many complaints, whether reasonable or unreasonable I do not intend to suggest, in regard to alleged discrimination in the granting of licenses, and complaints have been made because of alleged arbitrary cancellation or revocation of licenses. Complaints have been made that some stations have received too great privileges and others denied reasonable rights. I inquire of the Senator whether those complaints have been fully considered, and the bill as it is now presented deals with this question in as fair and just a way as the wisdom of the committee permitted them to suggest.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator I may say that the committee did not attempt to recommend legislation which would restrict the commission in some of its powers, which would be necessary if we were to remedy the complaints which have been made. The fact of the matter is that most of the complaints which the Senator mentions are complaints which go to the discretion of the commission itself, and it is my opinion that the better way to meet those objections would be rather to change the personnel of the commission, than to hamper a commission by a series of provisions that would hinder a commission from giving more satisfactory and more just decisions. This particular amendment, however, refers to the matters of revocation and fine, and this amendment, together with the one which follows, is designed to provide a little more definite procedure as to hearings before a revocation can be effected. The committee thought that was desirable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 2, after the word "revoke" to strike out the comma and "modified, or suspended" and insert "and no station owner fined," and in line 6, after the word "given" to strike out "reasonable opportunity" and insert "15 days," so as to make the proviso read:

Said section is further amended by striking out all of the proviso in said section and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: Provided, however, That no license shall be revoked and no station owner fined until the licensee shall have been notified in writing of the proceedings for such revocation, modification, or suspension, the cause for the proposed action, and shall have been given 15 days to show cause why an order of revocation, modification, or suspension should not be issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 19, after the word "exclusive" to insert "except as to revocations and fines," so as to read:

(g) The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia under this section to review any decision or order of the commission shall be exclusive except as to revocations and fines, and the judgment of said court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari as provided in section 240 of Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 347), and that nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the application of section 239 of the Judicial Code, as amended (relating to certification of questions of law) (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 346), to cases in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia arising under this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 4, to insert:

(h) Any licensee may, at his option, in lieu of appealing to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, appeal from any order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner to the district court of the United States for the district in which the transmitting apparatus of the station license is operated. The provisions of subsections (b), (c), (e), and (f) shall apply to such appeals. Upon any such appeal the commission shall appear as respondent. The matter may be brought on to be heard by the court in the same manner as a motion, by either the attorney for the commission or the attorney for the licensee, at any time after the commission has filed with the court the record provided for by subsection (c). The findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. The court shall hear and determine the appeal upon the record before it and shall have power to affirm or, if the order of the commission is not in accordance with law, to modify or reverse the order of the commission for error of law. After review of any order from which an appeal is taken under this subsection it shall be the duty of the commission to set aside or modify its order in so far as may be necessary to accord with any judgment of the district court that has become final.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 17, after the name "Guam," to strike out "Eastern" and insert "American," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. Section 30 of the radio act of 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, sec. 110) is amended by inserting in the first proviso thereof after the word "Alaska," the words "Guam, American Samoa."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 21, to strike out:

SEC. 13. No person shall broadcast by means of any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, any information concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any information concerning any ticket, certificate, or instrument representing any chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of prizes or information concerning any list of prizes awarded by means of any such scheme, and any person so doing, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 13. No person shall broadcast by means of any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, and no person, firm, or corporation operating any such station shall knowingly permit the broadcasting of, any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 19, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 14 (a) If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such station; and if any licensee shall permit any person to use a broadcasting station in support of or in opposition to any candidate for public office, or in the presentation of views on a public question to be voted upon at an election, or by a governmental agency, he shall afford equal opportunity to an equal number of other persons to use such station in support of an opposing candidate for such public office, or to reply to a person who has used such broadcasting station in support of or in opposition to a candidate, or for the presentation of opposite views on such public question.

(b) The commission shall make rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect. No such licensee shall exercise censorship over any material broadcast in accordance with the provisions of this section. No obligation is imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of his station by any candidate, or in support of or in opposition to any candidate, or for the presentation of views on any side of a public question.

(c) The rates charged for the use of any station for any of the purposes set forth in this section shall not exceed the regular rates charged for the use of said station to advertisers furnishing regular programs, and shall not be discriminatory as between persons using the station for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I did not know that the clerk had read past subsection (i) of page 17. That language was not corrected as it should have been owing to the other changes in the earlier part of the bill, and I want to offer a substitute for Section I, lines 3 to 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the amendment of the committee, on page 17, line 3, the Senator from Washington offers the following:

(i) The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and of district courts of the United States, under this section, to review any order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner, and the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia under this section to review any other order of the commission specified in subsection (a), shall be exclusive. An appeal filed by any licensee with any such court for the review of an order of the commission revoking or suspending a station license shall bar appeal by such licensee to any other court for the review of such order.

And in lieu thereof insert:

(i) The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and of district courts of the United States to review any order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner shall be exclusive. An appeal filed by any licensee with either of said courts for the review of an order of the commission revoking a station license or fining a station owner shall bar appeal by such licensee to any other court for the review of such order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have had no opportunity to examine the amendment which the Senator just tendered.

Mr. DILL. The language as it is written in the statute is not quite correct in light of the changes made about fining a station, and for that reason I had to correct it to make it fit into the amendment made previously. It was my mistake in reporting the bill.

Mr. KING. As I remember the amendment, it denies the right of appeal from certain courts.

Mr. DILL. No; it makes it exclusive with either the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia or the district court in the district in which the station is located.

Mr. KING. But it does not attempt to deny the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States if some Federal question is involved?

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; but if they appeal to the district court they can not then appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to offer an amendment on page 18, line 23, of the committee amendment, to strike out the semicolon and to insert a period and to strike out all after the semicolon down to and including the word "violation," in line 25. The amendment is offered solely for this purpose.

This section relates to the power of the commission over broadcasting companies and radio stations that have been guilty of violating the lottery or gift enterprise provision. A fine is imposed. The language which I seek to strike out is this:

But no radio-station license shall be suspended or revoked on account of any such violation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside so as to permit the final disposition of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not think Senators in charge of the bill will have serious objection to the proposed amendment because it is not likely that the commission would revoke a license for a single violation. As the Postmaster General is not authorized to revoke the mailing privilege of a publication for a single violation, certainly he does not do so; but for repeated or continued violations, the license of a broadcasting station might well and properly be revoked. With this language in the provision the power to revoke even for flagrant violations would be denied. I, therefore, move to strike the language I have indicated, beginning in line 23 and running through to the end of that sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, lines 23, 24, and 25, the Senator from Georgia proposes to strike out the following:

But no radio-station license shall be suspended or revoked on account of any such violation.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia is a sound amendment. It does seem to me that authority should be given in case of repeated and flagrant violations to revoke a license. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this particular language was put in by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but I think it not particularly important because the commission would have the authority to revoke a license if the words referred to were taken out. The reason for putting in that provision was that a newspaper which violates the law is not precluded from using the mails for future issues. I think there is no necessity for it. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and without objection the amendment as amended is agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 19, to insert the following:

SEC. 14. (a) If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such station; and if any licensee shall permit any person to use a broadcasting station in support of or in opposition to any candidate for public office, or in the presentation of views on a public question to be voted upon at an election, or by a governmental agency, he shall afford equal opportunity to an equal number of other persons to use such station in support of an opposing candidate for such public office, or to reply to a person who has used such broadcasting station in support of or in opposition to a candidate, or for the presentation of opposite views on such public question.

(b) The commission shall make rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect. No such licensee shall exercise censorship over any material broadcast in accordance with the provisions of this section. No obligation is imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of his station by any candidate, or in support of or in opposition to any candidate, or for the presentation of views on any side of a public question.

(c) The rates charged for the use of any station for any of the purposes set forth in this section shall not exceed the regular rates charged for the use of said station to advertisers furnishing regular programs, and shall not be discriminatory as between persons using the station for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] is familiar with an amendment which was known as section 15 which was in one of the original prints of the bill, undertaking to straighten out some of our international difficulties across the border in respect to broadcasting. I have discussed the matter with him and I ask whether he would resist taking to conference the language which appeared in the original print if I offer it as an amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. There may be other Senators who would have. It is an amendment in the bill which was reported previously, and then when it was taken back to the committee some of the members of the committee thought it was unnecessary in view of the fact that we would probably hold a North American conference and that these differences and troubles between our own country and other countries on this continent could be settled by international agreement, and therefore this legislation would not be needed. However, so far as I am concerned I have no objection to taking the amendment to conference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add at the proper place a new section as follows:

SEC. 15. No person, firm, company, or corporation shall be permitted to locate or maintain a radio broadcast studio or other place or apparatus from which or whereby sound waves or mechanical reproductions thereof are converted into electrical energy and transmitted, or delivered, to a radio station in a foreign country for the purpose of being broadcast from a radio station there, and thereby transmitted back into the United States without first obtaining permission from the Federal Radio Commission upon proper application therefor.

Such application shall contain such information as the commission may by regulation prescribe, and the granting or refusal thereof shall be subject to the requirements of section 11 of the radio act of 1927 with respect to applications for renewal or modification of station license, and the license or permission so granted shall be revocable when the commission, after hearings, shall find its continuation no longer in the public interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington, who has been so energetic in matters of radio legislation, and also the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], if the feature of the bill which assumed to forbid lotteries and the provisions which accompany it in the forms of penalty have been changed from the condition in which they were when I had a conference with the Senator from Washington on the matter?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] offered an amendment striking the two lines to which the Senator has reference.

Mr. LEWIS. Those to which I objected in bringing the matter to the attention of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. That has been disposed of?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. That was satisfactory to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who is temporarily absent, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, after line 14, insert the following:

Section 9 of the radio act of 1927, as amended by the act of March 28, 1928 (Public Law No. 195, 70th Cong.), is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 9 the following: "Provided further, That the commission may grant applications for licenses for stations not exceeding 250 watts of power if the commission finds that such stations will serve the public convenience, interest, or necessity and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the quota provisions of this section, and said stations may be authorized without regard to the quota restrictions herein provided."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, that amendment goes to a modification of what is known as the Davis amendment requiring equality of broadcasting facilities between the different zones and a division between the States. I am willing to take it to conference; but I do not want to agree to bring it back from the conference in the bill, because I do not know that it will be possible to do so. Mr. Davis, who was the author of the original amendment, will undoubtedly be chairman of the House conferees, and I am sure that if anybody will protect his own amendment it will be Mr. Davis. I, myself, have no objection to the amendment being accepted and taken to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 8 of the bill, appearing on page 10, relating to section 12 of the radio act of 1927.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, strike out lines 7 to 25, inclusive, and on page 11, lines 1 to 16 inclusive, as amended, as follows:

SEC. 8. Section 12 of the radio act of 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, sec. 92) is amended by striking out the whole of said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 12. The station license required hereby shall not be granted to, or after the granting thereof such license shall not be transferred in any manner, either voluntarily or involuntarily (or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license), to (a) any alien or the representative of any alien; (b) to any foreign government or the representative thereof; (c) to any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of any foreign government; (d) to any company, corporation, or association of which more than one-fifth of the directors are aliens or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock may be voted by aliens or their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any company, corporation, or association organized under the laws of a foreign country: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall prevent the licensing of radio apparatus on board any vessel, aircraft, or other mobile station of the United States when the installation and use of such apparatus is required by act of Congress or any treaty to which the United States is a party.

"The station license required hereby, the frequencies or wave length or length authorized to be used by the licensee, and the rights therein granted shall not be transferred, assigned, or in any manner either voluntarily or involuntarily disposed of, or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license, to any person, firm, company, association, or corporation, unless the commission shall, after a hearing, decide that said transfer is in the public interest, and shall give its consent in writing."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain briefly his purpose?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is only one of a number of amendments which I should like to offer if time permitted. I do not want to set my judgment up against that of the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] or of that of the committee which unanimously reported this bill, and to prevent action by amendments and debate.

This particular section, in the form in which it changes present law, is aimed at a particular situation and a particular American corporation. It is directed against the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. of the United States. When the original law was drafted, serious thought was given to preventing the issuing of licenses to aliens. The law specifically provided that no license should be issued to, or after the issuing of a license, no license should be transferred to any alien or to any representative of an alien, to any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country, or to any corporation that might be the representative of a foreign government, and so forth.

A great many people objected to these provisions, thinking that they violated the provisions of treaties which gave equality of right and equality of opportunity to the nationals of the contracting parties. Others doubted the wisdom of them, because they said they might seriously impair and interfere with the efforts of American companies to extend their facilities throughout the world and build up a world-wide communication system on behalf of the United States.

We went as far as I have indicated in preventing the issuance of licenses to aliens. We did not, however, deal with the question of the subsidiaries of a corporate parent company having some alien director or officer or some alien ownership.

Subsidiaries of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. are licensees from the Federal Radio Commission. There is such a company on the Pacific coast which operates in international communication there and also maintains ship-to-shore service and, I think, does some point-to-point communication on the Pacific coast. There is another such company of Delaware which carries on like services on this coast. They are licensees from the Federal Radio Commission, and they are 100 per cent American companies, both in stock ownership and in officer and director personnel. But above them there are holding companies, and eventually the control of those two licensees is in the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. That company has very important foreign interests. It operates communication services in various South American countries and in nations in other parts of the world. This proposed legislation is intended to force either the relinquishment of the licenses by the subsidiaries of this company or the ousting of all foreign officers and directors of the parent company. It would present to that company a most acute and embarrassing situation. That is the purpose that is aimed at, and it raises a substantial question of policy. My objection to the amendment——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE. May I finish? Then I will yield. My objection to this proposed amendment to the law in the first place is that the language put in the bill, "or indirectly by transfer of control of any company, corporation, or association holding such license," which is not in the original law, does not, in fact, reach the situation at which the committee is aiming. It would apply, in my opinion, only to such a transfer of control corporate licensee hereafter and would not affect a situation where this parent control came about prior to the enactment of this legislation. That is one objection. I do not think it accomplishes, in a legal sense at all, what the committee seeks to do.

The next difficulty is in the incorporation of the language providing that one-fifth of the officers or directors—I am not sure precisely what the form of the amendment now is—opens up and enlarges existing law, because that would permit a licensee of the Federal Radio Commission to have such alien officers and alien directorate. That is not permitted under the present law. That is distinctly a backward step from the standard of what I will call Americanism, written in the 1927 law. It is because of those two infirmities that I think the whole section should be stricken out and that the entire matter should go to conference, because I have every confidence that from conference will come a provision giving the solution that we all want. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, with the whole section stricken out, of course, it would mean that no Senate amendment would be incorporated in the House language; and inasmuch as the House language eliminates both officers and directors who are aliens, what field would the conferees have for adjusting any difference between the House and the Senate?

Mr. WHITE. The broad question of policy and the outstanding object at which we are aiming, I think, would be within the purview of the conferees, because there would be no Senate legislation upon the subject; and between those two extremities of the House provision and the absence of Senate action I think there would be ample opportunity to work out a compromise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator inform me, inasmuch as he has brought in the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. as the holding company of a number of subsidiaries which have licenses, how many subsidiaries there would be operating under the old parent company?

Mr. WHITE. I would not want to speak with authority as to that, but I have spoken of two, and they are the principal ones. There may be one or two more, I am not certain; I would not presume to answer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator tell the Senate how many alien directors there are on the board of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co.?

Mr. WHITE. Out of the 23, my recollection is that there were 4, and one of them has since died, so I think that 3 out of the 22 or 23 directors are aliens. I think that is right, but I have not checked this for some time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to take time from the Military Affairs Committee. I did not know the pending bill was coming up.

Mr. REED. I am going to have to call for the regular order very soon, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. I opposed the amendment of the Senate committee to the language of the House bill and reserved the right to oppose the amendment when the bill should be considered upon the floor, and I had intended to discuss it at some length. While I was called away in another committee which was attempting to frame a bill for consideration at an early date this measure was brought forward. I was absent at the time the Senate committee amendment was agreed to. I do not want to delay the military appropriation bill and I do not want to consume the time of the Senate unnecessarily on any score, but unless the conferees would have the widest authority in ironing out any difference between the House and the Senate on this proposition I would not feel disposed to vote upon the motion to strike the entire language out of the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DILL. If the amendment of the Senator from Maine shall be adopted, the conference committee will have the most complete latitude. They can rewrite this entire section and I will say to the Senator that I feel certain the conferees will write a section that will be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am basing my position largely on the attitude of the Secretary of the Navy, as disclosed in the letter which he wrote to the committee, which impressed me apparently more than it did the committee as a whole. I do not want to be in the attitude of trying to delay anybody or anything here but I want this section written so that it will be satisfactory to the Navy Department. I am not concerned about any other interest.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. I should be one of the conferees and I can assure the Senator that we will take full cognizance of the letter written by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, of course, had the Secretary's letter before him as a member of the committee; it did not seem to make much impression on him in the committee, and I wonder whether it would make any more impression on him as a conferee.

Mr. COUZENS. I confess to the fact that I do not now recall just what was in the letter from the Secretary of the Navy. The Senator knows.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Secretary of the Navy protested in the letter against the amendment that was inserted in the House language by the Senate committee, the House language eliminating all alien officers and directors, and the Senate committee amending it so as to limit the number of such alien officers and directors to one-fifth of the total. The Navy Department objected to any aliens being directors or officers of these companies and gave what seemed to me to be very cogent reasons for their position. I am wondering whether the Senator's mind is sufficiently open on the subject really to consider the Navy Department's attitude in view of the action of the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] and myself, who have been watching this bill back and forth in the committee and in the Senate, are sufficiently open minded to give the matter due consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, Mr. President, I am not going to take further time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have one more amendment I should like to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

The amendment to subparagraph (c) of section 5 of the radio act of February 23, 1927, approved May 19, 1932, is hereby repealed.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this amendment is designed to permit the Radio Commission to grant licenses to aviators who have radio sets on their planes. The bill that is being repealed was passed here without our realizing, I think, that it would prevent aviators from foreign countries who were in this country from having licenses to operate their radios. I should like to have this amendment providing for the repeal go to conference, and then we can hear from the Secretary of Commerce and obtain his opinion about it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the amendment, although I doubt its necessity or wisdom. I take this opportunity to say that there are many amendments that I should like to offer to this proposed legislation, and there are amendments which have been adopted of which I disapprove, but, as I previously said, I was not willing to defeat the bill by delays, so I am withholding amendments and withholding further comment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and Mr. ODDIE, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. KEYES, Mr. MOSES, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. BRATTON, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it may be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that when the consideration of the bill shall have been completed the clerk may be authorized to adjust the totals in accordance with the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Contingent Expenses, War Department," on page 5, at the end of line 7, to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$148,000," so as to read:

For stationery; purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, including their exchange; books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, maps; typewriting and adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; furniture and repairs to same; carpets, matting, linoleum, filing equipment, photo supplies, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor trucks and motor cycles; freight and express charges; street-car fares, not exceeding $750; postage to Postal Union countries; and other absolutely necessary expenses, including not to exceed $750 for traveling expenses, $148,000.

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I shall speak on the amendment in order to be in order from a parliamentary standpoint, but I will discuss a different subject.

Mr. President, not far distant from the Capitol there stands a building which architecturally is one of the finest to be found anywhere in the world. It is occupied by the Library, and contains in many ways the most remarkable collection of books and other volumes housed anywhere under one roof. It is really the Library of Congress but is generally regarded as a national library in view of the fact that it serves more than the Members of Congress. However, it is specifically designated as the "Library of Congress," and I presume it will always so remain.

About 15 years ago, while a Member of the House of Representatives and serving on the Committee on the Library of that body, I took occasion to set out in detail the workings of that great institution. What was said on the floor of the House at that time provoked a great deal of interest which was displayed by the correspondence which ensued. Since that day the Library of Congress has experienced great growth and development; it really has increased by leaps and bounds. When I spoke about it 15 years ago it was the third largest library in the world, from the standpoint of the number of volumes it contained, whereas to-day, when measured by its collection of books and other material, it stands first of all the libraries of the earth.

I am constrained to believe that the workings of the Library are not generally appreciated. I know they are not by the public, and I think they are not fully appreciated even by those who are intimate with the Library—Members of Congress. In fact, what we see when we go over to the building which appears to be the Library is a small part of the Library proper. The most important feature of the Library is not open to the public. It is a veritable hive of industry in expert research; and I desire now to take a little time, really out of order, to point out what the Library has come to be in recent years.

I do not feel that I need apologize for speaking out of order, because yesterday we passed one appropriation bill; the day before we passed one; and doubtless we will pass another to-day, or come very near passing it. So we are really making progress; and I do not believe it will be a waste of time for me to set out what this famous institution has become, especially to the Members of Congress, and, in a certain way, to the people of the United States.

As chairman of the Committee on the Library of Congress, I am occasionally moved to some remarks upon it. I ask your indulgence for some now, for I have recently encountered several characterizations of it so extraordinary in their appreciation that they have caused me to consider whether all of us here quite realize its nature and service as viewed from without.

One such characterization is from a librarian, the head of one of our most efficient State libraries, who, in acknowledging a copy of the Librarian's Report, remarks that the Library of Congress "is one of the wonders of the modern world." Another is from an educator, Mr. Albert Jay Nock, who, in the preface of his Life of Jefferson, asserts that—

If 10 per cent of the patriotic pride now frittered away on silly and vicious objects were engaged upon our finest national possession, the Library of Congress, we should have a new civilization. What an incomparable instrument it is!

The third is from a historian, Mr. James Truslow Adams, who, in the epilogue to his Epic of America, after reiterating his belief in an "American dream, which is being wrought out in many hearts and many institutions," adds:

Among the latter I often think that the one which best exemplifies the dream is the greatest library in this land of libraries, the Library of Congress. * * * [It] has come straight from the heart of democracy, as it has been taken to it, and I here use it as a symbol of what democracy can accomplish on its own behalf * * * a perfect working-out, in a concrete example, of the American dream.

Now, a librarian's special interest in the Library of Congress is in its service relations with the other libraries of this country. I mention the Librarian's interest because he is the officer of the Library, and his interest would be, in a way, more intense than the interest of a Congressman. The serious investigators, represented by Mr. Nock as an educator, and by Mr. Adams as a historian, are concerned with the Library not as a mere "dream" but as a very substantial reality. Their appreciation of it indicates, therefore, that they find in it material for their research, adequate apparatus as a guide to the use of the material, specialized accommodation, a welcoming hospitality, and an efficient and genial service.

They evidently do; and there is now also a tendency to center at the Library of Congress group projects involving serious research in books and manuscripts. There is even a disposition to commit to the Library the administration of funds for such projects; and a remarkable phenomenon of the past seven years has been the gift from the public of sums of money for them and for others less technical, which can not well be provided for out of the Public Treasury.

May I interpolate that it is not supposed that Congress could vote appropriations for all the things that we ought to have in the Library? But many public-spirited men and women who have money and would like to make good use of it, if the way were opened, would make the contribution to the Library itself for the benefit of the public.

We opened that opportunity through the creation of what we call now the Library Trust Fund Board. The gifts began with the remarkable one from Mrs. Frederic Coolidge of $100,000 for the auditorium now erected in the Library Building, and of over $500,000 as an endowment for the promotion of the understanding and appreciation of music and of musicology; but others have followed for various purposes. Our Library of Congress Trust Fund Board now holds nearly three-quarters of a million dollars, with an assurance of an equal sum in addition, the income of which is applicable to them; and from time to time, in this recent era, other sums have been placed at the disposal of the Librarian for immediate application.

Mr. President, the resolution creating the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board was introduced and carried in this Chamber after I became a Member of this body. To-day it has in possession or assurance gifts of nearly $2,000,000 that have come from generous people who want to assist the Library in its public functions.

No such contribution serves to relieve any appropriation by the Government. On the contrary, it assumes that the Government will still do its full share; and the gift is made on the assumption that it will remit nothing of its interest and duty to provide for the suitable development of the collections, physical accommodation of them, adequate apparatus, and an efficient organization. What induces the gifts is such a belief and the desire to take advantage of the resulting establishment in order to extend its service in directions or particulars to which Government appropriations can not reach. Every such project is creditable in itself, in the interest of learning or culture, appropriate to the Library, and honorable to the Government.

A fine example is the famous Shakespeare temple across the way, which is not the possession of the Federal Government but has been created through the generous employment of a great fund of money to establish the greatest Shakespeare collection found anywhere in the world to-day.

It does not belong to us; it does not belong to the Library, but it is placed near by, and in close cooperation with the Library.

But the phenomenon itself! Gifts from the public—of money—to a governmental agency! Except for the Smithsonian, there is no parallel to it; and the gifts have not been casual or impulsive, for they are not merely from individuals, but also from some of the foundations, whose decisions are reached only after careful investigation.

That phenomenon, and the expressions which I have quoted, have caused me to reflect on whether we have a full appreciation of what the Library is, and also to inquire into certain particulars. Some of those disclosed, and the import of them, were not fully familiar to me, and they may not be to you.

We ourselves—97 per cent of the House, 100 per cent of the Senate—use the Library, and our families and staffs use it, in varying degrees, of course; some of us only for recreative literature, but others for most serious study and investigation; so that during a session the calls upon it from Congress average one every five minutes. A considerable number of us—during the present session over half of the Members of the House and 90 of the 96 Members of the Senate—have used actively its legislative-reference service, which in abstracts, digests, and other compilations furnishes data to be considered in legislation. Personally, I do not know what I would do if it were not for the generous service of the Library when I want information on a subject of legislation that we are considering.

Some of the most important committees—for instance, on Ways and Means and Foreign Relations—require of the Library studies so elaborate that the resulting compilation is printed. There are, of course, some Members and some committees who, not having occasion for such a service, have slight appreciation of it. Those who use it most, however, appreciate it best, and they would emphasize the economy in the small expenditure—only $70,000 a year—for such a continuing agency, as against the outlay for a succession of agencies created for each particular occasion, and unfamiliar with the collections in the Library and the apparatus.

In addition to our own use, we assume, of course, that there is a considerable use by the various executive departments and scientific bureaus of the Government, whose workers draw upon the Library of Congress as a main reservoir.

I do not know whether my experience is the same as that of the average Senator or not; but when I have some friend whom I want to show Washington, the very first place to which I take him is the Library of Congress; and I prefer to take him in the evening, because I know of nothing more beautiful in all the world than that Library lighted up at 8 o'clock. The significance, however, of the Library in its more general relations comes to our attention only as some visitor to the building may express admiration for it as a monument of architecture, or some constituent may compliment us on the enlightened policy which has induced Congress to develop and maintain such an establishment, or some serious investigator may acknowledge to us the benefit it has been to him, or some commission from abroad may extol its organization and methods. We may recall that, although it has never asked from Congress a dollar for editing, it has produced publications, not merely scholarly expositions of its collections, but also—in the case of the Journals of the Continental Congress, the Records of the Virginia Company, and the Guides to the Law of certain foreign countries—notable contributions to knowledge.

We are conscious, of course, that there are huge collections developing over there, and have just been notified—in the Librarian's Annual Report—that in gross they now exceed those of any other library anywhere in the world; 4,500,000 printed books, a million maps, a million musical compositions, a half million prints, an inestimable number of manuscripts.

I do not want to be misunderstood. While we have a larger library than any other country in the world, it is not the most important, it is not the most valuable, because such institutions as the British Museum and the Bibliothèque Nationale have manuscripts and books so rare that money could not buy them, and in that degree, of course, we fall far below those libraries. But in range of subject matter we are first in all the world.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHUYLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wanted to ask the Senator under what authority the Library secures recent books, books which have been out but a short time. Is there any method by which anyone in the Library or any committee goes over the publications and selects recent books?

Mr. FESS. A copy of all American publications is deposited in the Library, of course, in accordance with the copyright law.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that.

Mr. FESS. And we appropriate $100,000 a year for the general purchase of books. There are also exchanges, of course.

Mr. BORAH. What I have in mind is this: Is there any committee or any person authorized to look over lists of publications, of foreign books, for instance, and select such books as ought to be purchased?

Mr. FESS. Yes; there is a committee in the Library for that very purpose, and they are very remarkably alert. If the Senator wanted a certain book, by communication over the telephone with certain persons—Mr. Morrison is one and Mr. Milne is another—he would not only be able to find whether our Library has the book or not, but he would be able to find what other library in the country had it, if it had been catalogued.

Mr. President, we may even be aware of some particulars of the collection, and we were quite roused to a conviction of what its quality should be when we decided to buy for it the 3,000 fifteenth-century books constituting the Vollbehr collection.

Senators will appreciate that I am making a confession when I say that when these incunabula, the rarest collection we have ever acquired, about 3,000 volumes of fifteenth-century books, were offered our Library I was opposed to their purchase. I said that the Government could not afford to go into the practice of buying anything of a rare nature, that we would have to depend upon some generous capitalist purchasing the rare treasure and presenting it to the Government. I opposed it as the chairman of the Committee on the Library in the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library in the House opposed it. The Librarian of Congress thought we probably were going too far. Yet when that collection was presented here before the Senate and the House the only note against it was on the part of the persons I have mentioned. Both the Senate and the House overwhelmed us and demanded that we buy it, although it cost over a million dollars.

That indicates the public interest in our Library buying these rare things. For example, there was a Gutenberg Bible in the collection, and I have been told that that Bible alone may be worth $1,000,000.

We may know that the manuscript collection, though not including any great group of medieval manuscripts, which are a distinction of the British Museum and the Bibliothèque Nationale, does include—what is most appropriate—the greatest amount of source material for American history under any one roof, and that one of the groups within it is an almost complete series of the papers of the Presidents, beginning with Washington and down through Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, and Coolidge, and of numerous other statesmen; that, thanks to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., there are available there several million facsimiles of documents from foreign archives essential to the study of our history; and that, thanks to Mr. Harkness, it possesses extraordinary groups of manuscripts relating to the Spanish occupation of Mexico and Peru. And we may readily believe that no student of any period of our history can afford to ignore it.

We may know similar particulars as to some other of the special collections; for instance, that the collection of maps, originals and facsimiles, is now so embracing that it is the incessant recourse of geographers, historians, and litigants; and that frequently included among the litigants are the United States itself, various of our States, and some foreign countries; that the collection of prints, though in examples of the finer processes inferior to many elsewhere, is so extensive and so varied that it constitutes an invaluable resource for history, for illustration, and for the study of the arts, and is so convincing in these respects that it induced one of our foremost artists and critics—Mr. Joseph Pennell, of Philadelphia—not merely to present to it his own very important collections, but to bequeath to its service his entire and very substantial estate.

We may be aware that the collection of music—one of the three largest in the world—is known to every musicologist both here and abroad, is drawn upon by our serious investigators in music, by conductors of orchestras, by critics, by composers, and by musicians, and is to such an extent an interest of the profession that one group representing it—the Beethoven Association, of New York—regularly contributes to its enrichment.

We can readily believe that among the possessions unsurpassed by any other institution is the collection of official documents of the various States and foreign countries, of transactions and proceedings of learned societies, and of miscellaneous serials; though, unless we had been informed of the fortunate circumstances that explain them, we might be surprised to learn that the collection of Slavic literature in the Library is the most important outside of Russia, and that the 150,000 volumes of Chinese books constitute the most important such assemblage outside of China.

We must, however, realize that a few such preeminences do not assure a whole that is either organic or a perfect and final resource for any scholar; and that it will be only by assiduous application of considerable sums that the collections can be balanced and made organic. At present they are inferior not merely to some of the great libraries abroad in respect to the rarities of literature, but also to some of the libraries in the United States in particular fields of concern to the serious investigator. Except for the purchase of the Vollbehr collection, which was a special matter, the actual expenditure of the Government for the increase of the Library has been pitifully small. This year it is but $125,000—less than is annually expended by some of our university libraries. Last year it was $180,000, but was unfortunately reduced by the economy measures. Of the 185,000 items added last year, only one-fourth were due to purchase, the other three-fourths coming from gift, exchange, and copyright deposits—or rather a selection of the last named, for not everything copyrighted is brought up into the Library proper.

The fact that the bulk of the material now in the possession of the Library has come to the Government without cost is, to be sure, a claim for the adequate accommodation and treatment of it. But mere numbers do not establish the rank of a library; and complacency in them must not remit our attention to the systematic development which will require the assiduous application of sums much larger than we are now granting.

Mr. President, it is not necessary to call the attention of Senators to the fact, but I want especially to call the country's attention to what we have in the Library in the form of facilities for study, of which the public are not aware at all. I might say that one of the dreams I had before I ever came to the other House, 22 years ago, was that some day in Washington we would have a great center of research, thoroughly equipped in the way of laboratory and library facilities. I felt that we ought to have a national university, one of the things I had an ambition to see developed. I introduced a bill looking to that end and had hearings and developed a vast mass of facts, but there was some objection in both Houses. We never have been able to get any final action, and years ago I gave the idea up, abandoned it altogether.

However, we have in Washington a center of investigation that is rapidly coming to equal anything in Europe. In years gone by whenever a man graduated in a great university and wanted to do research work or postgraduate work there was no place for him to carry it on in the United States. He always started for Germany, either for Berlin or some other point in that country, and we had to confess that we did not have the facilities here capable of supporting the desire and ambition of these people. It was that lack I wanted supplied here through this movement.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. HATFIELD. May I remind the Senator that the great chemical industry which has developed so rapidly was started in one of the great German universities, due to the fact that the lawmaking body of that land supported it financially?

Mr. FESS. That is true. Germany before the war had outlined a policy of industrial growth as a result of which upon every directorate of every great industry they had an officer from some German university, supported by the German Government, to assist the industry in developing along scientific lines. That is one of the fundamental principles of Germany that made her difficult for us to compete with in the open market.

The facilities I have mentioned are now over in the Library. Senators will find alcoves where there are separate tables. They will find little rooms where a student can go by himself away from all noise, not in any way distracted. His books are supplied to him and he can go back and forth day after day to pursue the investigation which he is conducting. Nobody sees those cases. Those are unseen forces that are working in this great national institution.

Also, imperfect as the collections are, they cover a vast range of subject matter for the investigator content with the substance rather than the form, and the facilities for approaching and using them absolutely surpass any afforded by any library anywhere. They include special physical accommodation free from the distractions of the reading room, but also direct personal access to the shelves, where the books are classified by subject, the aid of catalogues exceedingly competent so far as they go, and even the personal counsel of men of special learning in certain fields, experienced in research, and familiar with the collections and the apparatus, who are happy to assist any investigator in the use of them. This last feature is unique in any library. It is due, not to any Government appropriation, but to resources furnished from without in the endowment of the four " chairs " and the group of so-caled " consultants," now being maintained, for a demonstration period, by a grant from the General Education Board. That group includes specialists in history, philosophy, economics, sociology, and some other subjects, whose service at the Library is not to do research but to aid in it. It recognizes that, in addition to the technical apparatus and the technicians, there is need of such expert personal mediation between that great mass of material and the public.

I am delighted to have the testimony of Senators that they appreciate what the Library has done. They have testified that they have received an enormous amount of assistance from the Library. I know that the public does not understand it and I fear that many of our best-informed persons connected with the Government are not fully aware of what we are carrying on in the Library under the " chairs " I have mentioned. For example, I had hoped that some day this would be done by the National University, except that the National University would deal with students only. The Library does not pretend to teach, but it does supply the research-worker student or mature investigator with the sources that otherwise he could not have.

The Library is, of course, freely open to the ordinary reader and to the thousands of students from the five universities at Washington; at times the reading rooms are crowded with them. But the aspect of those rooms gives little idea of the serious investigators who at the moment may be engaged elsewhere in the building, in the special divisions, in the bookstacks, at desks in secluded alcoves, or in the study rooms. There are 52 such study rooms, with a waiting list for them; there will be 150 more in the annex. The need of them becomes apparent from the list of visiting investigators of the past year. They represented every one of our 48 States, and 23 foreign countries; 131 American universities and 30 foreign. But it is not only the visiting investigator that the Library reaches. Through its system of interlibrary loans it will lend an unusual book to a serious investigator who can not come to Washington.

There is a service the public does not really recognize. If the University of California had an advanced student wishing to pursue a certain line of investigation and there is a rare book which the California university does not have, but it happens to be in the Library at Washington, that book can be sent to the library of the University of California for use by that student. That is another library service which this great institution is rendering.

There is a service at large of quite a different sort which may not be so familiar except to our appropriation committees, to whom it is annually explained. That is a service to other libraries as institutions. It is represented by the little card which I hold in my hand; an inconspicuous bit of pasteboard—only 3 inches by 5—but momentous in its relation to the efficiencies, and the economy of libraries. It is a catalogue card, of the size and form now standard in American libraries. It carries the author of the book, the title and imprint, and other bibliographic details, and the subjects to which it relates; and if prepared at the Library of Congress includes also the symbol of the book in the classification of it on the shelves. Recently it adds also the corresponding symbol in another system of classification (the decimal) more largely in use in American libraries.

Now the Library of Congress is preparing such cards for the books in its own collection and printing for its own need 100 copies of each. It prints 57 additional copies for the depository sets which it places in as many different institutions at centers of research, as ultimately a catalogue of the National Library. But it does not stop there. It permits any other library—or individual—to buy copies of the card at the cost of their production and the service of sale and distribution. A library having a copy of the identical book can, therefore, secure in these cards a complete "entry" for it—author and subject—and the proper classification—in brief, look to the Library of Congress to do the work of cataloguing and classification which, before this system, was the most expensive item in the preparation of a book for the reader.

Mr. President, I want the economists in this Chamber to listen to this statement:

There are now nearly 6,000 libraries taking advantage of the privilege. They pay from 2 to 4 cents per card, depending upon the form of the order. Even at those rates the receipts from sales are already about $250,000 per annum, all of which is covered into the Treasury.

That is the item I want the economists here to recognize. They do not realize that the Library, without appropriation therefor, is printing these cards in its own printery, selling them to the 6,000 libraries over the country, and realizing $250,000 annually that is remitted to the Treasury of the United States.

The cards sold are, of course, a mere by-product, for the Library of Congress would in any case have to prepare the original entry and print an edition for its own purposes; and the expense of producing the extra copies and of handling the orders is fully met by the charge made. But the benefit to the purchasing libraries far exceeds the sums paid. In direct saving it is certainly six times as much; that is, a million and a half dollars per annum when the sales amount to $250,000. Incidentally, a million and a half dollars are nearly equal to the entire budget of the Library, if we deduct from its total the offsetting $250,000 from these sales and about $300,000 from copyright fees also covered into the Treasury. In other words, Mr. President, the Library as it is operating now has two income-producing activities. One is the sale of these cards and the other the copyright fees, which amount to about $300,000 a year.

But the system of sales is only in its infancy. The Library can at present supply only 70 per cent of the cards needed by the popular libraries and only 35 per cent of those needed by the larger research libraries. It has not yet all the books necessary, nor the cataloguers, nor the resources for printing and delivering the cards in season to be of use. Granting all these, it may become in fact a central cataloguing bureau for the entire country. The significance of that may be judged from the statement that if the Library did not exist, it would be worth while for the Government to create such a bureau for the sake of buying the books, cataloguing them, and producing these cards, even if the books were then thrown away; "worth while," I mean, as an appropriate Government function in the interest of the general welfare.

No wonder the librarians of the country look to our Library as a source of power, stand solidly in support of it, and are restive at mention of it as the Library of Congress and not, as they think it, the National Library of the United States. They are quite at liberty to think of it so even though we hold its ancient title.

But they are not the only outside interests which look to it or confide in its abilities. When a group of such interests—legislators, lawyers, economists, sociologists, and librarians—appealed to Congress to institute, maintain, and publish an index to the statutes of the various States, they expected that the Library of Congress would do the work. So when another group concerned with the welfare of the blind appealed to Congress for an appropriation of $100,000 a year to provide more books in raised type for the use of the adult blind, it was the Library of Congress that was urged as the appropriate agency. These two activities are entirely outside of the scope of the Library's ordinary functions; and yet Congress, in authorizing the work to be done, designated the Library of Congress as the agency to perform it. It may be added that these two projects, now under way, though not requested by the Library but in effect imposed upon it, swell its budget by $135,000 per annum. When a still further group, represented by the American Council of Learned Societies, determined upon a census of the medieval manuscripts now in the United States, it was the Library of Congress that was asked to administer the grant secured for the purpose from one of the foundations.

Years ago the Library initiated a Union Catalogue—on cards—which should include the titles and locations of all the books of a serious nature in other American libraries, foreseeing the value of such a catalogue to its own cataloguers, to any investigator here, and in its informational service to investigators and librarians who might make inquiry from a distance. After examining the beginnings of this service, Mr. Rockefeller's experts were so impressed with its potential value to research at large that they recommended to him a grant for its development. He made such a grant in a substantial sum, spread over a 5-year period. At the conclusion of the period last August—and I should like to have interested persons note this statement—the repertory included about 8,000,000 titles, with over 12,000,000 locations, of books in American libraries important in research work. What does that mean? It means that through the Union Catalogue, which is prepared by the Library of Congress, one can to-day find where any rare book in existence in America is located. That is a specific service that has never been undertaken in any such dimension by any other library anywhere. Its further development must be from the Government, and is now provided for by a small appropriation. It is an absolutely suitable object for such an expenditure.

There are, however, other activities entirely appropriate to the Library and calculated to extend and diversify its benefits, which, if undertaken, must depend upon contribution from private sources. There are vast gaps within its collections that can be filled only by the gift of material. We can not ask Congress to make appropriations to supply these omissions; we shall have to depend upon public-spirited individuals to supply the funds. Unlike the universities of the country, the Library has not any body of alumni, with loyal enthusiasms and long purses, who, during the past decade, have so remarkably enriched the libraries of their almæ matres. The benevolence of Congress toward it seems to be purely corporate; certainly I know of no Member of Congress who has ever made a gift of money to it, nor, except the late Representative Ackerman, any Member who has made a gift of important material. It is, therefore, only to the general public that it may look for such gifts—the connoisseurs, collectors, public-spirited individuals ambitious to do something for culture, and the foundations concerned in promoting research.

The interest of such groups is not spontaneous; it is not secured by professions or promises; it is not secured by mere argument. It must be aroused by some actual and inspiring fact. In the case of the Library of Congress that inspiration, so far as it exists, is represented by the great building over there which Congress determined upon 40 years ago as suitable to the destiny of the library that it proposed; by the additional provision that Congress has from time to time made for the accommodation of the comprehensive collections proper to a national library for the United States; by its decision to provide additional accommodations represented by the present extension and the proposed annex, and by the development which it has fostered of an organization embodying the highest competence in the treatment of the material and the highest and broadest professional standards in the service rendered. If at any time the policy of Congress should seem to change, or its interest weaken, or its standards for the Library be lowered, the inflow of gifts would abruptly cease; and what is more important, there would ensue a profound disappointment and disheartenment among the libraries of the country and the members of the learned professions that the Library which was in line to be their main resource was to fail in its mission; and likewise every patriot would suffer a feeling of disappointment that our Government could not, after all, be depended upon to maintain fitly and to develop amply an institution which is the Nation's unique contribution to culture. If such disillusionment should ever occur, there would be no further gifts made to the Library.

Whatever, therefore, the stress of the moment, we can not afford to impair the integrity of that institution or its efficiency as an instrument of Congress or as an agency for the public good. We must not cripple its activities; we must not halt its development.

To halt the normal development of any institution of learning is a serious matter; to halt the development of a library is an expensive one. Reduce the funds for purchase, and you postpone opportunities which may never recur, or recur only at greater cost later. Reduce the funds for the orderly treatment of the material, and you postpone work which must be done at a greater cost later. Restrict the funds for service, and you cripple the service at a time when both Congress and the public have most urgent need for it. For the "depression" has not lessened the demands upon our libraries; it has increased them. In the Library of Congress the calls for books alone have increased 30 per cent during the past year. The funds provided for the purchase of books have never been adequate and a reduction such as that of last year is disastrous. It not merely deprives the readers and research workers who depend upon the Library, but limits the benefit it confers upon other libraries through the production of catalogue cards. The orderly treatment of the material is far in arrears. The binding urgently necessary would alone require an appropriation of $600,000. An unbound book in use means that to the cost of the binding will later be added the cost of repair. Publications important as contributions to knowledge or even as guides to the Library's collection have had to be suspended because of the inadequacy of the funds for printing. And every division of the Library proper is undermanned, struggling with the accumulations that mount daily, even without additional purchases, and with demands from Congress and the public that can not be ignored.

The postponement last year, over the protest of the chairman of the Committee on the Library, of an appropriation to start construction of the annex was most unfortunate. When seven years ago the need became obvious, the Library had 3,000,000 printed books; it has now 4,500,000, with every other class of material increased in proportion. The congestion is now serious. In certain ranges books stand two and even three deep on the shelves. Tons of material have frequently to be shifted to make room in the subject classes for incoming accessions. Valuable material has to be stored in the cellar and in buildings on Second Street, where it is subject to damp or excessive heat and is for the time being inaccessible. Numerous employees have to carry on their work in portions of the bookstacks under artificial light and ventilation and separated from their coworkers and the apparatus upon which they depend. It is necessary to place the files of the Copyright Office in the public corridors, and in that and the other self-supporting division—the card division—the cramped conditions not merely impede the operations but increase their expense.

We are discouraging new projects of construction. But the annex to the Library is not a new project. The purchase of the site was authorized nearly five years ago, the construction of the building nearly three years ago. The authorization is complete. The site has been acquired, the plans for the building have been prepared, and in the extension of the main building, now nearing completion, accommodation is being provided for an electric plant which will serve the annex also. So far, therefore, from being a new project, the annex is one long pending and in a measure under way.

It is a project at Washington; but that does not mean that the benefit of the expenditure will be confined largely to the District of Columbia. In the minor case of the extension the contracts have involved 76 concerns in 28 different cities. The granite, for instance—some of it replacement, some newly quarried in Vermont—was sent to Minnesota to be cut or recut.

There seems every justification, therefore, even within our present policies as to public works, for proceeding at once with the annex itself. We are committed to it; it can not be avoided; costs are now low; and the expenditure will work benefits directly in line with the other efforts of the Government in behalf of industry.

All such matters are, of course, for the Committee on Appropriations, with whom rests the current welfare of the Library; but its general welfare is a concern of the Library Committee. I am not criticizing the committee, because with that committee rests the current welfare of the Library; but its general welfare is a concern of the Library Committee, of which I am chairman. As chairman of the latter I have a freedom and a duty to express my understanding of it, my hopes, and, if any, my apprehensions. I am especially impelled to do so when I consider the numerous tokens of the public appreciation of it, faith in it, and reliance upon Congress to enable it to fulfill its manifest destiny. I know of no greater contribution this Government has made to the public than the Library of Congress.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks a brief statement of the budget of the Library.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Budget of the Library—The appropriations for 1932–33

(Current maintenance and increase)

|---|---|
| The total, including the Copyright Office and sums disbursed by the Architect of the Capitol, approximately | $2,233,000 |
| Less deduction for furloughs, say | 130,000 |
| | 2,103,000 |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Less offsetting receipts covered into the Treasury, if equal to those of 1932: | | |
| From sales of catalogue cards | $244,000 | |
| From copyright fees | 280,000 | |
| | | $524,000 |
| | | 1,579,000 |
| Less 2 items of expenditure not chargeable to the operations of the Library proper, viz: | | |
| The index to State legislation | 25,000 | |
| Books for the blind | 90,000 | |
| | | 115,000 |
| Net total | | 1,464,000 |

Which must cover all expenses of maintenance, including that of the building itself (in cubic area equal to the Capitol), equipment, repairs, the increase of the collections, and printing and binding.

Comparison with other libraries is impracticable, because there is no other identical in its nature or operations. The reference department of the New York Public Library (in the main building on Fifth Avenue) offers some analogies. Its budget for 1931 was $1,622,382. (For the branches the city appropriated independently $1,776,025.)

Harvard spends regularly $70,000 for law books alone, and in a recent year spent $400,000 on the increase of its general collection. Duke University is understood to spend about $170,000 a year for the purpose.

Considered from another angle: The above $1,464,000 (for the Library of Congress) is about the sum which several cities—Boston, Cleveland, Chicago—appropriate annually for their public-library systems.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, after the very excellent and the very timely address of the Senator from Ohio, it would be like painting the lily or gilding refined gold to endeavor to add to it. It is not as litterateur nor as philosopher, except as a world of hard knocks makes one, nor as economist, nor as research student, but simply as an ordinary official with varying, everyday problems, without resources, and without a sufficient force wholly in detail to enable the work to be done, that I add my mite of praise to what has been said by the Senator from Ohio of the work that has been so well and so efficiently performed by the Congressional Library.

I have found, Mr. President, as to the things which I sought to do—things that I could not do because perhaps of lack of ability in that direction; things that I could not accomplish because of a very limited office force—that I had but to apply in many instances to the Library of Congress, and there aid was forthcoming, and always willingly forthcoming, and always the information was efficiently furnished.

So I take this opportunity thus very briefly, Mr. President, to congratulate the Senator from Ohio upon what he has said, to congratulate the Library upon the work it is doing, and to express thus publicly my appreciation of what it has done for me in the problems that have been mine, and my thanks for its constant readiness to aid in the solution of those problems.

WILLIAM E. B. GRANT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, when the calendar was being considered this morning I was necessarily absent.

There is a bill on the calendar, House bill 9166, which I ask unanimous consent to be taken from the calendar and now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9166) for the relief of William E. B. Grant, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "by the" to strike out "Secretary of the Navy" and insert "Secretary of War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to examine, on the basis of facts and figures to be found and reported to him by the Secretary of War, the claim of William E. B. Grant, warrant machinist, United States Navy, retired, for the amount withheld from him under section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, from April 7, 1909, to May 3, 1917, and from November 29, 1919, to February 28, 1922, the periods during which he was employed by the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Canal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, this is simply a bill to authorize an inquiry into the status of William E. B. Grant, owing to a conflict of law between an act passed regulating employees in the Canal Zone and the Regular Army act. It costs no money. It simply asks that the facts in the case be adduced and sent to the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator by whom the investigation is to be made?

Mr. TYDINGS. By the Secretary of War. The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, in which branch of the service Mr. Grant formerly was employed.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I think the investigation should be made by the Comptroller General after a report from the Secretary of War.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Secretary of War, however, is the officer who has custody of the records giving the facts and figures.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TYDINGS. I asked that the bill to which I have referred be taken from the calendar and passed. I was absent when it was brought up this morning, and it was temporarily laid aside during my absence.

Mr. McNARY. I have just come into the Chamber, and I desire to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill for the information of the Senator.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Is there a favorable report upon the bill, and favorable action?

Mr. TYDINGS. The committee was unanimous, and the Navy Department recommended it.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1011 will be indefinitely postponed.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate may be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. SMOOT, Mr. ODDIE, Mr. NYE, Mr. McKELLAR, and Mr. KENDRICK were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. McNARY, Mr. KEYES, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. KENDRICK, and Mr. SMITH were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a number of Senators are absent from the Chamber, and I promised to suggest the absence of a quorum when the Senate returned to the bill. I do so now.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 5, line 7, to strike out "$125,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$148,000," so as to read:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, WAR DEPARTMENT

For stationery; purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, including their exchange; books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, maps; typewriting and adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; furniture and repairs to same; carpets, matting, linoleum, filing equipment, photo supplies, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor trucks and motor cycles; freight and express charges; street-car fares, not exceeding $750; postage to Postal Union countries; and other absolutely necessary expenses, including not to exceed $750 for traveling expenses, $148,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Staff Corps—Contingencies, Military Intelligence Division," on page 6, line 25, after the word "information," to strike out "$19,990" and insert "$39,990," so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the Military Intelligence Division, General Staff Corps, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad, including the purchase of law books, professional books of reference, and subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals; for the hire of interpreters, special agents, and guides, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper, including $5,000 for the actual and necessary expenses of officers of the Army on duty abroad for the purpose of observing operations of armies of foreign states at war, to be paid upon certificates of the Secretary of War that the expenditures were necessary for obtaining military information, $39,990, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Army War College," on page 7, line 16, after the figures "$63,927," to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be increased by transfer from another appropriation in consequence of section 317 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, as continued by section 4 of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation act, fiscal year 1934, for the purposes of making a larger amount available for or on account of personal services or for increasing a limitation on any appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Welfare of enlisted men," on page 8, line 23, before the word "balances" to insert "unobligated," and on page 9, line 2, after the word "and," to strike out "such fund, including interest accruals," and insert "the principal sum of such fund," so as to read:

For the equipment and conduct of school, reading, lunch, and amusement rooms, service clubs, chapels, gymnasiums, and libraries, including periodicals and other publications and subscriptions for newspapers, salaries and travel of civilians employed in the hostess and library services, transportation of books and equipment for these services, rental of films, purchase of slides for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits, and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established or which may be hereafter established, and travel (not to exceed $825), $66,778: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States the unobligated balances on January 12, 1933, to the credit of the funds entitled "Other funds" and "Stars and Stripes," the money so deposited to be credited to a fund to be entitled "Recreation fund, Army," which shall draw interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, and the principal sum of such fund shall not be subject to withdrawal except in time of war, when it shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of War for the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the enlisted personnel of the Military Establishment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Finance Department—Pay, etc., of the Army," on page 9, line 22, after the word "duty," to strike out "$2,143" and insert "$3,810, and the appropriation for pay of the Army, fiscal year 1933, shall be available for the increased pay and allowances of one retired officer on active duty in addition to the two retired officers specified in the War Department act for that fiscal year," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

In all, $128,452,494, less $285,000 to be supplied by the Secretary of War for this purpose from funds received during the fiscal year 1934 from the purchase by enlisted men of the Army of their discharges, $128,167,494; and the money herein appropriated for "Pay, and so forth, of the Army" shall be accounted for as one fund:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 18, to strike out:

No part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any officer on the retired list whose income is in excess of $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 7, after the word "reports," to strike out "$2,671,465" and insert "$2,921,465," so as to read:

Regular supplies of the Army: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection; stoves required for the use of the Army for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts in the field and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; authorized issues of candles and matches; for post bakery and bake-oven equipment and apparatus; for ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; authorized issues of soap, toilet paper, and towels; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries, and for schools for noncommissioned officers; for the purchase and issue of instruments, office furniture, stationery, and other authorized articles for the use of officers' schools at the several military posts; for purchase of commercial newspapers, market reports, and so forth; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; for forage, salt, and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry and batteries of Artillery and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted, and for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian, Philippine, and Panama Canal Departments, and for labor and expenses incident thereto, including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation; for the purchase of implements and hire of labor for harvesting hay on military reservations; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Army, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, $2,921,465.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the item on page 18 represents an increase of about $250,000, and I think we ought to have some explanation as to why that is recommended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the House made a terrific cut under the Budget. It was shown to us by the Chief of Staff that it would be wholly impossible to provide the necessary forage for the animals of the Army under the figure the House had fixed, that it would be sheer cruelty to animals to try to do it.

Last year the appropriation for that item was $3,904,926. The Budget this year cut that about $400,000 and recommended $3,471,529. The House cut that down $800,000, to $2,671,465. We want to cut it as far as is possible, but it would not be humane to cut the animals' ration further than it has been cut. For that reason the committee restored part of what the House cut out.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the forage for the animals is cheaper now than it has ever been.

Mr. REED. That is the reason why we are able to recommend a sum a million dollars less than that of last year.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the committee just take the request of the Chief of Staff and put the figures as he desired them?

Mr. REED. We considered the request when he made it, and it seemed to all of us to be entirely reasonable. The committee was unanimous in acquiescing.

Mr. CONNALLY. As a matter of fact, the Army is doing away with cavalry and mechanizing, so why should they need more forage now than they did last year?

Mr. REED. They do not. The appropriation is $1,000,000 less than the same item last year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 16, after the words "operation of," to strike out "existing laundries" and insert "laundries, existing or now under construction,"; in line 22, after the words "equipment of," to strike out "existing dry-cleaning plants" and insert "dry-cleaning plants, existing or now under construction,"; and on page 19, line 17, after the word "reasons," to strike out "$5,194,045" and insert "$5,694,045," so as to read:

Clothing and equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale; for payment of commutation of clothing due to warrant officers of the mine planter service and to enlisted men; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for operation of laundries, existing or now under construction, including purchase and repair of laundry machinery therefor; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; for equipment and repair of equipment of dry-cleaning plants, existing or now under construction, salvage and sorting storehouses, hat repairing shops, shoe repair shops, clothing repair shops, and garbage reduction works; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing and when necessary an overcoat, the cost of all not to exceed $30, to be issued to each soldier discharged otherwise than honorably, to each enlisted man convicted by civil court for an offense resulting in confinement in a penitentiary or other civil prison, and to each enlisted man ordered interned by reason of the fact that he is an alien enemy, or, for the same reason, discharged without internment; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, and so forth, destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $5,694,045, of which amount not exceeding $60,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement and transportation of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1934.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania why the clothing and equipage allowance was increased $500,000 over the House figure.

Mr. REED. That is in a somewhat similar class with the forage item. Last year the appropriation was $6,300,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is, for clothing?

Mr. REED. For clothing mostly. In fixing that figure at $6,300,000 the committee last year expected that that would be supplemented by drawing from the reserve war stocks left over from the Great War. Those have now been exhausted, and the Budget Bureau thought they had made the utmost cut when they recommended for this year $6,775,579, but the House cut under that nearly $600,000. Of course, we could have the Army go barefooted, as Lee's troops did and as Sherman's troops did, but we do not want to do that. We do not think we have reached that point. The figure fixed by the Senate committee, which the Senator will see in the bill, $5,694,045, will allow the issuance of not more than one uniform per enlisted man per year, and certainly that is the irreducible minimum.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania makes an eloquent appeal about the soldiers going barefooted. Nobody expects the soldiers to go barefooted, and there is no danger of the soldiers going barefooted.

I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Pennsylvania to some information I have here from the War Department itself. The Senate committee has increased the figures over the House figures $500,000 for clothing. These figures I have show that the War Department on the 30th of June, 1932, had on hand woolen breeches, E. M., service breeches, 1,535,514 pairs. That refers to woolen breeches.

It had on hand also coats, E. M., service, woolen, O. D.—that is olive drab, I suppose—1,521,882. They say they had an excess and surplus of 643,000 coats last June. Here is the whole list of supplies of the various kinds they have on hand.

Let us see about these poor barefooted soldiers about whom the Senator from Pennsylvania is talking, these "Valley Forge" soldiers. Let us see how many shoes they have on hand. I read from figures furnished by the War Department:

Shoes, E. M., garrison, 314,000 pairs—two pairs for every soldier in the Army now.

Shoes, E. M., service, 514,000 pairs.

Mr. REED. It ought to be twice that, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Pennsylvania has his way, it will be.

Mr. REED. It certainly will be.

Mr. CONNALLY. How many enlisted men are there in the Army now?

Mr. REED. One hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and fifty now, but if war were declared, there would be over a million.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, if war were declared.

Mr. REED. That is what we keep this Army for, to be prepared for war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator looking for war anywhere within the next six months?

Mr. REED. I do not think any of us were looking for war six months before we got into the last war.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator knows that it is absolutely foolish to stock up now, in time of peace, with enough shoes and enough clothes for war time, because by the time the war comes, the shoes and the clothes will be out of date and will be rotting on the shelves.

Mr. REED. We are not planning to stock up. We are only planning not to cut into our reserve stocks.

Mr. CONNALLY. I just want the Senate to know what it is asked to do. Of course, if it wants to squander the people's money, it may do so. The committees of Congress, particularly the Military and Naval Affairs Committees, have a habit of doing what the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff, and the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of Operations, tell them to do.

Let us see about these barefooted soldiers. They have now four pairs of shoes apiece. Let us see about socks, how they are supplied with socks. First I shall read the statement as to cotton socks. Of course, nobody would want them to wear cotton socks in the wintertime. But they have on hand 1,076,000 cotton socks.

Mr. REED. I think it is probably more than that. I think we have that many pair.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was speaking of pairs; if the Senator wants to be exact I can give him the exact figures. I thought the Senator was aware that socks go in pairs. [Laughter.]

Let us see about woolen socks. Socks, stocking type—the Senator will know what the "stocking type" means. I suppose they are the long-legged socks for these barefooted soldiers.

Socks, stocking type, woolen, heavy, E. M. socks: They have 609,000 pairs, and there are only 117,000 or 118,000 men in the Army. They have only about five pairs for each soldier already on hand.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does the Senator from Texas consider five pairs of socks too many for an individual to own?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's remarks are rather facetious. Let us see about some more socks.

Socks, stocking type, woolen, light: The others I read about were the heavy socks, these are the light socks. There are on hand 2,095,000 pairs for 117,000 soldiers. I am wondering whether the people who want to sell woolen goods and woolen socks are not receiving more consideration in the action of the committee in appropriating more money to buy more clothes and more socks and more shoes than is the Treasury of the United States.

We talk about economy, of the fact that we are going to cut down expenses, that we are going to economize. We are asked to appropriate $500,000 more than the House allowed. The House bill carries over $5,000,000 for new clothing. I do not know how many socks that would buy.

Mr. President, these items I have cited are samples of what the Army has on hand now of these supplies, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, in making the statement that it is necessary to stock up now in war supplies of clothing, assumes an attitude which can not be defended from the standpoint of the Treasury and the taxpayers.

Everybody knows that if war should come we would immediately give orders for these additional stocks. The Army discards every year large supplies of clothing because they say it is out of date, it is old, they do not want to dress the soldiers in it, and I think that the Senate ought to defeat this amendment and let the Army get along a little while longer on the stocks of goods and supplies it has on hand.

I understand that it is the purpose, in this appropriation bill, to authorize the purchase of millions of yards of additional woolen goods to be later manufactured into clothing.

I submit these remarks with the hope that the Senate will defeat this amendment. If we are to talk about economy all the time, and never do anything about it, we are not going to get anywhere in balancing the Budget or reducing expenditures; and if we are going simply to O. K. the requests of all the department heads, we shall never balance the Budget, and we shall be putting a heavier load on the taxpayers every day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word in reply. In the first place, we are not O. K.ing the requests of the officials of the War Department, because, as I have shown, the estimate sent down by the Budget was more than $1,000,000 greater than the amount the Senate committee allows.

In the next place, we are not, as the Senator says, stocking up with these supplies. On the contrary, we have drawn from the surplus stocks every year since the World War, and our stocks are less each year than they were the year before. It has been the policy to maintain barely enough to equip a million troops in case of outbreak of war.

We learned by sad experience in the last war what happened when we tried to outfit men who were suddenly called to the colors. I do not know of any case in the last war where our men were compelled literally to go barefoot; but I know that in my own regiment we taught equitation by putting the men on wooden barrels to teach them how to sit on a horse, and when our horses came we had neither bridles nor saddles. We taught the men to ride using rope halters which we made ourselves. They were compelled to ride bareback, and had at least one man killed, and I do not know how many hurt, in my own outfit, as a direct consequence of that absence of supplies.

We are trying as hard as we can to avoid that kind of mistake in the next emergency; and we are keeping, with much struggle, enough to clothe and equip an army of a million men in case war should break out.

The old-fashioned uniforms, made in war time out of shoddy—and they are poor enough things; the Senate would be ashamed to see our present-day Army dressed in these uniforms, which are kept back in the war-time emergency stock, but they will cover a man, and they are uniform clothing. That is what shows in these figures which have been read by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania, I hope, does not mean to say that all of the clothing the Army now has is the shoddy of the war time?

Mr. REED. All of the war reserve is, and the balance is barely enough to meet the day-to-day requirements.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator said the balance is enough to maintain an army of a million men.

Mr. REED. No. The war-time surplus is enough to clothe a million men. The balance for daily issue is just enough to meet our day-to-day needs. Let me say to the Senator that I am just as anxious as he is to cut the appropriation down. It is not fair to say that we are not trying to economize. The bill we have reported shows $106,000,000 less than the same bill showed last year.

Mr. CONNALLY. But most of it is river and harbor work.

Mr. REED. There is $26,000,000 of it which is savings in the military expenditures. We are spending $26,000,000 less on military items in this bill than in last year's bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want to take a moment of the time of the Senate in useless discussion, but I submit that the Senator from Pennsylvania in his argument a moment ago created the impression on me—and if I am in error, I beg his pardon—that the plans of the War Department called for keeping on hand supplies sufficient to equip a million men because of a fear of war. If that be true——

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Senator is exactly right in the way he has stated it now. That is what we call the war reserve.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator meant the old reserve clothing left over from the World War.

Mr. REED. That is what it is.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, which is it? Is it reserve from the last war or for the next war? I want to be fair with the Senator.

Mr. REED. I must be stupid, because I thought I had made myself clear. What we are doing is saving supplies that we had left over from the last war with which to equip a million men who would be called upon for service in the next war.

Mr. CONNALLY. That material is of the kind that would be serviceable and suitable for the next war?

Mr. REED. No; but it will be enough to let us get along for a while, and that is all.

Mr. CONNALLY. My understanding is that the Army has been selling to the Red Cross and giving away for nothing for years the clothing which was not suitable for military use, and I commend it for doing so. The Senator in one instance said we are keeping the old war stuff from the World War that is not fit for the soldiers to wear, not suitable for their use, and in the next breath he said that we are saving it for use in the next war. The point I am trying to make is whether it is not true that the plans of the Chief of Staff and the War Department are to keep on hand all the time supplies sufficient for a million men. That is what I am protesting against. In this time, when we are all debt ridden and tax ridden and when the Treasury is " busted " to the tune of $4,000,000,000, I can see no justification whatever for going into the Treasury and spending more money than we need to provision and equip and supply an Army of 1,000,000 men when we have only an Army of 117,000 or 118,000 men. I do not call that business. I do not call it economy. I do not call it military science.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have learned during my experience in the Senate that opposition to appropriations for military and naval purposes is barren of results. Upon numerous occasions during the past 10 or 15 years I have endeavored to secure reductions in various bills carrying appropriations for the War and Navy Departments. Other Senators who have attacked these appropriation bills have encountered stubborn opposition, and their efforts have usually been in vain. During the years referred to the attention of Congress has frequently been challenged to the mounting expenses of the Government, and when appeals were made for economies and for reductions in Federal expenditures, not infrequently statements were made that when the Army and Navy appropriations were before Congress for consideration material reductions would be made. Notwithstanding these prophesies of reductions, when military and naval bills made their appearance it was discovered that the promised economies were not apparent. The military budget of the United States is now and has been for a number of years entirely too large. We have heard much during the past few months about economies and a balanced Budget, but, unfortunately, the results thus far are most disappointing.

Owing to the great increase in Federal expenses during the past few years, many persons have reached the conclusion that Congress will not inaugurate governmental reforms or reduce Federal appropriations. That belief is in part responsible for the willingness upon the part of some and the demand upon the part of others that the authority be vested in the President of the United States to reorganize the departments and administrative machinery of the Government and make drastic cuts in governmental expenditures. A few months ago we frequently heard statements to the effect that the appropriations for the next fiscal year should be reduced between $750,000,000 and $1,000,000,000, and it was claimed by many that the military budget could be reduced $200,000,000. While there have been some reductions in some of the appropriation bills thus far reported, it is now apparent that the net result will be most unsatisfactory and that Congress will adjourn without making provision to balance the Budget. Treasury reports indicate a very great reduction in revenue receipts, and we have no reason to believe that the revenues of the Government will be sufficient to meet the appropriations which will be carried in the bills passed before Congress adjourns.

Mr. President, in my opinion the appropriation bills thus far reported carry in the aggregate sums entirely too large. We are not living up to the promises made, and the result will be an enormous deficit for the next fiscal year. Many reductions could be made in the pending bill which, if brought about, would not prove disadvantageous to our country. In my opinion, many economies could be effected in the War Department. There is too much machinery in the War Department; there are too many unnecessary expenses; there is too large a civilian personnel. I recall, two or three years ago, making inquiry as to the number of civilian employees in the War Department, as well as in the Navy Department, and my recollection is that in the two departments there were approximately 60,000 civilian employees.

Mr. President, in periods of depression such as this, the Federal Government should practice the most rigid economy and go to the very extremes in lightening the burdens which rest upon the people. It seems incredible that in the present situation the Federal expenditures should be approximately $5,000,000,000. It is only a few years ago when the entire expenses of the Government were less than a billion dollars annually, but the appropriations which were made for this fiscal year for the Army and Navy are approximately $700,000,000. We are now brought face to face with a situation which indicates that the military and naval expenses for the next fiscal year will approach the same stupendous figure.

I appreciate that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, has endeavored to circumscribe some of the activities of the War Department and to bring within more reasonable limits the demands of the officials for Federal appropriations. Notwithstanding his efforts in that behalf, I respectfully insist that the bill before us carries a sum entirely too large and should be subjected to reductions of between twenty-five and fifty million dollars.

Mr. President, examination of the military expenses of the Government before as well as those since the war furnish convincing proof that our budgets for military and naval expenses have been entirely too large. In 1914 the total appropriation for the War Department was $194,000,000, and the Navy Department received $144,000,000. In 1915 the appropriation for the War Department was $188,000,000 and for the Navy, $150,000,000. In 1916 the War Department received $189,000,000 and the Navy, $153,000,000. In 1917—and in that year the United States entered the World War—the appropriation for the War Department was $443,000,000 and the Navy Department received $320,000,000. Of course, during the war and for several years immediately following the war it was imperative that very much larger appropriations be made. But in 1923, after demobilization of our Armies, the appropriation for the War Department was $359,000,000 and the Navy, $300,000,000.

In 1924 the appropriations for the Army and Navy amounted to $680,000,000. In 1925 the Army appropriation bill carried $341,000,000 and the Navy received $278,000,000. In 1926 the appropriations for the Army were $364,000,000 and for the Navy $324,000,000. In 1927 and 1928 the appropriations were substantially the same for these departments. In 1929 for the War Department there was appropriated $466,000,000 and for the Navy Department $394,000,000. It is only proper to state that a part of the appropriations for the Army in each of the years referred to were to cover nonmilitary activities. In 1930 the War Department appropriations amounted to $382,000,000, and substantially the same appropriations were made for 1931 and 1932.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator recalls, of course, that under the economy provision and the Bratton amendment, so-called, 5 per cent will be taken off the entire amount.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the measure to which he refers has not yet passed the House, and its ultimate fate may be attended with some uncertainty.

Mr. McKELLAR. It unquestionably will be passed, in my judgment.

Mr. KING. Five per cent approximately of $700,000,000, and that is the approximate amount which the War and Navy bills will carry for the next fiscal year, is only $35,000,000. The Senator from Tennessee has been earnest in his efforts to reduce Federal expenses but I think he will admit that even if $35,000,000 shall be deducted from the War and Navy appropriations, the balance will be unnecessarily large and will constitute a considerable part of the aggregate appropriations of the Government for all purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. This reduction of $35,000,000 is much better than I expected out of this particular appropriation bill, and I feel delighted that we are to have even that much economy.

Mr. KING. However, the reduction of $35,000,000 is from the appropriation bills of the Army and Navy and not the Army alone. The reduction from the Army appropriation bill by reason of the Bratton amendment will probably not exceed $15,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I say that I think if the Senator had undergone what I have undergone for the last year in seeking these economies, he would look at it as I do, that this is quite a saving.

Mr. KING. I know the Senator has courageously battled against the mounting Federal expenses, and I have been glad to associate myself with him during the past 10 or 15 years in efforts to reduce Federal expenses and to restrain departments and bureaus from their aggressive activities which call for increased expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not in every instance. I agree with the Senator that he has made a wonderful fight, but the Senator will recall that last year the economies secured by the House and Senate amounted to $334,000,000 more than the President had recommended in his Budget message. This saving of $334,000,000 was quite a saving. This year our saving under the amount of the President's recommendation will probably be not less than $200,000,000. These savings, while not as large as they ought to be, are certainly no mean savings. Five hundred and thirty-four million dollars is a tremendous sum and constitutes about one-fifth or one-sixth of the ordinary aggregate expense of our Government.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that notwithstanding that Congress has not appropriated as much as has been recommended by the executive departments my recollection is that the appropriations made by Congress since the Budget law was enacted have been more than $500,000,000 below the recommendations of the Chief Executives. But notwithstanding that Congress has appropriated less than recommended by the President there have been large deficits for the past two years and there will be a deficit of approximately $2,000,000,000 for this fiscal year.

Mr. President, there are two forces operating in the country. A powerful force for economy and a very potent movement for increased expenditures. Obviously, if Congress yields to the latter demand a time may soon arrive when the credit of the Government may be impaired. There is an analogy between governments upon the one hand and corporations and individuals upon the other. Governments must balance their budget, governments must limit their appropriations to their revenues, failing which the day will arrive when their credit will be impaired.

I repeat that under no circumstances must a course be pursued that will affect in any way the credit of the Government. If the financial standing of the Government should be weakened, the effect upon the entire business and industrial structure of the country would be calamitous. The Government will soon be faced with the necessity of meeting maturing obligations aggregating billions of dollars. In addition it must be in a position to find markets for bonds which it will be compelled to issue to meet deficits for the current fiscal year and perhaps for the next fiscal year. The bonded indebtedness of the Federal Government has been increased to the extent of several billions of dollars during the past two or three years. Every possible effort should be made to reduce to the lowest possible point the expenditures of the Government. Even if that shall be done, it is obvious that additional revenues must be obtained in order that an equilibrium shall be established between income and expenditure.

Mr. President, pledges were made by both political parties that the Government expenses would be drastically cut in order that the Federal Budget should be balanced. After examining the present bill I have reached the conclusion that it does not effect any important reductions in the military organization of the United States.

The nonmilitary activities of the War Department, it is true, have been substantially reduced; but as I read the bill before us, the appropriations for military purposes are within a million dollars of the appropriation for the present fiscal year. Comparing the appropriation for 1933 with the amount carried in this bill as reported to the House there is an apparent reduction of $26,933,000 for the military activities of the War Department. The appropriations for 1933, however, included more than $15,000,000 which was made available in the emergency relief and construction act which passed last year. The 1933 appropriations also included approximately $10,000,000 which was not expended by reason of the economy act. My recollection is that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in his colloquy with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] alluded to that reduction.

The Senate appropriations, moreover, have increased by $1,598,482 the amount carried by the bill as it passed the House. Therefore, taking these several factors into consideration, the net result is that the appropriations for military activities in this bill as presented to the Senate are about $800,000 over the actual appropriations for 1933, if my computations are correct.

During the debate in the House the opposition to further reducing military expenditures was based in large part on assertions attributed to General MacArthur, the Chief of Staff, and repeated many times, as I recall, in the debate on the floor. These assertions, briefly summarized, were as follows:

1. That the United States already has accomplished a degree of reduction in its land forces that stands as a unique example among world powers.
2. That practically all other nations are increasing their military strengths.
3. That the larger nations are increasing their outlays for military preparedness.
4. That the United States is now the seventeenth ranking nation in military strength in the world.

These statements, Mr. President, can be easily checked by reference to the official figures of the military strength and military expenditures published in the League of Nations Armaments Yearbook, which I have here upon my desk, and also by figures from authentic documents issued by the principal foreign governments. Inasmuch as armaments are to some extent relative, it is highly important to know whether foreign nations are, in fact, increasing their military strength and increasing their armament expenditures.

Mr. President, in determining what our military policy shall be and what military and naval expenditures shall be made, it is not absolutely essential that we shall adopt the military policy of other nations. The situation in the United States is different from that of other nations. We occupy a position geographically so different from other nations that it is conceded, I think, that our country is impregnable to attack from any other nation. Aside from the wealth of our country and its material resources, its physical position gives to it a strategic preeminence from a military and naval standpoint that is denied to any other country in the world. Great Britain and Japan are islands, not continents. They are dependent upon other lands for food supplies, raw materials, and commodities for the well-being and, indeed, the life of their people. They lack resources which the United States as well as some other countries possess. In their insular position it must be conceded by all that they lack advantages in many ways which are enjoyed by this country. Reasons which might constrain France and Germany and Great Britain and other European nations to adopt certain military and naval policies may not be invoked to justify the United States adopting similar policies.

I repeat that the United States is in no danger whatever from invasion by any nation on earth. Our position makes us invulnerable to attack. Moreover, the people of the United States are not belligerent; they desire peace and the happiness and welfare of the people of all nations. They covet no territory; they have no imperialistic ambitions; they desire, I believe, to cooperate in every proper way with the nations of the earth in the promotion of international peace and good will. There may be loose and thoughtless talk at times about the inferior naval strength of the United States as compared with Great Britain, or its lack of naval strength compared with the resources of Japan; but in my opinion, Mr. President, there is no foundation for such views. It is unthinkable that there should be any contest between Great Britain and the United States. It has been said that the presence of Canada at our very door is a guaranty of continued peace between Great Britain and the United States. Some have said that Canada is a shield which, in effect, is a protection for both Governments, and others have indicated that in a sense it might be regarded as a hostage of and for both Governments. Mr. President, I have not infrequently said that the United States and Great Britain constitute a mighty force for world peace and for the development of democratic ideals and democratic institutions.

There is much in common between the United States and Mexico and the other peoples to the south of us. The Latin American countries have not forgotten that they derived inspiration from this Republic in the days of Monroe and that the doctrine then proclaimed by the United States was a shield and protection to them in the hour of their weakness. In my opinion, the United States and Latin America will be drawn closer together, and the ties between them will grow stronger as the years go by.

Mr. President, I have not been in sympathy with the rather chauvinistic attitude taken by some, and their demands for increased appropriations for military purposes. I repeat when I say that our country is in no danger from any power or any combination of nations. With the protection afforded by the Atlantic and Pacific, the fleets of any or all nations might strike in vain against our shores. Admiral Sims, one of our greatest naval experts, has stated that no nation could successfully land its troops upon our shores, and in effect declared that the United States was invulnerable against any possible combination of forces that attempted its invasion. He as well as other naval experts referred to the development of the submarine and the airplane, and pointed out that with these additional defensive forces it fortified his statement.

Mr. President, I return to the statement made by General MacArthur, to which I have referred. I refer to the statement "that the United States has already accomplished a degree of reduction that stands as a unique example among the world powers." I submit that this is not borne out by the official league figures submitted by it and by some of the principal military powers. In order to demonstrate that the United States has reduced its military strength, this officer assumes, if I understand his position, that the military forces of the United States are maintained at their authorized strength of 280,000 men. As a matter of fact, Congress has never maintained the authorized strength of the Army as provided in the national defense act since 1922.

Each of the great powers has likewise contended that it has brought about a military reduction in its armed strength. An examination of the military strength of the various nations, beginning with the year 1913, will, I believe, refute the statements of General MacArthur. In 1913 the Army of the United States consisted of 92,000 officers and men, and in 1930 and 1931 it was 139,000 officers and men.

In 1914 the regular British Army, not including British troops in India, consisted of 174,000 officers and men. In 1931, according to the official figures furnished by the British Government to the League of Nations, the British Army consisted of only 144,522 officers and men.

In the case of France the size of the peace-time French Army in 1913 was 790,000 officers and men. In 1930, according to the figures furnished to the League of Nations, the French Army consisted of 561,320 officers and men.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a few moments ago stated that our Army has been reduced until it numbers now 118,000 men. I might add, by way of parenthesis, that we have an effective Marine Corps amounting to approximately 18,000 men. It is true that the marines are under the Navy, but they constitute an important part of our military strength, whether in offensive or defensive activities. I submit that the record does not confirm the view that the foreign powers have increased their armed forces in recent years. I shall, a moment later, refer to Japan and show that owing to recent military activities her present military forces have increased. The British Army has been steadily reduced since 1923 from 170,800 to 148,800. The French Army has also been reduced from 733,707 in 1925 to 522,737 in 1930. The latter figure represents the actual number of men provided for in the budget, but my information is that the figure is less than the number of men authorized under existing law.

I am also advised, Mr. President, that in a number of countries the budget strength does not truly register the actual number of men in the military forces, because in preparing the budget it is designed to provide for contingencies, and it is expected that fewer men will be in the military forces than the budget authorizes and makes provision for.

The Italian Army has remained approximately stationary since 1924 at 251,000 officers and men.

Presented in tabulated form, the figures of the armies of Great Britain, France, and Italy are as follows:

Postwar strength of principal armies[1]

| | 1923 | 1924 | 1925 | 1926 | 1927 | 1928 | 1929 | 1930 | 1931 |

Mr. President, I again repeat that there is no foundation for the claim so often made by those who are urging large appropriations for the Army and Navy that other nations are increasing their armies. We are not infrequently inundated by propaganda to the effect that our Nation is in danger of attack, that it is impotent to defend our shores or to protect the American people. This spirit found expression some time ago in the attack made upon the President of the United States by the Navy League. President Hoover was charged with "abysmal ignorance" with respect to the condition of our Navy. President Hoover in his address before the International Chamber of Commerce in May, 1931, declared that—

> Vast armament continues not only a burden upon the economic recuperation of the world but of even more consequence, the constant threats and fears which arise from it are a serious contribution to all forms of instability, whether social, political, or economic.

He also said:

> * * * The destruction of life and property, the great tax burdens, and the social and political instability which resulted from the Great War have had large responsibility in the origins of the present depression * * *. Of all proposals for the economic rehabilitation of the world I know of none which compares in necessity or importance with the successful result of that conference.

The President was referring to the naval conference at which it was hoped a plan would be agreed upon that would materially limit the naval armaments of the world, and thus reduce the military burdens of the people.

I recall that General Pershing stated in substance that the lessons of the war should convince everybody of the danger of nations "striding up and down the earth armed to the teeth," and he said:

> Isn't it, then, time for an awakening among enlightened peoples to the end that the leading powers may reach some rational agreement which would not only relieve the world of this terrible financial load but which in itself would be a long step toward the prevention of war?

I commend these statements to Senators. They are pertinent in this discussion to-day. The United States, because of its preeminence in the world, its great resources, its wealth, its physical and moral strength, should take the lead in bringing about relief from the burdens upon the world imposed by military armaments. Moreover in view of the rôle which it played in securing the adoption of the Kellogg-Briand pact it should assume a position of leadership in seeking to remove the causes of war and in effecting organizations and tribunals for the settlement of all international controversies by peaceful means rather than upon sanguinary battlefields.

Mr. President, Japan is practically the only important exception to the statement that the principal foreign powers have not increased their armed strength in recent years. Since the Manchurian controversy, which broke out in December, 1931, the number of men serving in the Japanese Army has been considerably increased.

Mr. President, upon a number of occasions since I have been in the Senate I have referred to Japan in complimentary terms. I have referred to the progress that she has made during the past 50 or 60 years. Her progress has been so extraordinary as to excite the commendation and praise of the people of the world. Her people have proven that they have great ability and capacity for extraordinary achievements in all of the fields of human endeavor. The relations existing between the United States and Japan have been most cordial, and our Government, particularly under the administration of President Roosevelt, manifested a friendly interest in the welfare of Japan and her people. Notwithstanding the very cordial relations between the Russian Government and the United States dating from the early days of this Republic, when the Russian-Japanese conflict was in progress, the people of the United States generally were sympathetic toward Japan and were not displeased when the issues of the conflict were favorable to Japan. President Roosevelt, as Senators will recall, played an important part in the peace negotiations between the two belligerents, and subsequently his course, as well as that of his successors, was such as to furnish convincing proof to the Japanese people that they had a friend in the United States. The belief was current among the American people that Japan was marching forward toward the heights of genuine democratic government. As one who has entertained a feeling of friendship toward Japan and who has desired that the spirit of good will and amity should exist between the two countries, I can not help but experience a feeling of regret over the developments in Manchuria.

Japan for a number of years has been one of the great powers in the world. Her statesmen have played important rôles in the councils of the nations, and her influence has been felt in determining world policies. Japan has reason to look with gratification upon the advancement which she has made, and the high place which she has occupied among the nations of the earth.

I am sure the people of the United States and of other nations would regret to see Japan pursue a policy that would affect the cordial relations that have existed between the Japanese Government and other nations. It is to be hoped that Japan will not forget the regard in which she has been held and the friendships which have been formed.

The horrors of the World War are still before us. The calamities which follow misunderstandings and conflicts should be warnings against the adoption of policies that may caue their repetition. The world is in the shadows; the summits of world peace are not far beyond, if the peoples will forget their pathetic ancestralisms and in a spirit of fellowship and cooperation march toward the summits which are bathed in the sunlight of a new day.

Mr. President, the official figures do not reveal that the principal foreign powers have increased their outlays for military preparedness during the last few years. On the contrary, the figures show that virtually all of the important foreign countries, with the exception of Japan, have actually decreased their military budgets, particularly since the world depression. This statement must be qualified by the fact that, as compared with expenditures before the war, most of the European nations are spending more to-day upon their armaments—military, naval, and air—than they did in 1913.

As compared with 1913, however, the military expenditures of the United States have increased, relatively, more than those of any other power. The following table shows the percentage of increase in expenditures for land, naval, and air armaments for the principal powers since 1913:

| | 1913 | 1930 | Percentage of increase (+) or decrease (−) |
|---|---|---|---|
| United States | $244,600,000 | $727,700,000 | +197 |
| Japan | 95,500,000 | 232,100,000 | +142 |
| Italy | 179,100,000 | 258,900,000 | +44 |
| Great Britain | 375,100,000 | 535,000,000 | +42 |
| France | 348,700,000 | 455,300,000 | +30 |
| Russia | 447,700,000 | 579,400,000 | +30 |
| Germany | 463,300,000 | 170,400,000 | −63 |

I pause, Mr. President, to make a brief reference to Russia. In recent conferences dealing with disarmament Mr. Litvinoff, the Russian representative, submitted proposals which appear to have been made in good faith and which, if accepted, would have been distinct contributions to a limitation in military armaments. In my opinion the governments then represented were too indifferent to his proposals and also failed to react to the demands of the masses of the people of the world for the adoption of policies looking to disarmament.

The British military budget has been reduced each year since 1927. The budget for the British Army for 1931 amounted to £39,930,000. In 1932 the figure was reduced to £36,488,000, a total net reduction of £2,832,000, or approximately $16,500,000. The largest part of this reduction came in the category of effective services, or what we would call in our Budget "military" activities as distinct from "nonmilitary" activities.

In the case of France the budget for the year 1933 shows a reduction of approximately $38,000,000 from the preceding year. The 1932 army budget was 9,393,000,000 francs, as compared with 8,398,000,000 francs for 1933.

Japan is the only great power which has actually increased its military budget during the past year.

The statement that the United States ranks seventeenth among the military nations of the world is based on an estimate of the trained man power available in countries which employ the conscript system. It includes not only the active army but also all of the trained reserves who are liable for military service under the laws of the different countries, regardless of the age or military fitness of men liable to military service.

Thus, according to the table submitted by General MacArthur, Russia is accredited with having an army of 18,817,000 men. Of course, such figures are absurd. When in Russia a few years ago, I conferred with the Soviet leaders and many of the military commanders, including Trotzky, who was at that time head of the red army, which was then 500,000 men. Since then there has been no material increase in Russia's military forces. The Armaments Yearbook, to which I have referred, states that the Russian active army is only 562,000 men. These various units are scattered from the Pacific Ocean to the Baltic Sea and from the White Sea to the Persian boundaries. It would be difficult to mobilize these scattered forces, and, with the limited transportation facilities of Russia, the obstacles to such mobilization are increased.

Theoretically compulsory military service in Russia begins at the age of 19 and lasts until the close of the fortieth year. Obviously men who have been out of active training for nearly 20 years are not available for immediate service in time of war. In the case of France and other countries with the conscript system, the duration of military service is fixed at 27 years, to include all male citizens between the ages of 20 and 47; and that is not an accurate measure of military strength. According to these tables, for example, Greece, with 583,450 men "liable to military service," is stronger than Great Britain, with only 547,000 in its active and reserve forces.

It is questionable whether military strength can be compared merely in terms of man power, whether trained or not. In the case of the United States, our industrial and economic facilities, our financial power, our ability to transform from peace-time to war-time production, and our geographical isolation are far more important elements of strength than mere man power, and must logically be taken into account in determining our capacity for self-defense.

The present organization of our Army, moreover, which is based on the theory of the immediate mobilization of man power and industrial resources, raises the question of whether the national defense act is really designed for purposes of self-defense or whether it is intended to provide the man power which would be required in a war waged on the same scale and fought on the same principles as the World War.

The military organization provided in the national defense act apparently assumes that the United States will participate in another World War in Europe or Asia. It assumes that mass armies will be employed in the future as in the past, that offensive as well as defensive operations are required, and that mobilization of the man power of the Nation is still essential to the defense of the United States, regardless of our relative geographical isolation, as long as there is any possibility of being drawn into a general war. On the strength of this theory, the creation of a small but well-trained mobile force, equipped to meet a sudden emergency, has been sacrificed to the task of training a citizen reserve and building up a vast Officers' Reserve Corps, which is officially regarded as inadequate to meet the requirements of mobilization.

In many respects the military problem of the United States is similar to that of Australia, which could be adequately defended, according to some military experts, by a small mobile force equipped to repel invasion. In both cases, invasion would come from overseas, and in both cases defensive rather than offensive operations are the natural rôle of the Army—provided the primary object is to resist invasion. The primary object of the national defense act, however, is not confined to defense of American territory. The proposal of the American delegation at Geneva, nevertheless, and several official utterances of President Hoover seek to establish just such a limited objective. In his speech accepting renomination for President, Mr. Hoover declared:

> I insist upon an Army and Navy of a strength which guarantees that no foreign soldier will land on American soil.

This, it is pointed out, is a clear declaration of the object of the armed forces, compatible with our international commitments and within the military means. An army organized solely to defend American soil would be in full accord with the antiwar pact; it would not require offensive preparations, and it would not be materially affected by the size or organization of foreign armies.

Mr. President, I regret that genuine reduction has not been made in the various appropriation bills which have been submitted, and particularly in the measure now before us. The Senator from Pennsylvania, I have no doubt, has resisted appeals from military sources in favor of larger appropriations. In what I have said I have not intended any criticism of my friend. However, I do believe that in view of the great depression existing and the want and privation found in every part of our land, and in view of our diminishing revenues and the imperative demands for appropriations for relief and to meet the unemployment and to aid in reviving business and lifting our country out of the shadows, we should have found in this and in a number of other bills opportunities for material and important reductions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 19, line 17.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Cutting | Keyes | Robinson, Ind. |
| Bailey | Dill | King | Russell |
| Bankhead | Fess | La Follette | Schuyler |
| Barkley | Fletcher | Lewis | Sheppard |

| Blaine | George | McKellar | Smith |
| Bulkley | Glass | McNary | Steiwer |
| Bulow | Gore | Metcalf | Trammell |
| Byrnes | Grammer | Moses | Tydings |
| Capper | Hale | Neely | Vandenberg |
| Caraway | Harrison | Norris | Wagner |

| Connally | Hatfield | Oddie | Walsh, Mont. |
| Coolidge | Hayden | Patterson | Watson |
| Copeland | Hebert | Reed | White |
| Costigan | Johnson | Reynolds | |
| Couzens | Kendrick | Robinson, Ark. | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The question is on the committee amendment on page 19, line 17, where the committee proposed to strike out "$5,194,045" and to insert in lieu thereof "$5,694,045."

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 21, to strike out lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, as follows:

> Provided further, That not to exceed $2,522,880 shall be available for expenditures for or on account of the transportation of persons pursuant to the provisions of this appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the amendment which has just been voted on will result in a cost to the taxpayers of $500,000 which they need not justly bear. The pending bill increases the House figures about a million and a half dollars.

Economy will not get anywhere, in this bill or any other bill, so long as Senators absent themselves from the Chamber, do not hear the discussions, do not know anything about what they are voting on, and come rushing into the Chamber when there is a quorum call and vote with the committee. Of course, it is natural for them to vote with the committee.

Mr. President, we have been debating the economy bill here for the last week, and Senators with much heat have been voting to cut departmental salaries, and I voted with them; I think those salaries ought to be cut along with our own.

Now, when we have an opportunity by one vote to cut off $500,000 for clothing in the Army, when it has been shown that the Army has a supply of clothing that will last it more than a year, perhaps more than two or three years, Senators come in and back up the committee and vote to add $500,000 for an absolutely useless item.

This Congress is not going to economize. This Senate is not going to economize. Economy in the newspapers and noneconomy in the voting. We talk a lot about economy on the stump and in the newspapers, and when we have a chance to economize we strike a blow at the taxpayers, we raid the Treasury, and maintain a clothing supply for a million men when we have only 117,000 in the whole Army. We vote some more subsidies to the clothing manufacturers and woolen manufacturers so they can stock up the Army with supplies and the moths can eat them up before they will ever be used, so they will go out of style and the Army will not deign to wear them. But what does the Senate care about the taxpayers? I have made a fight on this amendment and tried to save half a million dollars. Apparently there is no use to try.

We asked for the yeas and nays and there were not 10 Senators in the Chamber who were willing to go on record.

If the proposal had been to cut off 1⅔ per cent from somebody's pay, Senators would have rushed out here and had a yea and nay vote, but when we try to cut off $500,000 in one lump sum, Senators will not let us have a roll call. Not 10 Senators were willing to have a roll call. The Chair nods his head in verification. There were 49 Senators present and one-fifth would be 10, all that were necessary to grant the yeas and nays.

Mr. President, I move reconsideration of the item. I want to get the Senate on record once as to whether Senators are willing to have a gag rule here and not come out and vote on these items. I want the RECORD to show. I want the roll call to show who are here and who are refusing to give us the yeas and nays on this proposal to save the taxpayers $500,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the bill carries $106,000,000 less than the Army bill of last year. The particular item which the Senator from Texas has been discussing carries $1,000,000 less than the Budget estimate for the item this year. We have reduced the Budget on this single item over a million dollars. I think we have gone a long way toward saving the taxpayers' money.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and has the bill in charge, a question or two?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it true that we have sufficient clothing and shoes on hand now to last the Army another year?

Mr. REED. If we draw upon the reserve stock. We have a reserve, as the Senator knows, and have had ever since the World War, that will give the first needed equipment to an Army of a million men. We have tried to keep on hand enough clothing, saddles, ordnance supplies, rifles, and so forth, for that Army of 1,000,000 men. These uniforms are the old war-time uniforms. We are not making new uniforms and we are not adding to that reserve supply which comprises the old uniforms similar to those the Senator had in his regiment during the war.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator what proportion of the stock we now have in reserve the $500,000 would buy?

Mr. REED. It will not buy any of that. By adding $500,000 to this item we will be able to issue one uniform to each enlisted man in the course of the next fiscal year, and it seemed to the committee that that was the irreducible minimum.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand it, in the reserve supply now there are uniforms for 1,000,000 men?

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. TYDINGS. And shoes for a million men?

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that the $500,000 would buy, roughly, enough equipment to supply about 100,000 men.

Mr. REED. No; the $500,000 added to the amount the House provided will be enough to meet our current needs for this year.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think I have made my question clear, and it is rather difficult for me to do so. What I am attempting to draw from the Senator is this: How much goods can be purchased with this money as compared with the goods now in reserve?

Mr. REED. That is difficult to say. The question of the goods now in reserve——

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean in numbers of suits and numbers of shoes.

Mr. REED. That again is difficult to say. The $500,000 added to what the House gave will furnish only the current needs of the Army for the year.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is for 118,000 men?

Mr. REED. Yes; 118,000 men.

Mr. TYDINGS. This appropriation is equal to one-twelfth of the reserve?

Mr. REED. The total of this year's appropriation will enable us to buy about 10 per cent as much as we now have in reserve.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I wanted to know. If this item is cut off, how much of the 10 per cent will be lost that we can not purchase?

Mr. REED. The item as it came from the House was $5,194,000. We added $600,000 to that, which is about 12 per cent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then as I understand it we have enough reserve of clothing and shoes to equip 1,000,000 men.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. TYDINGS. Therefore if this appropriation is not made we will have to draw between 5 and 10 per cent of our reserve to take care of the current needs for this year?

Mr. REED. Yes; I should think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand it, at the end of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made, instead of having enough clothing and shoes for 1,000,000 men, we would have enough in storage for about 900,000.

Mr. REED. Something like that, but there is this factor in it, and I think it is worthy of consideration. The uniforms that are kept in the reserve supply are the war-time uniforms made of shoddy, of a different design from that which is being worn at the present time by the enlisted men. They are all the old high-collar style. We would have to use them in case of war. The modern uniform is different. Consequently they would be most undesirable for issue at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was wondering why that reserve of old uniforms has been kept now for about 13 years instead of having been worn off gradually by having it drawn on from year to year so we could keep up the reserve in current uniforms.

Mr. REED. We have drawn on the reserve to a very great extent. We came out of the World War with millions and millions of uniforms. Part of those have been issued to troops, part of them have been sold as surplus stores. The Senator will see traces of them on the streets of every city every day. The reserve for 1,000,000 men is what is left. It has been our policy for 15 years not to encroach upon it. We learned in the last war the unhappy consequences of trying to train an army without any equipment.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much longer will we be able to preserve these old uniforms?

Mr. REED. They are very well kept. They will keep a long time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any disintegration that is now apparent in them?

Mr. REED. I do not think so. They are all new uniforms. They have not been worn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where are they being kept?

Mr. REED. By the Quartermaster's Department, stored in quartermaster reserve depots scattered all over the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I beg Senators' pardon for taking up any more time, but the colloquy between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] brought out something I am sure the Senate did not understand. The Senator from Pennsylvania answered the Senator from Maryland that if this item is not carried in the bill it will result in a 10 per cent reduction in the reserve supply. That is not accurate. That is not correct. As a matter of fact the bill as it passed the House carried $5,194,000 for clothing to supplement the supplies now on hand for a million men. I am not objecting to the House figure of $5,194,000, but I am objecting to the Senate committee's adding $500,000 more. If we vote down the Senate committee amendment and adhere to the House figures we shall have clothing on hand for a million men and in addition we shall spend $5,194,000 more. The amendment I am opposing is the addition of $500,000 to the House item.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much do the uniforms cost?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator from Pennsylvania tell me how much the uniforms cost?

Mr. REED. It is very difficult to say. I do not know. A good many of them are made by the Army itself. It buys the material and makes them up at its own quartermaster factory, or else it issues the material to contractors who make up the uniforms out of the Government material.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator's reply is correct that $500,000 would buy uniforms for 100,000 men, that would indicate about $5 a suit, which, I think, is rather low.

Mr. REED. I did not mean to give that impression.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the way I understood the Senator.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I did not mean to give that impression. The $5,600,000 will furnish enough clothing for a year for 118,000 men.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much is that per capita?

Mr. REED. It is not very difficult to divide it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] does me the service of suggesting that it is something over $50 apiece for an Army of 117,000 men. The amount in the bill as it passed the House provides for over $5,000,000 in addition to the reserve supplies for 1,000,000 men. I suppose they must have three or four apiece, because——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order to be fair, I think it is only proper to state that that includes underclothes and blankets, in fact, the soldier's total allowance for clothing, shoes, and all.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand that. That only accentuates it. That simply means that in addition to uniforms they have enough socks, enough underclothes, and enough of everything else for a million men. That only aggravates the situation. There are enough shoes for a million men. We have all of these supplies on hand now, enough for a million men. The House appropriated $5,194,000 in addition, to which I am not objecting; but the Senate Committee on Appropriations, with its extravagant ideas, adds $500,000 more.

We have been cutting other appropriation bills 10 per cent. The Senate committee is adding 10 per cent to this item. I have no personal interest in this matter, but I think this is an item that is indefensible. I have selected it because I want to test the Senate. I want to know whether there is any use of standing here and fighting for economy. If not, if we can not get a test vote anywhere along the line, then we might as well admit to the country that a fight for economy is futile. Senators will vote as they please. I think they should vote to reconsider the item of $500,000 and give us a roll call on it. If the Senate wants to approve the item, let it do so. I want Senators to know what they are doing. The Senate is about to squander $500,000 in order that woolen manufacturers may sell some woolen goods to the Army when it does not need it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if I have not miscalculated, the amount carried in the House bill provides over $400 each for each soldier for this purpose. I understand there is $5,194,000 carried in the House bill for this purpose. Dividing that by 120,000 soldiers, we have $400 for each soldier for this purpose. The proposal is to add $50 for each soldier. It seems to me it is the height of extravagance, and I heartily sympathize with the position of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

I was present when the viva voce vote was taken and voted with the Senator from Texas. I hope that we will reconsider the matter and eliminate the item.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to invite the attention of the Senator from Florida to the mathematics which he has just given the Senate. If we take the amount recommended by the Senate committee and divide it by 118,000, the result is $49 per capita—not $490 but $49 per capita—and that includes uniforms, underclothing, shoes, blankets, and all that sort of thing, supplied by the Quartermaster General. That is the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has delayed our work considerably now. This is an important amendment, so regarded by several Senators, particularly the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. If we could have had a roll call, it would have been disposed of long ago, but we are in danger now of having two roll calls instead of one; at least we are going to have one, and we could have one on the direct amendment just as easily as having a roll call on the motion to reconsider. Now I want to suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania——

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit me, I am not opposing a roll call. I am very confident the Senate will sustain the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; probably the Senator is correct; but the Senator from Texas has asked that we have a roll call; he wants a record vote on the amendment. Why does not the Senator, in order to bring that about, consent to a reconsideration, with the understanding that we will immediately have a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment? Would that be agreeable?

Mr. REED. Yes; I am perfectly willing that that shall be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the action agreeing to the amendment, and that we then proceed to vote on the amendment itself by the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am not sure of my parliamentary position. While a motion has been made for a reconsideration, may I offer some evidence as to the justification of the item itself? I should like to have the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs—and I am honored by being a member of that committee—as to whether or not the War Department and the Quartermaster General's office and other officials of our Government who have to do with this question involving this increase which the eminent Senator from Texas finds at variance with his judgment, have not recommended it as necessary?

Mr. REED. That is quite true. They recommended a million dollars more than we are giving them. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate in reporting this amendment recommend a cut of a million dollars under the Budget estimate.

Mr. LEWIS. That is the information I sought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent proposed by the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the vote whereby the amendment was reconsidered is agreed to. The Secretary will state the amendment for the information of the Senate, and will then call the roll.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, line 17, the committee proposes to strike out "$5,194,045" and insert "$5,694,045."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, and on that question the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. WHEELER] is absent to-day on account of illness. Were he present he would vote "nay."

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 10, after the word "enlistment," to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not to exceed $2,522,880 shall be available for expenditure for or on account of the transportation of persons pursuant to the provisions of this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, at the beginning of line 10, to increase the appropriation for Army transportation from $11,106,745 to $11,631,745.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 17, after the word "ambulances," to insert "and motor cycles"; in line 18, after the word "provided," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$250,000," and in line 20, after the words "motor-propelled," to strike out "trucks: Provided further, That completely assembled and equipped motor-propelled trucks, including station-wagon types, may be purchased out of this appropriation, and other appropriations for the fiscal year 1934 under the Quartermaster Corps, which may be available for or on account of the maintenance of animals, or for or on account of the purchase, maintenance, and operation of animal-drawn equipment, or for or on account of rail transportation of persons and materials, the cost of any such vehicle so procured not to exceed $750, including the value of any vehicle exchanged" and insert "trucks, including station-wagon types except those that are procured solely for experimental purposes," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the purchase or exchange of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles other than not exceeding $75,000 for the purchase or exchange of motor-propelled ambulances and motor cycles, and not exceeding (except as otherwise in this paragraph provided) $250,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the purchase or exchange of motor-propelled trucks, including station-wagon types except those that are procured solely for experimental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 23, after the word "transfer," to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense incident to the operation of the Fort Benning Railroad.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on that amendment I desire to make a statement. This amendment was inserted on the floor of the House:

Provided, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense incident to the operation of the Fort Benning Railroad.

A controversy has arisen between the Central of Georgia Railroad, the former lessee of the Government-owned railroad running between Fort Benning Junction and Fort Benning, a distance of about 4½ miles. The Central of Georgia Railroad held a revocable license and has operated this line of road under this revocable license since the 15th day of June, 1924. In 1931 some complaint was made by the commanding officer at Fort Benning, and subsequently the Secretary of War or the Assistant Secretary of War took steps to revoke the license under which the Central of Georgia Railroad operated this road.

As a matter of fact, the Central of Georgia was given no notice of complaint, and as a matter of fact the letter transmitting the order revoking the license was written on September 2. The order itself bore date of September 16; but on the 9th of September, prior to the date of the order, the Assistant Secretary of War made another contract—a contract by which the firm of Page & Harris, or the Page-Harris Co., was given the privilege of operating this short line of railroad, Government owned, from the Fort Benning Junction into the reservation.

Those facts are beyond dispute. There is in the hearings a statement to the effect that after the Central of Georgia learned that its license had been revoked the matter was reconsidered and reheard, but the hearing was purely perfunctory, and I undertake to say that the War Department ought to be glad to open up this transaction because of the facts stated.

The Secretary of War claims that leasing this short line of railroad to an operating company—not a railroad company at all; it has no property; it is not a taxpayer—will save to the Government about $17,000 a year on freights, mainly on coal, fuel, and so forth, carried into Fort Benning. It is questionable whether it will save such sum. Experience will demonstrate whether it will save anything. It can not save $17,000 a year, and I undertake to say, as a matter of fact, that it will not save $17,000 a year.

This matter is in controversy, so far as the leasing of the road is concerned, between the Central of Georgia Railway Co. and the operating company to which the lease was given without notice in the first instance to the Central of Georgia Railway Co.

The ground upon which the lease was revoked was that between two certain dates in 1931 the Central of Georgia Railway Co. had ceased to give double train service into the reservation; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that six months prior to the cancellation of the lease double service had been in fact restored, and therefore that could not have been the reason.

The Secretary of War ought to invite a close and careful scrutiny of this transaction, because the reasons assigned for the action are not borne out by the facts.

The order revoking was dated September 16, whereas on the 9th of September, prior to the 16th, a lease had been made with another concern without notice to the previous lessees; and the claim of economy will not in fact be borne out by actual experience.

So much for the facts on that point.

In the second place, the Central of Georgia Railway Co. is a railway company operating in the State, with its lines running throughout the State. It is now in the hands of a receiver. It is serving the Government at Fort Benning probably at a small profit; but I have definite information that it is serving the Government also at Fort Screven and Fort Oglethorpe at a loss. There is little sense in advancing money to railway companies, failed and failing, and then having the War Department cancel a contract with a railroad company and enter into one with an operating company in order to save, at the most, $17,000 a year, or, as one of the officials from the War Department stated, net $13,000 a year.

Mr. President, this controversy is between the Central of Georgia Railway Co. and the Page & Harris Co., a North Carolina concern. I am not going to take sides on the floor of the Senate in a controversy between two concerns that seek to control this small line of railway; but I am making this statement intentionally because the Fort Benning Railroad Co. has applied under sections 18 to 21, inclusive, of the interstate commerce act for a certificate of convenience and necessity. The Central of Georgia Railway Co. and perhaps others have intervened in that application, and are resisting the issuance of the order.

I submit to the Senate—and I think the Senator in charge of this bill will agree with me—that if the Interstate Commerce Commission denies to the Fort Benning Railway Co. the order or the certificate of convenience and necessity, then no part of the money appropriated in this act should be paid to this railway company. No part of it ought to be available to cover any expense or any item of indebtedness claimed to be due to the Fort Benning Railway Co.

This issue was debated at length on the floor of the House, and this amendment was inserted. The amendment is somewhat complicated, in that if it were taken in exactly the language in which it appears in the bill it is likely that the War Department would be embarrassed in carrying on the necessary operations which it itself has performed in shifting cars and making actual delivery of freight within the reservation.

The Senate committee has stricken out that amendment. The whole matter will be in conference; and I have spoken to the Senator in charge of the bill, and I have made this statement, for the purpose of enabling the conference committee to give proper consideration to this matter. I believe that the conferees will be pleased, if they will go into it fully, to attach a provision at least that no part of this money shall be available for payment to the Fort Benning Railway Co. unless the Interstate Commerce Commission should issue its order under the application now pending.

Of course, if the Interstate Commerce Commission issues that order, the case may stand upon a somewhat different footing. I am not insisting upon the amendment as entered in the House, because I think that amendment, precisely as entered, would work some hardship upon the War Department, although there is some substantial reason why this matter should be kept open by some agreement in conference along the lines suggested by me.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Illinois Central Railroad—a constituent of mine, and my colleague's—is the supervising agency controlling the Georgia Central, to which the Senator from Georgia has just alluded.

I beg to inform the Senate that while I have no personal knowledge of these details as recorded and expressed by the Senator from Georgia, I am in receipt of a written communication fully setting out the details—the communication coming from the general counsel of the Illinois Central, addressed to me—which bears out and sustains the representations made by the Senator from Georgia.

Further than that, sir, I have no desire to trespass upon the time of the Senate; but I do desire to have it understood that the Illinois Central sends this confirmation of the views as expressed by the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the Senator from Georgia.

I understand that the committee amendment has been agreed to. In that case the conferees will have full authority to put in a qualified prohibition, so that if the certificate of necessity is refused by the Interstate Commerce Commission we shall be able to take care of that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Horses, draft and pack animals," on page 24, after line 9, to strike out:

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer on page 56, line 12. This has to do with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

The Budget estimates for 1934 allowed $3,912,009 for this activity, a decrease of $167,475 under the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year. The House subcommittee reduced this by $557,798.

It is necessary, if we are to carry on this work of the reserve officers' training, to increase the appropriation somewhat. I am not asking that it should go back to the point where it was last year, when it was $4,079,484; but the Budget has estimated this at $3,912,009, and from the best information I can get the amount should be increased by $482,000. My amendment is that the figures on line 12, now reading "$3,354,211," be made "$3,840,211."

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a statement from the national president of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The War Department appropriation bill (H. R. 14199), as passed by the House and reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee, meets the national-defense requirements of the country with but one exception. This exception relates to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps units.

The Budget estimates for 1934 allowed $3,912,009 for this activity, a decrease of $167,475 under the amount appropriated for the current (1933) fiscal year. The House subcommittee reduced the 1934 Budget estimates by $557,798. These reductions were effected by decreasing the allowances for subsistence, clothing, purchase of ammunition, purchase of horses and forage, etc. The Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, realizing the necessity of economy, does not contest certain of these reductions. However, it is opposed to those reductions which affect the training and morale of the students of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who, upon the completion of their course, will be commissioned as reserve officers and the future leaders of our civilian army.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, will offer an amendment from the floor of the Senate to increase the amount carried in the bill by $482,000. This amount will still be $75,798 under the Budget (1934) estimates. This amendment will provide for the following projects:

Permit 42 days field training for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps instead of 30 days' training, $112,000. The duration of field training has been reduced 29 per cent, whereas the monetary saving in camp expenses is but 10 per cent. In the course of his four years at college the Reserve Officers' Training Corps trainee attends but one summer camp. This is the only practical field training resembling war conditions the trainee receives. To qualify him as a reserve officer a period of six weeks of such training is indispensable.

Permit purchase of ammunition for target practice, $70,000. This amount of ammunition was formerly a free issuance out of surplus. There being no longer an ammunition surplus, the effect will be a further curtailment in training in the use of the basic arm of the service, the rifle.

Permit of uniform and clothing allowances for cadets, $300,000. By the elimination of this item from the bill the Reserve Officers' Training Corps students will be clothed in war-time shoddy uniforms left over from 1918.

The Reserve Officers' Training Corps is the principal source of procurement of reserve officers. It supplies the deficiency created by retirements of World War officers due to age, etc., from the Officers' Reserve Corps. It furnishes 6,000 commissioned officers annually and gives valuable training in military fundamentals to 121,000 additional students of our schools and colleges. It insures a reservoir of trained junior combat officers. The Reserve Officers' Training Corps graduate who is commissioned agrees to serve for five years in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Under the present appropriations for training reserve officers the Reserve Officers' Training Corps graduate, after he is commissioned, will receive active-duty field training but once every four years. It is, therefore, highly important that he be trained while still in college.

L. KEMPER WILLIAMS,
Colonel, Infantry Reserve, National President.
BENNETT A. MOLTER,
Major, Air Reserve, National Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not feel impelled to make a point of order against this amendment, but I can not give the Senator any assurance that we will be able to hold it in conference.

Mr. COPELAND. I realize that fully, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 12, I move to strike out lines 8 to 18, inclusive. There is no question but that when this language was first placed in the bill some years ago there was need of it, but the prohibition against the officers on the active list serving on these various service publications is a great embarrassment and a very improper thing, in my opinion. Of course, I am particularly interested in the magazine called the Military Surgeon, but the same thing applies to the other service magazines. I ask that that language go out, and that the conferees of the Senate discuss the matter with the House conferees and see if they can not agree on the permanent elimination of the language.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the provision of the present law and of the bill as it comes to us from the House does work a great hardship on publications like the Military Surgeon, the Cavalry Journal, the Infantry Journal, and the Field Artillery Journal because the officers who publish those magazines have nothing to do with the purchase of supplies. There was a real reason, however, why the Engineer Journal should not be allowed to carry advertisements of contractors with the Government. If the Senator's amendment is adopted, we will try to work out something in conference that will bring about justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from New York proposes, on page 12, to strike out lines 8 to 18, inclusive, as follows:

No appropriation for the pay of the Army shall be available for the pay of any officer or enlisted man on active list of the Army who is engaged in any manner with any publication which is or may be issued by or for any branch or organization of the Army or military association in which officers or enlisted men have membership and which carries paid advertising of firms doing business with the Government: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit officers from writing or disseminating articles in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have one other amendment, which I send forward, to be inserted on page 45, line 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 13, the Senator from New York proposes to insert a new proviso, as follows:

Provided, That the duties of the librarian of the United States Military Academy may be performed by an officer of the Regular Army, retired from active service under the provisions of section 1251, Revised Statutes, and detailed on active duty for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHUYLER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, line 13, the Senator from Colorado moves to strike out "$1,203,700" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,068,700," and on said page 26, lines 21 to 23, strike out the words "Fitzsimons General Hospital, Colorado; gymnasium, recreation, and social hall, $135,000."

Mr. SCHUYLER. Mr. President, this is a matter of very great interest to the people of Colorado, and especially to the people of Denver, affecting the Fitzsimons Hospital. Much as I dislike to detain the Senate at this hour, a prefatory statement is necessary before I reach the exact explanation of the amendment.

The Fitzsimons Hospital is the greatest hospital under the jurisdiction of the War Department. During the war it became obvious that on account of soldiers' being gassed and subjected to other hardships and exposures affecting their lungs a hospital should be provided for the treatment of the tubercular. Denver, as is well known, has an ideal climate for the treatment of that disease. The people of Denver raised the money, by individual subscriptions, to buy the ground, some five or six hundred acres in extent, and presented it to the United States. The cost was $165,000.

On the ground thus secured the Government, with progressive and generous recognition of the needs of this great work, has constructed 161 buildings following along the lines of the actually necessary equipment. But there is one building that has been long desired, and which is lacking, a building where those who are in the arrested stages of this dread disease of tuberculosis may go, not to enjoy a luxury, not solely for recreation, but, as the physicians say, as a necessary part of their treatment.

The people of Denver have taken this hospital to heart. Our ladies out there, as a part of their daily lives, go to the hospital, where there are now 1,118 patients, with delicacies, with literature, with other things that tend to lighten the awful tedium that attends the treatment of tuberculosis and those who suffer from that dread disease.

Mr. President, in that situation, and with this so deeply at heart, the people are appealing that the appropriation made last year of $135,000 for the construction of what is termed a recreation hall, gymnasium, and social center may now be maintained. That was authorized last year as a part of a program of similar buildings to be placed at various Army barracks throughout the country. But in all the cases outside of this one those accommodations were to be provided for men who are strong and well, who, despite the weather, whatever it is, can have exercise and go forth into the open under all conditions.

But in the one case of the Fitzsimons Hospital, this building is required as a part of the treatment for the tubercular, to the end that those of these sufferers who are able to walk around, but who are confined in case of chilly, cold, or disagreeable weather to the small rooms which they occupy, may have a place where they may go, and as a part of their treatment have the advantage of some moderate exercises and receive the mental relief, so important in the treatment of tuberculosis, that follows from a slight change of scene. The physicians prescribe this as imperative, as much needed. The appropriation was authorized last year, but was classified with appropriations of a similar nature for buildings at other locations, where, as I have said, the men are healthy. In that classification the proposed construction at Fitzsimons Hospital has fallen under the ban of the necessary, prudent economy program, and is eliminated, mistakenly, I think, as being a luxury, not to be expected under present conditions.

Mr. President, if this partook of that nature, if these sufferers were able to go forth at any time, in any kind of weather, and take exercise or enjoy sports, I would be the first to urge that, in the interest of economy, a cut must be applied here as well as elsewhere. But that is a mistaken conception. The true purpose for which this appropriation has been made has been lost sight of.

Under this appropriation and its encouragement, plans have been drawn for this building, so much needed, at an expense of about $1,200. Bids were to be let in February. I want to read a very concise statement made by Major General Patterson, in charge of the hospitals of the War Department. In his statement, made last month, he succinctly states the need of this building, as follows:

> The need for a gymnasium at a large hospital should not be considered in the same way that such a building would be at an ordinary station. This gymnasium, recreation, and social hall is for a hospital. Everything at this station is there because it is a hospital. Such a building has been needed as a therapeutic measure for many years and should not be longer delayed. To-day there are 1,162 sick at this tuberculosis hospital, 547 of which are ambulant and semiambulant, but require gymnastic or graduated exercises. Without a gymnasium and this special equipment this work is limited to outdoor exercises on pleasant days and only during the warmer season. This building, therefore, while its proper title is as given, is required for the proper daily treatment of about 200 ambulatory sick and is necessary for therapeutic purposes as part of the whole hospital. Some $1,200 has already been expended in drawing up the plans for the building, and the Quartermaster General's office expected to call for bids next month for this construction authorized by Congress in the relief bill of last year.

Mr. President, when this matter came before the House of Representatives it developed that the authority for the expenditure of $135,000 for this hospital had been included in the program to which I have referred, for buildings similar to this one throughout various places in the country, and the House chose to deal with the appropriation as a lump sum of $1,203,700, to be taken away from the purposes for which it had been voted and reappropriated for building barracks and other similar construction. The Fitzsimons Hospital appropriation, being in this group, suffered the fate of the others.

Upon remonstrances from Colorado Representatives in the House, the fact that it was associated in this kind of a general item with buildings regarded as luxuries is borne out by the colloquy between our Representative from Denver, Mr. EATON, and Mr. COLLINS, the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. EATON said:

> It was not the intention to cut out places for hospital patients to be cared for in that line?
> Mr. COLLINS. I am afraid the gentleman has had the appropriation badly earmarked. It is like old dog Tray; it has gotten in bad company. I sympathize with the gentleman.

Mr. President, I maintain that form should not prevail over substance; that the mere fact that this appropriation, so much needed, and which, after years, was obtained for therapeutic purposes, for the purpose of enabling these veterans to have some place where, in inclement weather, they could go and have some comfort, some relaxation, was included in a general program for buildings denominated as luxuries, should not now lead us into a misconception of the true purpose of this construction at Fitzsimons Hospital. Rather, I feel we should maintain the appropriation which was made last year.

Mr. President, that would be accomplished by the amendment in the form in which I have presented it. Its adoption will result in keeping in force that appropriation, a small part of which has already been obligated, and provide a building which is so much needed and which it has been anticipated would be started as a result of bids to be advertised for in February.

I am authorized by Representative EATON, of Denver, to say that in a conversation he had with Representative COLLINS, the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, Mr. COLLINS expressed regret that the item was involved in a situation of this kind, which lent itself to a blanket disposal of the subject, and Mr. EATON received encouragement to believe that should we place it in position here where it may be carried to conference, the true nature of the item might well be there considered, at least the distinction would be carefully reweighed between expenditures for things of the character of luxuries in barracks and fields where men are healthy, and an expenditure like this, which is needed for the relief of the sufferers from this terrible disease.

Mr. President, those physicians who have obtained eminence in their profession and who are members of this body would testify, if it were necessary that any testimony should be given, to that which is well known, that the tubercular's progress toward health is very slow. Time moves upon leaden wings. It is a vital thing for their recovery to have change of scene, to have light exercises, to have some companionship at this time.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the junior Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SCHUYLER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I desire to ask my colleague whether the essential point in his able statement is not this: The item in the appropriation bill appears to have been condemned by the committee because it is wrongfully referred to as supplying recreational facilities, whereas the essential purpose is to provide a building in which patients afflicted with tuberculosis may have suitable opportunities and equipment furnished to assist them to accomplish complete recovery?

Mr. SCHUYLER. I thank my able colleague for his question. I know that his heart is in this measure as keenly as is my own and his question serves to emphasize the very keynote here. It is not recreation, not social communication, that is mainly involved in the item, but the very essence of it is, as certified by Major General Patterson in his letter, a therapeutic measure for the proper progress of these veterans toward recovery.

I earnestly hope that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill will see his way clear—and that the Senate will see the way clear—to permit the subject to be taken to conference where this cloud that has been thrown upon the item for this hospital may be dissipated; at least, that the matter may be again weighed and that this much-needed relief may be brought to these patients suffering from the most dread disease in the world, and who, after many years, in the appropriation made last year, found this relief in sight.

It is an ably administered hospital. The hospital should be and is a pride of every American citizen who knows of it. It is capably administered, receiving the loving attention of thousands of our Colorado citizens; and we earnestly plead that the item may be maintained by the adoption of the amendment and carried through to conference and to final passage.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the committee realizes this is a desirable building. It hopes to see it erected as soon as it may reasonably be done. The language of the bill does not affect any repeal of the authorization to construct the building. It simply takes away the appropriation for constructing it at this time. It does not cancel the project eventually to erect the recreation hall at the hospital in Denver, but it says in effect that we are not justified in doing it now.

The bill does not carry one penny for new construction at any Army post. The reason why it does not is that both the House and the Senate committees feel that when there are so many men without a roof over their heads, we are not justified in spending any of the public money for increasing our facilities at Army posts. For that reason I can not consent to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado, much as I would like to do so. If his amendment were to prevail, we would have to increase the appropriation of new money out of the Treasury to take care of current repairs of barracks and quarters. Already we have cut three-quarters of a million dollars below the Budget estimate, and it can not stand any further cut. If the amendment is adopted and takes this money from us, we will have to find new money in the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I invite attention to page 27. On that page is a reference to Chanute Field in the State of Illinois. I have had amendments tendered me covering the situation and I am asked to present them to the Senate. I defer to do so and for this reason: The authorizations for the expenditures referred to on page 27 still remain. The expenditures are merely suspended because of a lack of money in the Treasury. It is announced that as soon as money is available to undertake the improvements, they will again be reinstated. With this understanding with the War Department and having it borne out by the eminent chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I refrain from pressing the amendments at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] has an amendment pending and also a notice that he would move to suspend the rule. It will take two or three hours of debate to dispose of his amendment. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] also has an amendment which he wishes to propose, which can be disposed of very quickly. Neither of the Senators is here now and I have assured them that at this point I would ask for a recess.

I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 11, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Infinite Spirit, we rejoice that Thou art eternal light, eternal morning, and eternal noon. We thank Thee that Thou art our Father—the purest, the most just, and the most compassionate God who ever entered the conception of man. May the spirit of our divine Master be breathed into all hearts; let it be diffused so that it shall touch all duty and life. With deep solicitude and earnestness may

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I stated yesterday, this bill has some very important legislation attached to it. While I do not intend to object to sending this matter to conference, unless it be absolutely necessary, I do think it is perfectly proper and right at this stage of the proceedings, because of the importance of the legislation I refer to, to get a little information and to know a little more about it.

When the matter of the reorganization of the various Government departments was first brought up in the beginning of the Seventy-second Congress I very strongly advocated giving certain prerogatives to the Chief Executive to make changes, consolidations, and reorganizations of various Federal agencies for the purpose of economy and also to bring about more efficiency in a great many respects. As far as I know, the present President has never suggested that he be given the right to absolutely abolish definite functions of the Government that have been established by law, certainly not without a review by Congress. It seems to me that the Democratic majority took a very strong position against this action at the beginning of the present Seventy-second Congress. I can not understand the radical change of position on the other side of the House. It seems to me that it is one of two things—either that the Democrats in the House take the position of opposing giving any such authority to a Republican President for absolutely political reasons, a purely partisan position, or else from the experience of the Democratic Party in running the House during the last two years the leaders have made up their minds that the party is absolutely inefficient to meet the responsibility of a majority in the House of Representatives and now propose to pass to the new Executive the responsibilities and duties placed on the legislative branch under the Constitution.

Mr. BLANTON. Ah, bunk!

Mr. SNELL. That is all right; I am just telling what you propose to do, and I do not wonder you are ashamed of it.

Mr. BLANTON. That statement is so ridiculous that nobody is paying any attention to it.

Mr. SNELL. And I do not yield. The gentleman can make any statement that he desires in his own time; and if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] disputes my statement, let him read the statement of the Speaker in last night's papers.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, permit me to suggest to the gentleman from New York that this bill went over to the Senate and that certain amendments were there added to the bill. The matter now is deadlocked, unless we can get the bill to conference and get the thing threshed out. The gentleman from New York well knows that the matters about which the gentleman is complaining, that were added in the Senate, are legislative, and that they must come back to the House for consideration by the House. Either this bill must go to conference in this way or it will be necessary to get a rule upon it to send it to conference.

Mr. SNELL. I entirely agree with the gentleman. I intend to let it go to conference, for I have no intention of delaying any legislation during this session, as your record is bad enough now; but I think we ought to have the right to make a few observations before it goes, because this is the proper time to discuss some of the matters connected with this new legislation. I remember very well the opposition of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, relative to abdicating the rights of Congress and giving them over to the executive department.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from New York can get the position of the gentleman from Missouri now, and I hope he will remember it. I am willing to let the bill go to conference, but I am not willing to make the Congress of the United States appear like a lot of cowards, and I shall not vote for any proposition such as is proposed in the newspapers to-day. The Senate amendment is too drastic. It should be modified. If we do pass such a proposal as the one outlined in the papers, we are nothing but a lot of cowards, refusing to do our constitutional duty. I am willing and ready at any time to perform my duty, and I do not ask that for political or other reasons that the Chief Executive take over the responsibilities that are mine. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. I am very much pleased to hear the gentleman from Missouri say that. I wanted to get some expressions of that kind from the other side of the aisle.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, the gentleman has secured it from me. I have some confidence in the Democratic conferees, because I do not believe that they are going to be stampeded by any such suggestion as has been advanced in this morning's press.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly, if I have the floor.

Mr. RANKIN. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that I am willing to support the Senate bill. I believe a great many of these departments and bureaus should be consolidated. But I do not want the House conferees to take the statement in yesterday's paper as instructions, or as representing the unanimous sentiment of this side of the House. We are not willing to abdicate our functions as legislators, nor are we willing to pile all our responsibilities into the lap of the incoming President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, personally I am in favor of sending this bill to conference, but it seems to me, inasmuch as the House is marking time waiting for the Committee on Appropriations to get ready to report another supply bill, that we might use a little time to good advantage to discuss the legislation put on the bill in the Senate, long enough, at least, to ascertain what it attempts to do and to express ourselves briefly upon the merits of it.

The Senate has incorporated in this appropriation bill some very important and far-reaching legislation. An examination of the Senate proceedings as they appear in the RECORD indicates that there was very little debate on some phases of the legislation in the Senate, and certainly we ought to know, at least, what is in the bill before we send it to conference. I have confidence in the conferees, and as far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to forego forming any judgment on the conference report until it is submitted to the House, but the membership of the House ought to realize before the bill goes to conference that one of the Senate amendments attempts to authorize and does authorize, if it is constitutional, the President of the United States not only to consolidate and merge all executive agencies of the Government as he sees fit, but it also authorizes him to abolish any and all executive agencies, without any veto on his orders being left to the Congress.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that this matter is now all beside the point. No one can anticipate what the conferees may do.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, have I the floor?

The SPEAKER. Of course, this is all by sufferance of the House. The gentleman may have the floor by reserving the right to object.

The Chair is not attempting to interfere with the gentleman. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD] is attempting to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have yielded to the gentleman from Michigan, but I hope he will not take so much of the time of the House in discussing this matter, which will properly be discussed when the conference report comes back to the House.

Mr. MAPES. We have ample time, and it is unusual, in my experience, to have conferees urge that a bill of this importance be sent to conference without any comment being made upon it. I do not care to take very much of the time of the House or to make any extended remarks, but I have given some attention to this matter of consolidation of departments and I would like to have a few minutes to briefly discuss the matter.

Personally I am in favor of giving the President just as much power as can be given him to consolidate and merge the departments of the Government, so as to prevent duplication and waste, and to promote efficiency. I would not advocate, however, giving him absolute power to abolish executive agencies, without any veto power whatsoever being left to Congress.

The incoming Congress is going to be controlled by the party of which the Executive is a member, and it seems to me the part of wisdom and the part of discretion to put into this provision some sort of veto power on the action of the President in eliminating executive agencies. It is giving undue authority to the President to clothe him with power to abolish without any restriction whatever any or all of the executive agencies of the Government, not only the independent commissions and establishments, but the different bureaus in the departments as well, all of which have been created by laws passed by Congress. Do you want to give one man the power to abolish the Federal Board for Vocational Education; the United States Board of Mediation; the Interstate Commerce Commission; the Federal Farm Board; the Federal Trade Commission; the United States Tariff Commission; the Federal Reserve Board; the Power Commission; the Radio Commission; or the Civil Service Commission? Any or all of those commissions could be abolished by the President without any veto power on the part of Congress if this legislation is passed as put on here by the Senate and if it is constitutional to clothe the President with that authority.

There has been some comment in the public press about going still farther. I am not concerned about that at present. I am willing to pass upon that after the conferees have brought in their report, but it does seem to me that the conferees should give serious attention to the question of putting in here some veto provision similar to that which was put in on the economy legislation at the last session of Congress, in so far as the power of the President to abolish agencies and commissions of the Government is concerned.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Having in mind the reorganization of all departments of my State, and the results thereof, it will be possible, under this sweeping authorization of reorganization, to substitute new designations for the departments that may be combined, to only apparently abolish a great many offices, only to get rid of even civil-service employees that new ones may be substituted, and create the opportunity of making a large number of new appointments. In spite of these patriotic utterances of to-day, we may be forgiven for a little suspicion that this may be the final result, because we have not been assured here of any more real economy than was contained in the recent plan submitted by President Hoover.

Mr. MAPES. The observation of the gentleman from Massachusetts is very pertinent. But for me, although I think to give the President unlimited power to abolish any bureau or agency that he sees fit is going too far, I am willing to go along with that provision in the bill if it is necessary, in order to give the President this other power to consolidate and reorganize departments and do away with duplication and waste.

This and preceding Congresses have refused to give the President power to reorganize the departments, to say nothing of abolishing them; and it should be kept in mind that this administration has never asked Congress to clothe the President with any such power as is proposed in the Senate amendment. Among other objections to the provision there is serious doubt as to its constitutionality. The independent commissions and the bureaus in the different departments have been created by express statutory enactments. Can they be abolished without the passage of legislation expressly repealing the statutes which created them?

Criticism has been made of the President, because he did not submit to Congress sooner than he did a reorganization plan as authorized by the economy act of the last Congress. That criticism overlooks the fact that the economy act was not passed until the closing days of the last session. The President had to submit this program to Congress. This he did as soon as Congress reconvened. He could not have acted any more promptly than he did.

I yield the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] criticized the Democratic side of the House because we preferred to have our incoming President do this reorganizing himself.

They accuse us of partisan politics. The gentleman from New York knows that if ever there is to be any consolidation or grouping of bureaus it must be done by the President and not by Congress. He is not going to get Congress to do it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to make this statement without interruption.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will not yield, then?

Mr. BLANTON. Not right now. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who unseated the gentleman from Connecticut, took over the reins of the Republican organization here, he told his Republican colleagues that every time a Democrat got up he would hit him on the head; that every time a Democratic proposition came up he would hit it on the head. He is merely carrying out his promises to his Republican colleagues. He is trying to hit something on the head. This is just part of his program. He promised when he unseated Tilson that he would hit something on the head, and now he is trying to fulfill his promises. Is not that so? [Laughter.]

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that when Democrats raise their heads in opposition to economic proposals I try to hit them, or when they attempt to do foolish things I call attention to it.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what the gentleman said when he unseated Tilson.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will have some trouble on his side before they organize the next Congress. If I were he, I would not have so much to say about it.

Mr. BLANTON. No; we Democrats are all working together over here. The gentleman knows if he wants consolidation he has got to leave it to the President, and that is what we propose to do. The gentleman from New York is not going to stop this bill from going to conference.

Mr. SNELL. I said I did not even want to, so what is the gentleman's argument?

Mr. BLANTON. We are prepared for his knocking things on the head. He and others can object but that will not stop it. We have a rule at the desk which sends the bill to conference. So, if the gentleman objects, we will pass the rule.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say I am entirely willing and anxious for this bill to go to conference, but it is fraught with more importance than any measure that has come into the Congress since I have been a Member of it, not only as to the proposed legislation that abdicates the right to legislate with reference to the creation of offices or the abolition of offices, but as to a number of other amendments that are of vital importance to every Member of this Congress.

Especially do I invite your attention to section 201, which was eliminated in the Senate. If this section remains out of this bill it is going to permit the reestablishment of all the salaries we attempted to reduce at the last session. It is going to make it possible, if you please, to raise salaries all the way from $200 to $2,000 a year while at the same time it discriminates against many, especially every soldier and sailor in the Army and Navy of the United States. This is another thing of vital importance that I think everybody is interested in and I ask every Member of this Congress, without regard to his politics, to carefully study these proposals. In the interest of good government, in the interest of fair play, every section of this legislation that has been proposed on the Senate side should receive the closest possible attention of each individual Member of this House, so that when we bring the bill back here, as we will have to bring it back, we can understand its content and be able to vote intelligently upon the different proposals.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and of course I shall not object, I wish to make a very brief statement in reply to what the gentleman from New York said on yesterday and repeated again to-day about the attitude of the Democrats in the House of Representatives on this question of giving authority to the President to reorganize governmental departments, and so forth, and to eliminate useless activities.

The gentleman has forgotten the record made in the last Congress. The Democrats voted to give a Republican President broad and sweeping powers to reorganize, consolidate, and eliminate useless Government bureaus.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there for a short question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. SNELL. What became of his recommendations when they reached the House of Representatives?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am coming right to that.

What did the President do with the power we gave him? He did nothing whatever with it all summer long, until Congress convened in December, when he sent up here a plan of reorganization that even his own representative, the Director of the Budget, said ought not to be adopted, but should be left for the Democratic administration to take up. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. We gave him that authority at the last end of the session. He presented his recommendations to Congress the very first day he was able to present them, but the Democrats were bound by caucus to vote against every one of them without even reading them.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, of course, of course. Any sensible man who would carefully study and analyze the plan the President sent up would see it was absolutely impossible, just as was pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] in a radio address made some time ago and put in the RECORD.

What did the President do? He tore apart certain governmental activities and then slapped them together, scrambled them together, and sent them up here calling it a plan of reorganization with no suggestion whatever as to any tangible saving in money or any benefit from the standpoint of efficiency.

The only two reasons for consolidation would be, first, efficiency, and, second, economy. So far as I am concerned, I think a whole lot of unnecessary fuss is being made about it anyway, because it would not amount to so very much if you eliminated entirely every one of these independent establishments. It would only take about $56,000,000 out of the Budget. It is much ado about nothing so far as the purely independent establishments are concerned. There are, no doubt, many places in the executive departments where there could be substantial savings by reorganization and coordination.

An examination of the plan the President sent to Congress showed the remarkable and startling fact that he had taken bureaus and activities one after another and slapped them together without once conferring or advising with the heads of the respective departments or anybody in Congress who ought to have accurate information as to what the effect of that consolidation would be.

I can name bureau after bureau that the President undertook to consolidate without ever securing accurate information from the activities affected. So, what happened when the plan was suggested here? The Democrats in Congress said, in effect, "We still affirm our belief that there ought to be consolidation, reorganization, and elimination; but it is on the eve of a new administration, and the facts show that this matter has not had the careful, logical, and orderly consideration it ought to have, and the whole matter ought to go over until a new administration comes in."

The Democrats stand to-day where they stood a year ago when they gave this authority to your Republican President. We are willing to give ample and adequate authority to the President of the United States to make the needed consolidations and reorganizations, because, for one, I believe that you will never get them unless we do give such power to the President.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman does not contend that the authority granted to the President here is at all parallel with the authority granted to the President at the last session of Congress?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think we are giving broader power and that we ought to give broader power to the President.

I should be willing to give broader power to your Republican President if he would do the job, and the gentleman knows that during the last 12 years these bureaus and departments have been growing and expanding all over the face of the earth and the Chief Executive could have come to the Congress with an orderly program to reorganize and consolidate these bureaus had he wanted to do so.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken that the President had 12 years to do all these things. As a matter of fact the President consolidated every one of the functions of government that it was possible for him to consolidate without taking upon himself legislation that it is the duty of this body to enact.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, whatever may have been anybody's attitude in the past, there are a few things we do know, and one of them is that Government expenditures have steadily mounted and that every effort to reduce Government expenses has so far been a failure.

Here we have a simple proposal to send a nine hundred and forty-odd million dollar bill to conference and we find ourselves engaged in a political discussion. Gentlemen point over here and say, "You Democrats took such and such a position in the past; what are you going to do about it now."

I do not think at this time anybody gives a continental what position anybody took in the past. [Applause.] The time has come when something has got to be done to radically reduce Government expenditures; and it seems, as every effort to accomplish this has failed in the past, it would be practical to put the power in the hands of the incoming President and hold him responsible for results. As everything else has failed, let us give the necessary power to the President.

With 12,000,000 people idle, with the price of commodities far below the cost of production, with hungry people walking the streets in every city begging for something to eat, we ought not to be quibbling about what the majority did or what the minority did or what position some one took in the past. I think it is time to rise above all this, as we did during the war, and put country first, because I say to you, my brethren of the House of Representatives, this is the most serious moment in all the peace-time history of this country; and unless Congress and the President can bring about radical reduction in expenses, it may be that there will be a clean-out of the House and the Senate and somebody will be put here who can and will accomplish this.

The situation in the Nation is very, very serious. In places the attitude of conservative men and women has reached the danger point, and I do say the time has come when autocratic power to reduce governmental cost should be put in the hands of somebody who can be trusted, because it has been proven in the past that wherever you try to reduce expenses, there is always a reason why you must not touch this thing, and you must not touch that thing, and you must not touch this department and you must not touch that department, and in the end nothing is done. You all know this is so, whether you are Democrats or Republicans, or whatever you may be.

I pray God that He give me strength to put the good of my country above party every minute that I shall be permitted to remain here for the balance of my life. So long as this depression continues, our duty is perfectly plain. [Applause.] I am unworthy to sit here if I play politics when the distress of my country is so unspeakably great. You can charge that I am saying this for political effect, if you want to, but as the Lord God is my judge, I know it is not said for any such purpose. My life is largely behind me. I can have very little concern, I hope, except the good of my country, and I have seen Government expenses mount and mount and mount until the time has come, my friends, to call a halt. Let us adjourn politics for a while and address ourselves to the task that we know is ours—the bringing down of the cost of government, even though it becomes necessary to cut off an arm or to pluck out an eye. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. We are proceeding now under a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. DYER. I give notice that I will not object to the gentleman from Illinois, but I shall object to any further debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri gives notice that he will demand the regular order.

Mr. MURPHY. Let him demand it now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to object unless I am given some time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is unfair. No Member can hold up the House in such a fashion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that a year ago, when this matter was before the House, I urged that plenary power should be given the President to consolidate and reorganize, and if necessary in proper cases to eliminate and abolish Federal activities.

We will never succeed in reducing expenses of the Federal Government until that power is lodged somewhere. Not only in this House, but during the campaign, I criticized the majority for having grudgingly given the power to the present President with conditions which prevented successful operation. What happened? The House of Representatives was able to veto the action taken by the President by a simple House resolution, as it did a few days ago.

I am in favor of giving the President every power we can possibly give him within the bounds of the Constitution. I think if we examine the Senate amendments closely we will find that the power given to the President is more acceptable than we believe now. I call attention to section 403, paragraph (c), where the power is given to abolish the whole or any part of an executive agency, but in paragraph (d) it is provided that the President shall not have the authority to transfer executive departments and functions thereof. Upon proper examination we will find that these provisions are not as objectionable as some think they are.

I for one, knowing that there is absolutely no other way in which Government functions and expenditures can be reduced, am willing that the incoming Democratic control shall go as far as it can in giving the President authority to curtail and eliminate the enormous expenditure of these governmental agencies. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I spoke along these lines in debate here on March 15 of last year, and on July 8, 1932, I made the following statement in the House:

> There is only one way in which any considerable and permanent reduction of the Federal Budget can be obtained. That is by dismantling and discontinuing activities, services, bureaus, boards, and commissions which are performing functions not strictly or necessarily of Federal character or even contemplated by the Constitution of the United States. They have been established on the ground that they promote the "general welfare" of the people in many relations and include services and interests which have widespread sympathy and support throughout the country. Broadly speaking, these services and interests are: Public health; education; conservation of natural resources; aids to agriculture, labor, industry, trade, aviation, and the merchant marine; and public buildings and public parks. It would be possible to curtail the activities of many of these departments and bureaus and to permanently eliminate some of them from the National Budget, but doubtless vehement and voluminous protests would arise from large groups and many individuals who are directly benefited by the maintenance of these activities.
> If the campaign for any considerable reduction of Federal taxation is to succeed, it must address itself to the objects and purposes for which taxes are collected and spent, not merely to possible efficiency and economy in the use of appropriations or in the expenditure of taxes. The appropriations themselves must be eliminated, not merely curtailed or controlled. These trees in the National Treasury forest must be uprooted and destroyed, not merely trimmed and conserved for future growth.

The only hope of the Federal taxpayer for permanent relief from his onerous burdens lies in the President of the United States, to whom Congress should grant the authority, * * * without interference even by Congress itself, to reduce expenditures, and advance efficiency in the executive departments, which are constitutionally under his management.

Mr. Speaker, those are my views, whether the President or the Congress be Republican or Democratic; whether the task was to be performed by the outgoing administration or will be undertaken by the new régime after March 4. If our friends across the aisle and their President elect will devote themselves sincerely to this great cause, I say earnestly more power and honor to them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 373, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 373

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 13520, with Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, to the end that all Senate amendments be, and the same are, disagreed to and a conference is requested with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, objection to sending the bill to conference has made necessary the calling up of the resolution which has been read from the Clerk's desk. Inasmuch as there has been considerable comment upon the legislation that has been added to the bill in the Senate, inasmuch as there has been considerable debate on both sides, unless it is otherwise desired, I move the previous question.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. Merely to say that we are not opposed to the adoption of the rule. The purpose which was sought to be accomplished by the minority leader yesterday has been served already, and we are willing to have the matter go to a vote.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 327, nays 1, not voting 99, as follows:

R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13710, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferes: Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. HASTINGS, Mr. GRANFIELD, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. FRENCH.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. SANDLIN, Mr. HART, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SUMMERS of Washington.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a good idea if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] were to announce the program for to-morrow.

Mr. RAINEY. To-morrow we will consider the District of Columbia appropriation bill, under general debate, and nothing else.

FRANK D. WHITFIELD

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, this is Private Calendar day, and the Clerk will call the calendar, beginning where the order of the House directed.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6461) for the relief of Frank D. Whitfield.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Colorado going to finally object to the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I do not know. The gentleman from South Carolina may have an explanation for the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this time because I believe I can show the gentleman from Colorado that this bill ought not to be objected to. When this man was drafted into the service in Alabama he was disabled, as the report shows. The two last fingers of his hand were clasped [indicating] on the palm of the hand in this fashion, and the other fingers held in this way, so that it would be physically impossible for him to handle a rifle. He reported to Camp Wheeler, in Georgia. While there, on the 4th of February, he received a telegram that his brother was dead at Toccoa, Ga.

He asked leave of absence to go to his brother's funeral. The lieutenant in command of the company, a man by the name of Phames, as is substantiated by his own affidavit, said, "Yes; you can go home, and you can stay. We are going to discharge you for physical disability," and the lieutenant loaned him the money with which to go to his brother's funeral. He went. He stayed in uniform until May of that year when the sheriff, thinking he was a deserter, called up the authorities, as the testimony shows, and asked them, "Do you want this man Whitfield there? I have got him under arrest." They said, "No; we do not want him." Then he remained at Toccoa, Ga., until 1921, when the clean-up squad of the ex-service men were going around asked him why he did not apply for his $60 bonus. He said, "All right; I will do so." Then it was discovered for the first time that he did not have a regular paper discharge. The same sheriff, hoping to make the $50 reward, arrested him and took him to Columbia, S. C., where he was held and where he was discharged by order of the War Department, not tried as a deserter, but discharged by order of the War Department on the 14th day of March, 1921, and I have here a certified copy of the order of discharge on the ground of physical disability.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is it the contention of the gentleman that this injury to his arm was received in the service?

Mr. McSWAIN. No, indeed. It was received prior to his induction into the service. He ought not have been drafted.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then why should he be put upon the pension roll of the United States Government at the present time?

Mr. McSWAIN. He is not asking for that.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Oh, yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. There is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The bill provides that in the administration of laws "conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, he shall be considered to have been honorably discharged."

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. That simply restores his right, as if he had never been dismissed with a dishonorable discharge. This man was sent home by order of his commanding officer. The commanding officer told him not to come back, and this bill merely puts him back where he was before he was accused of desertion.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Now, the gentleman does not believe that, although he may be repeating what somebody told him.

Mr. BLANTON. I am repeating what the record shows.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No. What the man said, but not what the officer said.

Mr. BLANTON. I am repeating what the committee which investigated this matter said. They said that in their report. I have no interest whatever in this case, but whenever a man's commanding officer "tells him to go home, that he is in a crippled condition, and that he is going to be discharged anyway and there is no use of his coming back," that man ought to rely on what his commanding officer tells him, and I think this is a deserving bill. The committee recommends that it be passed, and I have only repeated just what the committee has found as a fact.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. On account of those statements in support of this case, I therefore withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Frank D. Whitfield, who served as a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, Army serial number 1348550, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on March 14, 1921: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "no," strike out the words "back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," and insert the following: "bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the World War adjusted compensation act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled to by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "honorably," and after the word "discharged" insert the words "under honorable conditions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLIFTON C. COX

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9175, for the relief of Clifton C. Cox.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill ought not to pass, because the passage of this bill would establish a bad precedent. Where a man enters a gambling game and loses his money he must be a good sport and take his medicine. He should not be a baby and want his money back. He should not take a gun and go to the men who won his money and make them dig up the money which he lost. This bill would approve of such unsportsmanlike acts. I know the Speaker is not in favor of that kind of a bill, and I am not in favor of it. I object. [Laughter.]

ERNEST LINWOOD STEWART

The Clerk called the next bill (H. R. 589) for the relief of Ernest Linwood Stewart.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CANFIELD. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will be glad to reserve it until the gentleman can explain the matter.

Mr. CANFIELD. This is a very worthy claim. If the gentleman from Colorado will look at the report he will find that this man was in the service in 1918 and 1919 and that his present condition is due, in the opinion of his physicians, to exposure which he was subjected to while working in the navy yard in 1918 and 1919. This party does not live in my district. He lives in Washington, D. C., and I looked into the claim very thoroughly before I introduced the bill and considered it a very worthy claim or I would not have introduced the bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The statement in regard to the claim shows that he is making claim for injuries received in May, 1914.

Mr. CANFIELD. And aggravated by exposure while working in the navy yard in 1918 and 1919, in an unheated shop that was being constructed in the Washington Navy Yard during very cold weather. This caused his physical condition to gradually grow worse, and in the spring of 1919 he became so badly crippled in his spine and feet that he was no longer able to work. From that time up to this he has gradually grown worse and is at the present time bedridden and unable to even turn over in his bed without assistance.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The employees' compensation act under which these cases are considered went into effect September 7, 1916. As far as I know, during the Seventy-second Congress no one has been given the right to come under the employees' compensation act for consideration of a claim for an injury which happened prior to the date of the enactment of the act. It is the general custom that has applied to a number of cases. I have no doubt this is a very meritorious case, and I sympathize with the claimant and with the gentleman, but under the circumstances it would not be fair to all the other cases to permit this man to have a favor which has been denied to the others.

Mr. CANFIELD. This case was aggravated by exposure while in the service after the law was enacted and I feel should be passed.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOMINIC FRACAPANE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1567, to reimburse Dominic Fracapane for injuries sustained in an accident with a Government-owned motor truck.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this bill is a good example of bills improperly prepared, and I do not want to be taken as criticizing the Committee on Claims, its chairman, or anybody else. I think the Members themselves are generally responsible and I think it is their neglect, but the fact is we lose a lot of time on the floor of the House in considering private bills to which we have to make so many amendments. Could we save the time taken to make these amendments more private bills could be considered.

This bill, Calendar No. 695, does not even show the date on which the accident happened. All these bills that are for a tort action in law ought to show the date so that when we pass a bill the bill will show on its face the date the accident happened. The bill ought to show the place, the city or town in the United States where the accident happened. The bill ought to contain a clause that it is in full settlement of all claims against the Government growing out of the particular accident so that another bill could not be introduced for the same claim. In addition to that, the bill should be so worded that it shows on its face for what accident we are compensating the claimant.

There are four separate amendments I would be compelled to make before I could permit this bill to pass. In addition, in these tort action bills, where an individual is the claimant, there ought to be a provision incorporating the usual attorneys' fees clause. Were these details taken care of before the bill is placed on the calendar it would save a great deal of time on the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, now that the gentleman has finished his lecture——

Mr. STAFFORD. Not lecture; dissertation.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, dissertation; it is extensive enough to be a dissertation. The gentleman from West Virginia has lectured this committee time and time again, and always without intending to criticize the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Without intending to criticize the chairman.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, never the chairman. Now, as a matter of fact, a private bill was submitted to the committee by the gentleman from West Virginia. I recall that it was given such careful consideration in executive session that the gentleman complimented us.

As the gentleman says, we waste a great deal of time because we have to amend these bills. The only reason we consent to the amendments in these cases is to save time that the objectors are responsible for using. We consent to these little technical amendments just to satisfy you gentlemen.

The gentleman makes the criticism that there is no date of the accident in the bill. The date of the accident appears in the report, and the location of the accident likewise appears in the report. This is the last case to criticize, because not only do we state the location of the accident but we even give the House a picture of the accident. We have done everything but give you a movietone picture of the accident.

Now, to be serious for a minute, I was going to ask the House to pass this bill. This is the first bill since I have been chairman of the Committee on Claims that has been reported for the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], than whom there is no more careful man in this House. I was hoping there would be no objection. In view of the fact the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is to leave us, and in view of his splendid, careful work on this calendar and on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, as a tribute of respect to him and as a token of our confidence in him, I was going to ask that we pass this bill just as it is without any objection; and I am sure the gentleman from West Virginia will go along with me.

Mr. BACHMANN. I would like to, and especially in the case of this bill of all the bills we have got to consider here this afternoon, but this is one I have marked that I must object to for the reason the report very frankly and correctly shows, as I read it, that the responsibility for the accident is attributable to the negligence of the injured boy. Therefore, there is no negligence on the part of the Government.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is stating the conclusion of the post-office inspector, and that conclusion is based on his imagination, because the post-office inspector believes that this boy deliberately put out his foot in the back of the truck so that his foot could be run over.

If the gentleman reads the report carefully, the gentleman can come to no conclusion but that the inspector added something to the situation. This truck was on the sidewalk where the boy had a right to be. The boy was not in the middle of the street. The truck came up where no truck belonged and where the boy did belong, the sidewalk.

I know the gentleman likes to object in the early stages of the consideration of the Private Calendar, but I hope he does not take it out on this bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I shall be compelled to object. I object.

HORACE G. KNOWLES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4040, for the relief of Horace G. Knowles.

Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. HANCOCK of New York reserved the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this statement about this bill. There is one feature of it that the House ought to know about before it goes any farther. There was a bill passed in a former Congress, December 12, 1928, being Private Act No. 309 of the Seventieth Congress, which paid this man $1,666.67, and that bill provided it should be in full settlement of all claims that this party had against the United States Government.

Whenever a bill has this kind of provision in it, I do not think a subsequent Congress ought to go behind it and grant an additional amount. This would set a bad precedent, and I wanted this one matter to be known to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not care to take up any further time.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield to the gentleman. I have the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. The former bill was not in full settlement, and if the gentleman will read the private act, he will find it is not in full settlement.

Mr. BLANTON. Private bill No. 309, Seventieth Congress, provides this—that same is "in full settlement against the Government."

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. The language is "in full settlement against the Government there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,666.67 as salary for the period from March 30, 1909, to July 30, 1909."

Mr. BLANTON. But it states "in full settlement."

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. In full settlement for that period.

Mr. BLANTON. When a bill provides that the sum appropriated is "in full settlement," no subsequent Congress ought to reopen the case and allow an additional amount. We must protect such acts of a previous Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN PITKANEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4067, for the relief of John Pitkanen.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement, and would like to have the attention of the gentlemen at the table.

I heard the statements made a few moments ago by the distinguished and hard-working gentleman from Colorado on the bill (Calendar No. 694), that after a certain date it had been agreed not to pay one year's compensation to those injured in the Federal service shortly before the passage of the act referred to. What was the date of the passage of that act?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. September 7, 1916.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not ask the gentleman to repeat his statement, but I see here that the report must be in error, because it speaks of an act of a much earlier date. This man was injured March 9, 1915.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. The report shows that this man was injured before the passage of the 1916 act and that he was compensated under the terms of the 1908 act and received one year's pay under the terms of that act.

Mr. PITTENGER. The report is in error as to the date of the act.

Mr. HOPE. But this man did receive one year's pay as provided by the act in force at the time of the injury.

Mr. PITTENGER. If the gentleman will yield, he received compensation under the old act of 1908. He received one year's pay, and that was all they could pay. Subsequent to that, we had this new compensation act which entitles a man under such conditions to more compensation. The compensation he received for this injury was very inadequate, wholly inadequate, and the Compensation Commission has said that he ought to have more compensation, and they are willing to entertain the claim, and that is all that this bill provides.

Mr. HOPE. Does not the Compensation Commission say it is a matter of policy that must be determined by the Congress?

Mr. PITTENGER. And Congress has done this in several cases.

Mr. HOPE. Not in this Congress, as I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the point I wanted to bring out. My impression is that bills of this kind were passed early in the last session of this Congress. Now, here is a most humble man, who has spent much more in hospital fees than he was ever paid under the previous inadequate act. He is still an invalid and his wife has had to act as surgeon and nurse and they live in a very remote place. Acts of this kind were passed repeatedly and we are informed now that by some rule, perhaps, of the Claims Committee——

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. RAMSPECK. We are wasting too much time on these matters, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman is going to object, he should object now and save time. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOPE. I am compelled to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. If the gentleman wants to save time, let us save some time. If the gentleman will withhold his demand for the regular order until I can complete my statement, I will withdraw the point.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman who reserved the right to object will state that his mind is open in the matter, I shall withdraw my demand for the regular order, but if he is going to object, I want him to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can complete my statement within three minutes. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. HOPE. I am willing to have the gentleman complete his statement.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is the gentleman going to object after the gentleman completes his statement?

Mr. HOPE. I would rather hear the statement of the gentleman from Washington first.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The report from the Claims Committee favors this bill. Now, then, if we have a rule of the Claims Committee, not an act of Congress, that they will not go back of September 3, 1916, when the compensation law was enacted, then why does the committee report bills and put them on the calendar, take up time to print them, and extend the hope of the claimant, when some Member of Congress, some organization, sub rosa, has come to a decision that they will not permit these bills to pass? Why are the bills reported in good faith by the committee?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I resent the statement of the gentleman as to a sub rosa organization. If he will read the RECORD of the Seventy-second Congress, he will see that compensation claims were the subject of discussion on two different days in this House, and the whole policy of compensation was gone over, not by individuals, but by Members of the House, and the rule was made at that time.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman will yield, the discussion was by two or three Members, but the Claims Committee did not issue any rule of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the condition that we have got ourselves in. I did not intend to imply any personal criticism.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I want to say that the discussion might have been by two or three Members or a half a dozen Members, but the RECORD contains the discussion, and the conclusion of the whole matter was by unanimous consent at the time, and they agreed upon the policy that no case should be approved of that went back prior to the date of the compensation act.

Mr. SCHAFER. Let me say that there was no unanimous-consent agreement contained in the RECORD.

Mr. PITTENGER. None at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So, it appears, after all, that this bill was entitled to be introduced, and entitled to full consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. I object.

SADIE BERMI

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 7040, for the relief of Sadie Bermi.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to tell me what the condition of this claimant is now.

Mr. DYER. The report shows what the injuries were at the time. The statement of the physician is published in the report, but I wanted to present to the House information as to her present condition, and I made the inquiry of Doctor Weber, and he sent me a telegram which I received this morning in which he says that the claimant was injured on February 2, 1928, when struck by this automobile truck. She was rendered unconscious, brought to the hospital, and it was found that she had concussion of the brain, her scalp was lacerated, and there were contusions on her nose and left elbow.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is in the report, but I am interested in her condition to-day.

Mr. DYER. The doctor says that after one year she has had complaints which indicate that her injuries are likely to remain permanent. She now has impaired hearing, frequent attacks of dizziness, severe headaches, and is very nervous and unstable, and her state of mind is such that her confidence in herself because of the injuries is destroyed. Mr. Speaker, she was very badly injured. The report of the department recommends the legislation which is before the House at this time. This is one of the most meritorious claims that could possibly be before the House.

By permission of the House, I insert herewith the telegram to which I have referred:

ST. LOUIS, MO., February 9, 1933.

Congressman L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Miss Sadie Bermi, now Mrs. Sadie Bermi Fredman, was injured by United States mail truck February 2, 1928, was rendered unconscious and brought to hospital immediately. Upon examination following was found concussion of brain, lacerated scalp, contusion of nose, contusion of left elbow, hematoma of scalp, impairment of hearing of left ear, nervousness, and emotional instability. Remained in hospital until February 19, 1928; was treated thereafter for about one year. At present has following complaints, which are likely to remain permanently: Impaired hearing, frequent attacks of dizziness, severe headaches, still very nervous and unstable emotionally. Above complaints have proved very distressing in her daily life, and have destroyed her confidence in herself.

S. WEBER, M. D.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Sadie Bermi, of St. Louis, Mo., to compensate her in full for all claims she may have against the United States arising out of injuries received by her from being struck by an automobile truck belonging to the United States Government in the city of St. Louis on the 2d day of February, 1928.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

M. J. LOBERT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7761) for the relief of M. J. Lobert.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask whether there is any report here from the Department of Justice.

Mr. PITTENGER. I think there is quite a voluminous file in this case.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman tell us what the Department of Justice says about it?

Mr. PITTENGER. Oh, the Department of Justice never recommends that Congress pay out any money that has ever gotten into the Treasury. I spent two or three days going over the files, and if the gentleman wants to he can read them, but the facts and conclusions are all set forth.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Are the facts as given by the department in conformity with these facts?

Mr. PITTENGER. Yes; everything that I have said in this statement is correct.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, there is an intimation here that the criminal was finally convicted, but the report is not very clear in that respect.

Mr. KLEBERG. The criminal was convicted and given an 18 months' suspended sentence.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Why is the payment being made to the widow? Would it not be properly made to the estate? Can the gentleman assure us that the widow is the estate?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; the widow is the estate.

Mr. BLANTON. Are there any children?

Mr. KLEBERG. There is one son. The widow is the estate of the deceased.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty I had with this case may have been removed by the gentleman's statement. The report, as I read it, was that the criminal was discovered a year and a half afterwards in the prison at Little Rock.

Mr. KLEBERG. I think the gentleman will find that it was within the same year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question I am more interested in is whether the criminal was afterwards arrested and punished for the act for which the bond was given.

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And he went to the penitentiary.

Mr. PITTENGER. The answer to the gentleman's question is "yes."

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the report of the solicitor to indicate that.

Mr. PITTENGER. It is in the records submitted to the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. So far as my difficulty is concerned that answers the objection that we have to these cases of reimbursing sureties. I can see no objection to it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, there is a number of such cases as this, where a bond is forfeited and judgment is entered; and even if the defendant in the cast is brought into the court the next day and sentenced and punished, there is no way at present by which the money can be recovered. The Treasury Department solicitor has decided, in view of the decisions of the Attorney General, that in no case can this money be returned by the Government unless the United States attorney will recommend that there is a question about the ability to collect it. Something ought to be done in these matters. We can not come to the House through the Committee on Claims in all these cases.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. During the eight years that I was on the circuit bench I had a practice of entering judgment nisi, but holding the matter up until the surety could have an opportunity to produce the defendant.

Mr. DYER. That is in a State court.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and if the defendant were produced within a reasonable time, final judgment was not entered. There is no such practice in the Federal courts, unfortunately. They do not give the surety ample time to produce the defendant. In this case the surety went to work and hunted up the criminal, found him, and produced him. He happened to be in the penitentiary.

Mr. DYER. I know of several cases where the surety has gone to great expense in hunting up the defendant and bringing him into court. He has been tried, has pleaded guilty, and has been punished, and yet not one dollar have the sureties been able to recover.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Josephine Lobert, widow of M. J. Lobert, the sum of $1,632.68, representing judgment in the amount of $1,632.68, secured to the United States for the United States District Court of the Western District of Texas against M. J. Lobert, on account of bond of $1,500, for the appearance of Johnnie (Jack) Wander (Wunder), charged with a violation of the motor vehicle theft act, which bond was forfeited by reason of the failure of the said defendant to appear, and $132.68 being court costs, paid into court on December 31, 1929, and deposited by the United States marshal for the western district of Texas, and covered into the Treasury of the United States on January 9, 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "to," insert "Mary Josephine Lobert, widow."

Page 2, after the figures "1930," insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DYER: Page 2, line 1, after the word "the" and before the word "motor," insert the word "National."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary Josephine Lobert."

FRANK A. FAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9435, for the relief of Frank A. Fain.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOSEPH T. RYERSON & SON (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10170, authorizing adjustment of the claim of Joseph T. Ryerson & Son (Inc.).

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Joseph T. Ryerson & Son (Inc.) for $135.08 on account of certain brass angles furnished to the Navy Department under contract No. N251s-16622, dated December 7, 1929, and to allow not exceeding $112.55 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $112.55, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NELLIE OLIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8619, for the relief of Nellie Oliver.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring, rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged enlisted men Robert Oliver, alias John Lear, deceased, who was a member of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 6th day of July, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I notice that this bill is for the relief of Nellie Oliver, and in the body of the bill it refers to one Robert Oliver. Nellie Oliver is not mentioned in any way. I move that the bill be amended so that the title will conform to the text, or amend the bill and place the widow's name therein.

Mr. ROGERS. Nellie Oliver is the widow.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I notice the uniform practice seems to be to use the phrase "under honorable conditions" rather than "honorably discharged," and I suggest that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "honorably" and insert after the word "discharged" the following: "under honorable conditions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition as far as the correction of the title is concerned. We can not come to the relief of a dead person. The body of the bill shows that this is to virtually give pension privileges to a soldier who is now dead.

Mr. ROGERS. It is for the relief of the widow.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not show apparently in the body of the bill that Nellie Oliver is the widow, but there must be some record somewhere showing that Nellie Oliver is the widow.

Mr. ROGERS. I can state that as a fact, that Nellie Oliver is the widow, and it is so shown in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as this is a bill for the relief of his widow, and not for the relief of a dead person, the title is correctly stated.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from Wisconsin is setting a precedent here.

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is that we have never passed an act for the relief of a dead person.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But when we pass this act, the widow automatically becomes the beneficiary of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was passed, so as to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the proceedings by which the bill was passed will be vacated.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The bill has not been passed, and it is beyond the stage of objection.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I object to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman can not object. The gentleman from Wisconsin is offering an amendment. It is in order to amend the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer an amendment. After the word "deceased," in line 5, add the following: "whose widow is Nellie Oliver."

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I should like to ask the Speaker if this bill has already been passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has not been passed. Unanimous consent was secured to vacate the proceedings, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is now offering a perfecting amendment.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the gentleman, and the objection now comes too late.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman objects to what?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I object to the gentleman from Wisconsin asking unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The objection came too late. The gentleman has no right to object to an amendment.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I objected for the reason that the bill had already been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 5, after the word "deceased," insert the words "whose widow is Nellie Oliver."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CATHERINE L. MERRILL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8620, for the relief of Catherine L. Merrill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this man, Robert L. Merrill, so the War Department reports, was not mustered into the service until June, 1863. At the time he deserted, in September, he was awaiting court-martial on a charge of assault with intent to rape. Surely, after all these years, there having been a charge of this kind against the man, we ought not to restore him to an honorable status whereby a pension could be granted by the Government.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection to permit me to make a statement?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. It appears this man first enlisted in August, 1862. He was honorably discharged in April, 1863, on account of physical disability. He reenlisted in May, 1863.

Mr. BLANTON. The date he was mustered in was June 20, 1863.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; that is when he reenlisted, May 17, 1863.

Mr. BLANTON. And The Adjutant General says he deserted from that prison while awaiting trial for assault and battery with intent to commit rape. That was the last thing we heard of him during the Civil War, when he was under charge of a heinous offense for which men in some States can be strung up to a limb with a rope.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will permit, this man served actively during the period of hostilities in the Civil War.

Mr. BLANTON. Hostilities were going on, if I remember, through 1863, 1864, and a good part of 1865.

Mr. ROGERS. They were ended as of April 13, 1865. This man served honorably during all the period of hostilities. Upon his death he left a widow in desperate need.

Mr. BLANTON. With a charge of this kind against him, I do not think we should restore him to an honorable position that carries with it a pension for life from the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF THE SONS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10138, to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution in Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I may say in explanation to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this bill was introduced by one of our good friends whom everybody loved, who has gone from us. I should like to see anything we could do for him done, but we are establishing a bad precedent in continually exempting from taxation the property of various organizations. We ought not to extend such exemption to this organization. If we are going to extend it to this one, some day we will be called upon to extend it to the grandsons of so and so, and the great-granddaughters of so and so. I am not in favor of it.

If the gentleman wishes to make some remarks about the bill I will reserve my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman is going to object ultimately, under the ruling of the Speaker yesterday we will proceed with the next case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, ultimately I am going to object to every one of these bills giving to property exemption from taxation.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF THE COLONIAL DAMES OF AMERICA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 570, to exempt from taxation certain property used by the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NATIONAL SOCIETY UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF 1812

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1203, to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and eleven Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAINEY, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

KATHERINE G. TAYLOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1938, for the relief of Katherine G. Taylor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Katherine G. Taylor, superintendent Taylor Hospital, Ridley Park, Pa., the sum of $159. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for medical aid rendered to Laura Mae Kurtz as a result of being struck by United States Army Cadillac truck No. 60186 on March 20, 1929, near Ridley Park, Pa.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ARTHUR K. FINNEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2188, for the relief of Arthur K. Finney.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur K. Finney, of Plymouth, Mass., the sum of $108.77 in full compensation for two carloads of coal totaling 84.19 tons sold to the United States Government and delivered to the Federal building at Plymouth, Mass.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 7, after the word "for," insert the word "handling."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ED SYMES ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3848, for the relief of Ed Symes and wife, Elizabeth Symes, and certain other citizens of the State of Texas.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have a little general information. It appears this is a claim which arose from 10 or 11 years ago, and one which is disputed by the War Department. Can the gentleman from Texas give us some information why this bill comes here at this late date?

Mr. CROSS. A dam was built across the Brazos River at this place some years ago. Quite a flood came after that, and the dam caused the waters to go across the lands where these people lived. Some of their homes were washed away, and some of the land had washed away. All this bill does is to give them the right to go into court to prove the damages that may have been done to them.

Mr. HOPE. The dam was erected in 1919, as I understand it. When did the damage occur?

Mr. CROSS. The damage occurred two or three years after that, but the big flood came along only a few years ago. The old concrete dam stands there.

The gentleman understands that some years ago they put this dam in there on the Brazos River for the purpose of making it navigable. After this dam was built the project was abandoned. When this flood came the dam diverted the waters and caused it to wash away the homes of these people.

Mr. HOPE. The War Department denies any liability on the part of the United States Government. Does the gentleman know the basis of their denial of liability?

Mr. CROSS. The only question would be that this dam was built without any floodgates or anything in the middle of the stream; and I presume the contention would be that if the Government had put proper floodgates in the dam the damage would not have resulted. Of course, that would be a question of proof in court; and if they did not make out a case, they would not get any relief.

Mr. HOPE. The bill permits the claimants to go into the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas. Should not this case be filed in the Court of Claims if the Government gives permission to sue?

Mr. CROSS. To begin with, the parties live there and court is held in Waco, a few miles from where they live. It would be much more convenient both for the Government and for the parties themselves to have the case filed in the District Court for the Western District of Texas. All the claimants are poor people. If the case were filed in the Court of Claims, they would have to come all the way here, which would be an impossibility. Two or three of these parties are colored people. They could not get up here. They would be accessible to the court were they permitted to file the claim as provided in the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ed Symes and wife, Elizabeth Symes; Wade Symes and wife, Pearl Symes; Mrs. Helen Symes Dodson and husband, D. S. Dodson; Howard Evans and wife, Mary Ann Evans; John L. Jones, and Leslie Stegall, all of McLennan County, Tex.; Mrs. Harry Loyd Lincoln, a widow who resides in the county of Carbon, Pa.; and Albert Symes Hunter, of Panama, Canal Zone, all being the sole heirs at law of Albert Symes and wife, Mrs. Sally J. Symes, each deceased, their heirs, legal representatives, executors, administrators, and assigns, any statutes of limitation being waived, are hereby authorized to enter suit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas for the Waco division for the amount alleged to be due said claimants from the United States by reason of the alleged neglect and alleged wrongdoing of the officials and engineers of the United States War Department in the location, erection, and construction of a lock and dam on the Brazos River, in McLennan County, Tex., in the year 1919, that said lock and dam was so erected and constructed at such a point and in such a manner as to cause the river to overflow and cut a new channel across said lands, the overflow washing all of the soil off of said lands, thereby making it worthless for any purpose.

SEC. 2. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said United States District Court for the Western District of Texas to hear and determine all such claims. The action in said court may be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the claimants base their claims, and the petition may be verified by the agent or attorney of said claimants, official letters, reports, and public records, or certified copies thereof may be used as evidence; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said claimants by reason of the alleged negligence and erroneous construction of said lock and dam, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and the Government hereby waives its immunity from suit. And said claimants and the United States of America shall have all rights of appeal or writ of error or other remedy as in similar cases between private persons or corporations: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attoney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district, or other representatives of the Department of Justice, to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 12 months of the date of the approval of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, beginning in line 12, after the figures "1919," strike out the comma and the remainder of section 1; and on page 3, in line 3, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 3, line 4, after the word "claimants," insert "but in no event shall interest be allowed as part of any damages that may be awarded."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SARAH MADDOCKS FERGUSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4064, for the relief of Sarah Maddocks Ferguson.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the author of the bill to the fact that this class of claims is one which the War Department ordinarily has refused to approve. In this case it seems that the War Department has approved the claim, and in view of that fact I am not disposed to object; but I should like to ask the gentleman if he would have any objection to an amendment providing that this shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall be pleased to accept the amendment.

Mr. HOPE. And also the usual attorneys' fee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall accept that.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it appears in the report, as I read it, that this lieutenant colonel stored his goods for three years after he had left this place and that the fire occurred three years after he had gone, while he was in Washington or at some other post. There is a distinct provision of law that in such cases they shall only be reimbursed when the goods are lost while they are saving human life or Government property, which was not the case here at all.

Further along in the calendar there is another claim, based on the same state of facts, where the War Department recommends that the claim be not paid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, I am dependent on the report. This is one of the routine matters that comes into the life of Members from districts where there are Army posts. As the gentleman will recall from reading the report, the War Department states with respect to this claim that settlement has not been made, owing to restricting decisions of the Comptroller General.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman this question? This would extend the law that Congress passed with relation to the destruction of property. This extends it to everyone, whether they come within the provisions of the law or not. Is the gentleman in favor of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can not tell until I learn the equities in each case. Here is the case of an officer sent about here and there on duty, not able to move his furniture. He was a lieutenant colonel and had a considerable amount of furniture. The man has since died and this is the claim of his widow, and the claim has been reduced in amount. It comes up in the routine way and the committee goes through it carefully. I did not even appear before the committee. I just wrote a letter stating the facts, and now the bill is on the calendar. My duty is to defend it and endeavor to pass it, and I believe equity requires reimbursement to the widow.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this man was relieved from duty at Fort Leavenworth in 1916. He left his goods stored at Government expense and went to the border. He was relieved from duty on the border and came to Washington and lived here for two years, leaving his goods stored all the time at Government expense.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He was not relieved from duty in the Army.

Mr. GRISWOLD. He was transferred from one post to another.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But he was still on duty.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The War Department uses the word "relieved," and that is the reason I used that term.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He was transferred and could not move his furniture to the Mexican border.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, here is a law which the gentleman himself helped to pass to cover such cases, but it does not cover this case. The act of March 4, 1921, provides for payment for loss of property of officers and enlisted men only when it appears that such private property was so lost, damaged, or destroyed in consequence of its owner having given his attention to the saving of human life or property belonging to the United States which was in danger.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Exactly, and the gentleman says it covers this case, but it does not cover it.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not cover this case.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It does not cover this case, or this bill would not be before us.

Mr. BLANTON. But this is what the gentleman said was a proper law when he helped to pass it in 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the gentleman says it does not cover a case like this.

Mr. BLANTON. No; and there are thousands of other cases it does not cover. If we extend the law to cover this case, why not pay the loss on every bit of property of everybody else that is destroyed by fire?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to say, with all respect to the distinguished sharpshooters and watchdogs present here to-day, that a Member with a bill on the calendar, put on there in good faith and reported in good faith by any one of the various committees, all with highly responsible chairmen, is out of luck. This is a matter of equity, and this widow is entitled to payment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PAYMENT OF DAMAGES CAUSED BY OVERFLOW OF THE RIO GRANDE RIVER

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 6774, to authorize amendment of the act of February 25, 1927, for the payment of damages caused by reason of the overflow of the Rio Grande on August 17, 1921.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill to explain why the original bill was so drawn as not to include the claim covered by this bill?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It was the intention in the original bill to pay all the damages as the result of this flood, but the bill was so drawn that notwithstanding that the Bureau of Irrigation and Reclamation wanted to pay the claims due to these claimants, under the bill as it was drawn they could not do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of paying these damages to noncitizens?

Mr. CHAVEZ. In this case I am, because I know the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. What duty do we owe noncitizens?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The same duty that we owe citizens in this regard.

Mr. BLANTON. We owe no duty to noncitizens to keep rivers within their banks.

Mr. CHAVEZ. If the gentleman will let me explain, he will see that I am right. Now, the American citizens were all paid. The United States built a dam in my State. In 1921 or thereabouts we had a very great abundance of water, and the people of this community—citizens of the United States and noncitizens—suffered damages as result of neglect by Government agents, who refused to let citizens break the dikes and relieve the danger. For two or three days they kept begging to cut the dikes, but the agents refused to let them do it until it was too late and the dam went out.

Mr. HOPE. According to the report made in the Senate on the original bill in 1926 there seems to be some dispute as to the facts, and it is stated on the part of the manager of the Bureau of Reclamation that there was no liability on the part of the Government of the United States.

I think, as the report shows, that while there was a flood, and possibly it was caused in part by the irrigation works which the Government had there, yet it could have been avoided, except there was a dispute between the residents of two different communities—those below refusing to permit a dike to be cut for fear the flood might damage them. It subsequently was cut and did no damage. But that is what held up the matter and kept the water in this town two or three days, which was the real cause of the damage.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The fact remains that Congress, after investigating all the facts, did come to the conclusion that the damage there was caused by the negligence of the Government agents. Congress appropriated $75,000. I will say that out of the $75,000 practically everyone has been paid except these claimants. The Bureau of Reclamation wanted to pay these two claimants. It only amounts to a few hundred dollars, but under the law it was impossible to do it.

Mr. HOPE. Are there more than these two claimants?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Only these two claimants.

Mr. BLANTON. If my friend will insert their names and the amounts so that it will be restricted, I shall not object to the bill, but I do object to a blanket bill like this under which thousands of dollars could be paid. If the gentleman will put in the specific amounts and let it apply to them I have no objection.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have the names of two of the claimants down here. The gentleman can strike out the other portion of that paragraph if he desires.

Mr. BLANTON. Put in the names of the claimants the committee passed on, and the specific amounts allowed.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The gentleman from Texas will not demand that of me, I hope, because I do not know the amount at this time. I assure the gentleman that it will amount to only a few hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we had an assurance of that kind when we passed the emergency officers' retirement act. We were assured that it would apply to only 900 officers, while already 7,000 have been retired.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I suggest that we could say that it shall not exceed so many hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Will $500 cover it?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think it should go to $800.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will offer an amendment restricting the amount to a maximum of $800, I shall not object.

Mr. CHAVEZ. To these two gentlemen?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; so that it is not a blanket bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to investigate, ascertain the amount of, and to pay damages sustained by Ydelfonso Rodriguez, Andres Bustamante, and other property owners residing at or in the vicinity of Hatch and Santa Teresa, N. Mex., or whose property is located in that vicinity and was damaged on August 17, 1921, in the manner and to the extent authorized by the act approved February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. L., pt. 3, p. 1792), without regard to the citizenship of the owners of property so damaged.

SEC. 2. Funds authorized to be appropriated by said act of February 25, 1927, and appropriated pursuant thereto and not expended may be utilized for the payment of claims hereunder, and shall remain available to the extent required until expended.

SEC. 3. Such parts of the act of February 25, 1927, and acts supplementary thereto as are in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "damaged," insert "by the overflow of the Rio Grande River," and on page 2, line 7, after the word "hereunder," insert "as therein provided."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: On page 1, line 5, strike out the word "and," and in line 6 strike out the words "other property owners," and at the end of the line add the following proviso——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment should be in writing.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we have a very expert clerk at the desk, and he will be able to take it down.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment should be in writing and in the meantime move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to my friend from Washington. I am offering an amendment. At the end of line 3 add the following proviso:

Provided, That not more than $800 shall be expended in making said two settlements. Strike out section 2 and renumber section 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 5, strike out "and other property owners," and on page 2, after line 3, insert "Provided, That not more than $800 shall be expended in making said two settlements" and strike out section 2, and in line 9 strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "2" at the beginning of the section.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have no objection to this bill, and I hope to take only two or three minutes of the time of the House. Here a string of amendments is proposed, offered from the floor. A sort of coroner's jury is sitting at the tables on two sides of the floor of the House running back and forth to consult each other, when, if they are to act, they should be sitting down here in front as a court. They do nearly all of the conversing. The interruptions by these Members is such that there is rarely much opportunity for a connected statement. This is not an orderly method of legislation. I have had some claims bills, and several on this calendar, but I have never gone to a member of the coroner's jury to make a personal appeal, nor have I gone to any of the members of the Committee on Claims or other committees, other than with affidavits and documents properly prepared. What are we doing? My sympathy goes out to the chairman of this committee, whoever he may be in this and the next Congress. No system is provided. It is hit or miss. It is a distressful and unfortunate manner of legislating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. When I think of the long years of valuable service that my friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has performed here, valuable services because of big things done, I forget all of these little chicken-feed private bills of his that he has introduced. They are a mere bagatelle beside the splendid services he has rendered to the country. [Applause.] He seems to measure his services by getting a little old private bill through once in a while. I have on my desk now a picture of my friend from Washington, and this picture shows him in his shirt sleeves bending over his desk working for the people of America whom he served here so well. The kind of speech the gentleman made here a moment ago detracts from the splendid service on big things that the gentleman has performed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On the contrary, it does not detract at all, but it calls attention to this miserable form of legislation here in the name of the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman goes home to Washington, far away, he is going home with a feeling and sense of great security, because he knows there are a few men here who have taken up the great work that Jim Mann once performed, and that they are watching bills which many times take millions of dollars out of the Treasury when not one cent ought to be taken out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield the floor to my friend.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

I desire to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] for his very kind references. I am going home, not with that feeling of security that the distinguished gentleman from Texas just mentioned but with a feeling of alarm, in the knowledge that this great United States of ours, this great Republic, is one-third the way now on its march to a final social democracy, where claims like this will be mere incidents, settled outside of Congress entirely. I do not refer to the Democratic Party, or to the incoming administration, but to the onward march of a social democracy which proposes to do everything for the people—more than will ever be done by a government of our kind or any other kind. All the signs indicate disaster. It is true I have served here for 20 years. I have tried to do my duty on important legislation, on minor legislation, for orderly procedure, and I shall retire with a feeling of sorrow and regret as I see this coming social democracy. I think all can see it coming—and perhaps more.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENATE ECONOMY ACT RAISES SALARIES

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, in the economy act, passed at the last session, we suspended automatic promotions.

In the military and naval services the pay of commissioned officers is stepped up 5 per cent upon the expiration of each three years of service; likewise, length of service, and not rank alone, determines their base pay. In some instances, not all, a change of rank carries an increase of pay.

Now, as to the commissioned services, the economy act did not reduce the pay officers were receiving one penny more than 8⅓ per cent, the same as everybody else. It deprived them of increases in pay, which they would have received had it not been for the economy act, like everybody else was deprived of automatic increases in pay.

The impression has gotten abroad that officers in these services were reduced more than persons in other branches of the Federal service. This is not the case, and I wish to stress that fact.

Now let me cite you a specific instance of what would happen under the Senate bill. The Budget officer of the Navy Department—Admiral McLean—is a rear admiral. He is a rear admiral of what is called the lower half. A rear admiral of the lower half corresponds with a brigadier general in the Army. Admiral McLean receives a total in pay and allowances of $7,500. He received that before the economy act became effective. Since the economy act became effective he has become a rear admiral of the upper half, and the pay and allowances of a rear admiral of the upper half amount to $9,700, the same as a major general.

In the Treasury and Post Office Departments bill as passed by the Senate this officer would be advanced from $7,500 to $9,700, an increase of $2,200, and for doing identically the same work at this time as he was doing when the economy act was passed.

That is a concrete example of what this bill as passed by the Senate proposes to do. If we are going to undo what we did last year and start raising salaries, let us be frank about it and let the people know it.

And how is it proposed to pay for this increase, in part, at least? Listen, if you please. Congress in its wisdom, at the last session, refused to touch the pay envelopes of the enlisted men. There are seven pay grades for enlisted men. I shall use the average Navy rates, because they are generally higher than the Army rates. The pay of the top three grades only exceed $1,000. Here they are in order, $1,832, $1,451, and $1,202.

There is hardly a man among the enlisted personnel who has not a wife or dependents looking to him for support. What would you say, out of the compensations I have stated, he would have left for his personal needs after making remittances to his dependents, and yet, gentlemen, this bill as it comes from the Senate applies an 8⅓ per cent cut upon the pay of these men, and at the same time will add varying amounts, as high as $2,200, to the pay officers are now receiving.

Let me remind you, also, that we have already, for the next fiscal year, reduced the pay of enlisted men of the Army and the Coast Guard by taking away reenlistment allowances. The Budget proposes similar action as to the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps. That course means a reduction in the pay of every enlisted man whose enlistment expires during the next fiscal year. It means a reduction in the top three grades at the rate of from 2.65 to 4 per cent per annum. Personally, I have no sympathy with that action. It is a Budget recommendation. To take away an additional 8⅓ per cent, to my mind, would be the height of folly.

Mr. Speaker, I want to know if we may have the assurance of the gentleman that he will bring these two propositions back to the House in disagreement if the Senate conferees will not recede?

JOSE RAMON CORDOVA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6785, for the relief of Jose Ramon Cordova.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I will reserve the objection for the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. CHAVEZ. In 1916 there was an uprising of Piute Indians in western Colorado and eastern Utah. The United States marshal there dispatched several citizens to go out into the country and try to get rid of this uprising amongst the Indians. Among those men sent was this man Cordova and a man by the name of Aikin. There was a battle between the duly authorized Government agents, the deputy marshals, the marshal, and the rebellious Indians. Mr. Aikin was killed. Mr. Cordova was shot in the arm and shot through the chest. He has been an invalid ever since.

In 1920 the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] secured the passage of a bill for the relief of the widow of Mr. Aikin, and there was a bill favorably reported for the relief of Cordova, but for some reason the gentleman from Colorado was unable to get in contact with Cordova, who lived out in the wilds of Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah, and it was only last December when we received a request from the American Legion post at Farmington, N. Mex., telling of the condition of this man and the condition he has been in since 1916, that this matter was taken up. He was dependent, even during the war, on two sons, both of whom went overseas. He has been bedridden. This bill was placed before the committee at the request of one of the American Legion posts in my State. The man was shot while doing his duty. They could not do anything else except go out with the United States marshal when the Indians were uprising.

The bill has been reported favorably, and a bill of similar import has heretofore passed for the widow of Mr. Aikin. The Department of Justice and the Attorney General recommend this bill for passage, and I do hope that justice may be done this man at this late hour. He only has a few years to live, and I was hoping this might get through so that he might get what he has had coming to him for a long time. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] had been able to contact him, the Congress would have passed this bill as far back as 1920, when the bill for the relief of Mrs. Aikin, the widow of the man who was killed, was passed.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I would like to ask why the long delay. That is a long time to delay a matter of this kind.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The gentleman will appreciate that this poor man lives out in the country. Probably he does not know as much as some of us are supposed to know. If the American Legion post had not called my attention to this bill, you would not have it here to-day. After they saw the condition of this poor old man, they brought it to my attention. If it had not been for that, you would not have had the bill here. In other words, no one attended to or cared about him.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The report is very inadequate. The report does not state any of those facts at all.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. I made the report, and I wish to state that the report sets forth all the facts. The report sets forth the full circumstances in a letter, over the signature of the Attorney General, William D. Mitchell, on page 2, in which he says he shall not interpose objection. That indicates the degree of the permanent disability at the time of the injury. The report indicates that the injuries were incurred in line of duty, while enforcing the law. The report also indicates the man's condition as totally disabled on March 11, 1932. In fact, I was very careful to request the author of the bill to wire for a physician's statement, showing the physical condition at that time. This is one of the most meritorious bills which our committee has ever had before it. There was not a question raised against it when it was before the full Claims Committee. Here is a man, totally disabled, shot through the lungs which resulted in pulmonary hemorrhages, and shot in the arm which caused paralysis. This injury was received while serving the Government of the United States in the position of a law-enforcement agent. He is totally disabled and helpless; and in view of all the facts incorporated in this report, I believe we should not hesitate to pass this bill if we are going to pass any bill at all on this calendar.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am sorry to say the report does not show everything which the gentleman has stated. It does not say anything about his condition for the past 18 years.

Mr. SCHAFER. Here is the physician's statement showing the man's condition in 1932. This statement as to the man's physical condition is worth a great deal more than the statement of a layman, either on the floor of the House or off the floor of the House. The Attorney General's report indicates the serious nature of the disability in 1916 and it is corroborated by the physician's statement showing total disability on March 11, 1932.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the amendment will be accepted, changing the amount to $2,500, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jose Ramon Cordova, of Gallup, N. Mex., the sum of $5,000 for injuries sustained during February, 1915, while in the discharge of his duties as member of a posse organized by the United States marshal for the district of Utah for the capture of Tse-Ne-Gat, alias Everett Hatch, a Piute Indian charged with murder.

With the following committee amendment.

Page 2, line 1, after the word "murder," add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the only way the author of this bill could get some relief for this distinguished citizen was by accepting the amendment offered by one of the regular objectors before the unanimous-consent stage had passed.

Mr. BLANTON. As to objectors, is the gentleman one of the regulars or irregulars?

Mr. SCHAFER. I am not yielding to the gentleman now. Some other time I shall be pleased to yield to him as often as he desires.

These are the facts in the case: The committee report indicates that this man suffered a total and permanent disability. He was shot through the arm and was shot through the chest with the result that he has paralysis of the arm and pulmonary hemorrhages of the lungs. These injuries were sustained while serving the great Government of the United States as a law-enforcement agent on the trail of a murderer.

In order that his complete condition several years later could be before the committee and the House, I requested the author of the bill, when we considered the bill in the subcommittee, to wire to the American Legion post for a physician's statement showing the present condition, and that physician's statement is incorporated in the committee report. It reads as follows:

FARMINGTON, N. MEX., March 11, 1932.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ:

Just examined Jose Ramon Cordova because of shot wound in arm. It has very little sensation. Because of shot wound in chest he has frequent hemorrhages from lungs. These hemorrhages occur upon least exertion. I consider him totally disabled for manual labor.

J. E. REECE, M. D.

The committee report sets forth the facts and circumstances justifying relief for this beneficiary, and the concluding paragraph of the report from the Attorney General states that in view of the facts of the case the Attorney General will interpose no objection. Yet we find here in the case of this man who served the Nation and was totally disabled by a shot in the arm and a gunshot wound in the chest resulting in pulmonary hemorrhages, that he is denied the maximum compensation which Congress has been allowing in cases of total disability. His case is put up on the auction block under this unanimous-consent procedure, and in order to get some relief for the poor unfortunate man the author of the bill has to accept an arbitrary reduction of 50 per cent. Otherwise the bill would not be considered in the House and no relief would be given.

Certainly, when you consider the facts, this is one bill which indicates the pernicious operation of this auction-block system, where claimants are denied the benefits due them because of the whims of some of the objectors who are sent out here on the floor of the House to overcome the unanimous judgment of a standing committee of the House of 21 members of the Claims Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said the man had pulmonary hemorrhages of the lungs. Is there any hemorrhage of the lungs that is not pulmonary?

Mr. SCHAFER. That is a facetious interjection and beside the point. The gentleman can now talk about politics, but I saw him in the well of the House to-day apologizing for the Democratic majority which has been in control of the House for two years.

Mr. BLANTON. No; you did not.

Mr. SCHAFER. For its failure to reduce appropriations and to pass consolidations.

Mr. BLANTON. No; you did not.

Mr. SCHAFER. I saw and heard the gentleman on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. You saw me attempting to put back in their boxes some jack-in-the-boxes from across the aisle who had jumped out of their box.

Mr. SCHAFER. I saw the gentleman in the well of the House apologizing for his party's failure to reduce expenditures and for failure to consolidate various bureaus and activities. From his speech I gathered that the gentleman in the near future will offer an amendment to a bill to divest Congress of all its powers under the Constitution, give them to the next President of the United States, dissolve Congress, recall the appropriation for the legislative branch of the Government, and go back to Texas.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, and will not take much of the time of the House.

I wish to call attention to page 3731 of the RECORD for February 9, where appears a report of the consideration of the bill H. R. 8403. Some unfortunate language is used there which might indicate I was trying to mislead the House as to the provisions of that bill. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] was smiling when he made his suggestion that I was not stating the facts quite accurately about the bill. Three or four of us were talking at the same time after he had made his statement and the reporter evidently did not get my very vigorous objection to my colleague's statement.

I said that this bill only involved appropriations of $300 or $400, which was substantially correct.

I said the bill was a bookkeeping proposition, and that was correct.

The purpose of the bill was to relieve certain disbursing officers of errors and discrepancies in connection with the accounting work of the War Department. If you do not relieve them, the Government will have to sue them at expense to the Government and then try to collect.

So my statement in connection with the bill was substantially a correct statement. I did not have an opportunity to discuss the bill at any length.

The committee report indicated all the facts, and I know my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] did not want to leave any impression on the House that I was trying to mislead the House on a bill which I considered was very meritorious.

Just one thing more: This bill is here because there is a dispute on between somebody over in the Comptroller General's office and the War Department as to a matter of policy. I think the gentleman, whoever he is, in the Comptroller General's office is wrong in the attitude he takes.

The Secretary of War recommended the bill. I think it is a proper bill. I think he did the right thing. I think the Comptroller General's office is mistaken in its position.

Mr. Speaker, I make these remarks so that the rather humorous attitude and comment of my friend from Mississippi, as it appears in yesterday's RECORD, will not be taken seriously. He is misled by the Comptroller General's office.

Mr. BACHMANN. What is the number of the bill to which the gentleman refers? There were two bills of a similar nature before the House yesterday.

Mr. PITTENGER. I am referring to the bill H. R. 8403.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the gentleman will look at the second bill, he will find that the last provision provides for an expenditure of over $9,000.

Mr. PITTENGER. No; there is no expenditure at all—just bookkeeping. That relieves a colonel of a liability for which some one else was responsible and for which he is not legally liable. You either relieve him or else you sue him.

Mr. BACHMANN. That is more than a few hundred dollars, as the gentleman stated.

Mr. PITTENGER. But no appropriation is required. My statement had to do with appropriating money. None is appropriated here.

Mr. BACHMANN. But the Government stands to lose $9,000.

Mr. PITTENGER. I will bet the gentleman a nickel the Government will never collect a nickel from the colonel, but may go to a lot of expense on a groundless claim against him. The primary purpose of this bill is to correct records and errors.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RUFUS HUNTER BLACKWELL, JR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6975, for the relief of Rufus Hunter Blackwell, jr.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHARLES A. BROWN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7649, for the relief of Charles A. Brown.

Mr. HOLLISTER and Mr. STAFFORD reserved the right to object.

Mr. BLOOM. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio for what reason he objects?

Mr. HOLLISTER. As far as can be gathered from the report and the whole circumstances of the case, it looks like a typical automobile accident at a corner where there is contributory negligence on the part of the claimant. There is no evidence whatever to the contrary, and it does not seem to be a case where in the ordinary private situation there would be any recovery on the part of the claimant.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has read the report.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I have read the report very carefully.

Mr. BLOOM. It is a fact that the United States Government exacted of the truck driver payment for damages on account of the negligence of the driver, and the Government collected this money out of the salary of the driver.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is perfectly possible but would not necessarily change the situation. The driver might have been negligent as well as the person concerned in the act. Of course, I have only the report before me. Has the gentleman any further report from the Post Office Department?

Mr. BLOOM. The report shows that the Government employee driving the truck on official duty was negligent, because he did not blow his horn.

If the gentleman could understand the situation at Seventy-second Street and Broadway, he would realize that in crossing that street it was necessary for this man to blow the horn, and if the driver of the postal truck were not at fault, the Government certainly would not have asked him to pay the cost of repairing the postal truck.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the difficulty I have in comprehending liability on the part of the Government is that I read between the lines that the claimant was guilty himself of driving recklessly past this point of intersection.

Mr. BLOOM. No; it is just the reverse.

Mr. STAFFORD. Traffic goes very fast on Broadway.

Mr. BLOOM. At this corner, may I say to the gentleman, the traffic of the direction of the private car has the right of way just the same as in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the truck was going north and south.

Mr. BLOOM. No; the car was going north and south and the truck was coming across the street and the private automobile was damaged.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the Government employee driving the truck was traveling to the northward on Broadway.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes; the postal truck was going north, according to the report, and the truck had the right of way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon the statement of the gentleman from New York, I think we shall have to object.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, as this is a day of compromise and agreement, does not the gentleman think that this party who paid $1,100 for hospital expenses is entitled to something?

Mr. STAFFORD. I read this report very carefully, and the gentleman from Ohio has read it very carefully. I thought the claimant was guilty of negligence in driving very fast, and $1,000 would be more than ample under the circumstances.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

VINCENT J. CONRAD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7654, for the relief of Vincent J. Conrad.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. I do not know how familiar the gentleman is with this case. This soldier had been away from the camp on pass and during his absence the camp cot caught fire and destroyed his property. I realize that the general law holds that in order for a man to be reimbursed for his own loss he must have been engaged in saving human life or Government property, but in this case that was utterly impossible. Another soldier who lived in the same barracks happened to be there and took out two trunks and in those trunks were some field glasses and a Government pistol, and because Government property was in these two trunks he was reimbursed, while this soldier was denied the reimbursement which he deserved.

The purpose of this bill is to correct an evil in the existing law and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HOPE. If there is fault in the existing law, it should be corrected by general legislation. I call attention to the opinion of the War Department, in which it says:

> Many similar claims are on file in the War Department wherein payment has been denied, and it is therefore recommended that favorable consideration be not given the proposed legislation, inasmuch as the granting of this relief would be giving to one individual consideration that has been and must be denied many others.

If it is true, as the gentleman says, there is a defect in the general law, it ought to be corrected, but I do not think it should be corrected in a bill of this character.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. This is a meritorious case, and I do not think we should compel this man to wait for general legislation.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object.

BURTON S. ADAMS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 10104, for the relief of the heirs of Burton S. Adams, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the author of the bill will not object to an amendment providing that no payment hereunder of any of the allowances authorized by the bill shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act?

Mr. BLACK. No.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in recognition of the fact that Burton Stearns Adams lost his life while in the performance of his duty as an employee of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and in recognition of the fact that his death resulted from overexertion in connection with the performance of official duties, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive the claim of Emma E. Adams, the widow of Burton Stearns Adams, and to grant compensation to the widow and dependent child in the amounts prescribed by the Federal compensation act of September 7, 1916, and amendatory acts, to be allowed in the case of an employee whose death occurred in line of duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

> At the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no payment hereunder of any of the allowances authorized by said compensation act shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I hesitate to take the time of the House at this time, but I wish to speak for a few moments out of order.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to that. This time has been set aside for the Private Calendar. If the gentleman from Kansas is permitted to speak out of order, others should have the same right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moved to strike out the last word, and the Chair has not heard the gentleman yet.

Mr. BACHMANN. He said that he was about to speak out of order.

Mr. BLACK. I do not mind any Republican getting five minutes for a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not want to prevent the gentleman from Kansas from speaking, but Members have been here all the afternoon waiting and expecting their bills to come up, and it is not fair to take up this time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GIVE MR. ROOSEVELT THE POWER TO DO WHAT MUST BE DONE FOR THE COUNTRY, AND THAT WHICH CONGRESS CAN NOT OR WILL NOT DO

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I hope that does not offend the gentleman from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, it always pays to recognize truth. It never pays to dodge the truth simply because the truth may be unpleasant. Parliamentary government is failing to meet the emergency which now confronts the American people. It is not surprising that this should be true. Parliamentary government is particularly fitted to protect human liberty under ordinary times and conditions. Parliamentary government is the greatest governmental blessing which has been conferred upon mankind.

Parliamentary government, like every other human institution, has its weakness as well as its strength. The inherent and natural weakness of parliamentary government is that it is full of indecision and can not function during a great emergency. Parliamentary government is as helpless in functioning in an emergency, such as we are now experiencing, as a counsel of 435 men would be unable to function in leading an army in the midst of battle. The indecision of such a counsel would break down the morale of an army.

The United States is to-day confronted with a condition which is equally as much in need of quick and accurate decision as is the army in battle.

We have a Government which has for three years spent more money than it has taken in. For the fourth year, it is going to spend more money than it is taking in. Such a program will mean the ultimate collapse of Government. This condition can not be corrected except that there be drastic reductions in expenses and additional revenue obtained for the Government. Parliamentary government breaks down in this situation. Four hundred and thirty-five men in the House of Representatives can not agree on any measurable reduction in expenses. Likewise they can not agree on any form of substantial new revenue. This indecision leaves Government in a helpless situation, day by day drifting into greater chaos.

Sooner or later, the American people simply can not suffer the indecision of Congress. Before the American people will permit all Government to collapse in this country, they will turn to some form of dictator. There are just two forms of dictators, namely, the constitutional dictator in the form of a President, and the dictator on horseback. The latter form of dictator is intolerable. It is destructive of free government. The constitutional dictator in the form of President is bearable and the people can suffer it until they are through the emergency. At the end of the emergency, we need have no fear of the people's not throwing off the yoke of dictatorship.

I favor giving to the incoming President, Mr. Roosevelt, unlimited power in the financial affairs of government. I do not know whether or not he can save this country. The best that Congress can do is to give him a chance. We should give him the opportunity to do that which Congress can not and will not do. This we should do for the good of the country.

I am going to vote to give him such power. As I view the matter, loyalty to country requires that I do it. Some of my Republican brethren rebel against giving such power to the new Democratic President. My answer to that is, that even if there were nothing involved in this matter except politics, it is still good politics for the Republicans to give this power to Mr. Roosevelt. In the first place, it is the one best chance to save democratic government so that there will be any need for any political party. In the next place, as soon as the emergency is passed the people will rebel against dictatorial power in the hands of the President, and the party out of power will be the beneficiary of that rebellion. There could not be a better illustration of this fact than the situation of Woodrow Wilson in his last term. Congress gave him full power so that the Government could function during the war. As soon as the war was over, what happened? The people rebelled against this extraordinary power in the hands of the President and were eager to return to a democratic form of government. As a result, the people turned this country over to the Republicans in 1920, as if they were being given something on a silver platter.

On the contrary, if the Republican Party, during the next administration, sets itself up as merely a nagging opposition party, it will probably not come back to power for many years. The Democratic Party tried that policy after the Civil War. The result was that it has practically been out of power continuously.

This position does not mean that the Republican membership in Congress should on every occasion bow to every whim or suggestion of the new President. It is perfectly proper for the Republicans to oppose and criticize a program submitted by the new President which their judgment tells them is economically and governmentally unsound. During these trying times, our opposition must be based on the absolute needs of the Government unmindful of partisan advantage. Therein lies the best politics as well as the best statesmanship.

When the new President is willing to try to do that for the country which must be done to preserve the Government and which experience has taught us that Congress can not and will not do, the Republicans can not afford to oppose that program.

I realize that Mr. Hoover asked for power to function and that the Democrats denied him that power. In doing so, they greviously wronged the country. I realize that the present Democratic membership of the House in their hearts resented giving to President Hoover a dog's chance. They resented giving him power to reorganize the Government. In the last session they finally grudgingly voted to give him restricted power to reorganize the Government; then when he did it, they wronged the country by rejecting his program. However, that is no excuse for the Republicans to follow the same policy. There is only one way for the Democrats to atone for the wrong they did the country in hamstringing President Hoover, and that is for them to give the power and greater power to Mr. Roosevelt than that which they denied to Mr. Hoover and then for Mr. Roosevelt, the Democratic President, to function as Mr. Hoover would have functioned had he been given the power.

I appeal to Republicans and Democrats alike to give to Mr. Roosevelt the full power and authority to do that which experience has proved that Congress can not and will not do in restoring the financial stability of this Government.

GUILLERMO MEDINA

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10891) to provide for the reimbursement of Guillermo Medina, hydrographic surveyor, for the value of personal effects lost in the capsizing of a Navy whaleboat off Galera Island, Gulf of Panama.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $66.80 to Guillermo Medina in full compensation for the loss of personal property as the result of the capsizing of a United States Navy whaleboat off Galera Island, Gulf of Panama, on September 25, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ESTATE OF PETER PAUL FRANZEL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1586) for the relief of the estate of Peter Paul Franzel, deceased.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Peter Paul Franzel, deceased, the sum of $168.36, in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States arising out of any payment made by the estate of Peter Paul Franzel in pursuance of an offer made by the said Peter Paul Franzel in compromise of liabilities alleged to have been incurred by him through violation of the national prohibition act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PRICE HUFF

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11035) for the relief of Price Huff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I notice that this provides that this man shall have rights to his adjusted certificate. It is my understanding that now, even though a man may have been honorably discharged, the time for acquiring an adjusted-service certificate has expired.

Mr. MAY. No; that is not correct. The difference is that if he is now awarded an adjusted-service certificate, it is dated as of the date it is issued, and not as of 1924.

Mr. GRISWOLD. But a man to-day who has not made application before this time, even though he be honorably discharged, can not get his adjusted-service certificate.

Mr. MAY. Oh, yes; he can, up to 1935.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain whether the beneficiary of this bill will be eligible for disability allowance and compensation and all of the other war benefits?

Mr. MAY. No; this merely affects the right of this soldier to have his adjusted-service certificate.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Upon the theory that he served honorably during the duration of the war and actually earned the adjusted compensation?

Mr. MAY. Yes. He is barred from any other pension, back pay, or anything of that kind.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman insert an amendment incorporating the usual language, so that it will read that the man was discharged under honorable conditions?

Mr. MAY. I think the phraseology of the bill as it is does that. It is the same thing. It provides that he shall be considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that service on the 6th day of February, 1920, and then follows the usual proviso.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The practice is quite uniform to use the phrase "may be held to have been discharged under honorable conditions." It means the same, but we are trying to get uniformity in bills of this sort.

Mr. MAY. A representative of the War Department, who is an attorney, passed on the phraseology of this particular bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Nevertheless, that has been the custom here, and most of the bills drawn in the Military Affairs Committee or in the Naval Affairs Committee use that phraseology. There is a good reason for it, which I am not able to explain myself. Has the gentleman any objection to such an amendment?

Mr. MAY. I do not think it would affect the matter at all. It will not affect his right to a service certificate.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It does not affect that at all.

Mr. MAY. Very well. I will accept such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Price Huff, who was a member of the Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that service on the 6th day of February, 1920: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "hereafter," and on page 2, line 1, after the word "act," insert "Provided further, That if the said Huff shall within 12 months from and after the final passage and taking effect of this act file with the Veterans' Administration a claim for adjusted-service compensation under the provisions of the World War veterans' act of 1924, as amended, then and in that event nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent said veteran from being allowed his adjusted-service certificate, if he be found otherwise entitled thereto."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Yesterday I objected to a bill which sought to give a soldier an honorable discharge. The Member who introduced the bill seemed to feel that that objection was not warranted and complained that other bills were passed granting honorable discharges to men who had deserted. The bill under consideration grants an honorable discharge to a man who is alleged to have deserted, but there is a considerable difference between the two bills. The bill to which I objected yesterday would give an honorable discharge to a man who entered the service on June 28, 1918, and who on August 10, 1918, disappeared. He returned to his command in February, 1919, after the war was over. His desertion occurred during time of war. The veteran affected by this bill served throughout the war and was in major engagements, not one but several. He deserted several years after the war.

The man whose bill was before the House yesterday is alleged to have suffered a throat disability. There is nothing in a medical way that connects a throat disability with a man's legs. He was able to walk. We expended millions and millions of dollars to give the men in the camps hospital service and attention when they became ill. The man had no right to leave his command in August.

There is another thought to be considered in this connection. When he left, the gap that he made by leaving had to be filled, and when that organization went abroad some other mother's boy went with the organization, filling that gap, and we do not know whether that other boy ever returned to this country or not.

I say, whenever a bill is being considered, unless it can be shown that the soldier or sailor who deserted from the Army or the Navy during the period of the war—between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918—was of unsound mind, I propose to object to the bill. I think the objection is well taken, and I do not think a Member of Congress should be criticized for stopping such a bill, even though it be reported by a legislative committee of this House.

The man who stayed on the job until the last shot was fired is entitled to consideration, and, unless the offense is most severe, he will have my sympathy and assistance, as will the man who left during the war who was of unsound mind; but the man who deserted while his country was at war should not now be given an honorable discharge. Remember, every time a soldier deserted during the period of the war another boy had to take his place. Unless there is some extraordinary condition that enters the case, we should not by an act of Congress give a man an honorable discharge who left his comrades in an emergency. If my contention is not sound, I would like to have someone assail it. There is nothing personal in my actions; simply a desire to do what I think should be done.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of keeping the RECORD straight on the bill referred to by the gentleman from Missouri. I reported that bill for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER]. In fairness to the veteran whose case is in dispute here, I wish to say that he was inducted into service and had one month's service when he was taken sick and went home. He was home for several months, but during that entire period he was in touch with the county sheriff and other officers in charge of his case. Heart trouble developed as the result of that pharyngitis. The sheriff was in touch with him. He was in bed. Just as soon as that veteran was physically able he returned of his own volition to camp and was then thrown into the stockade, and two weeks later he was sent to a base hospital for further treatment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that he left his command without permission?

Mr. GOSS. He was A. W. O. L.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That means he left without permission.

Mr. GOSS. That is true.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that we had the best surgical and medical men in this country in every camp in the country, where this man could have received treatment?

Mr. GOSS. But he got it when he went home on a pass.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But he left his command without permission, and he deserted. The gentleman may call it "A. W. O. L.", but in this case it is desertion.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did he not return after the war was all over?

Mr. GOSS. Certainly, just as soon as the doctors let him out.

Mr. SCHAFER. And if the war was still going on, he would not have returned until this date.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. A. W. O. L. is the right of all privates. I went A. W. O. L. many times, but I reported back; and if a man took sick when he was away A. W. O. L., there is nothing serious about that.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But the gentleman did not report back after the war was over when he went A. W. O. L. The gentleman was a soldier, not a skipper.

Mr. McCORMACK. But if I had taken sick, I would have had to stay at home, would I not?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, strike out the words "from and" and also the words "after the final passage and taking effect" and insert in lieu of the latter the word "enactment," so that it will read "after the enactment."

Mr. MAY. Instead of "after the final passage"?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 3, strike out at the beginning of the line the words "from and," and after the word "the" strike out the words "final passage and taking effect" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enactment."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in line 7 to strike out the word "honorably," and after the word "discharged" insert "under honorable conditions."

Mr. MAY. I accept the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "honorably," and after the word "discharged" insert the words "under honorable conditions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM L. JENKINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 997, for the relief of William L. Jenkins.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the author of this bill if he can make an explanation as to why this former consul ought to be relieved of accountability for $2,000 represented by this bill? It appears by the statement that he received the $2,000, but its disbursement does not appear by the report. His excuse is only that there are no vouchers. What are the facts?

Mr. WATSON. I have taken a deep interest in this bill. I have called on the department a great many times—upon Mr. McCarl and upon Mr. Carr.

In no case have I found the money has not been received. The only objections they have, that the vouchers had not been received, and they want the vouchers in order to have the account properly on the books. It was during a period of war.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Aside from the vouchers, is there no statement showing how the money was expended? Have you no statement of the State Department or the Comptroller General, or anyone, to show how the money was expended?

Mr. WATSON. It is very strange. The department does not assert they have not received the money. It is only a case where they have not received the vouchers. We have a letter from Mr. Carr, in which he states:

In view of the information contained in the attached copies of correspondence and the apparent inability of Mr. Jenkins to furnish vouchers in support of his draft dated December 8, 1916, in the amount of $2,000, the department is of the opinion that he should be allowed credit for that amount as provided for in the proposed bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Whose statement is that?

Mr. WATSON. That is the statement of Mr. Wilbur J. Carr, Acting Secretary of State. In no case has any member of the department claimed that Mr. Jenkins had been dishonest and not returned the money.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. Nowhere in this 8-page report is there a statement that the money was ever spent or disbursed for any governmental purpose, or purposes of the office held by Mr. Jenkins.

Mr. WATSON. It is very plainly shown that a great number of people in Trebizond were starving, and this money was required to feed them. An order was sent to Petrograd for the money, and the money was sent to Mr. Jenkins.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had occasion only this morning to read the report. I read it very carefully. The letter of the claimant as late as August 22, 1932, explains how the vouchers were lost because of the transfer from Trebizond to Tiflis, and the letter of Mr. Carr shows that the reason why this account was not allowed was because these vouchers got mixed up in the transfer during the height of the war. There is no question in my mind but what it is a meritorious claim.

Mr. PATTERSON. In a way, it is just a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. STAFFORD. It appears that Vice Consul Montesanto left Trebizond for Russia and it is supposed he took the vouchers with him.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In other words, this money was expended for the relief of destitute people at that time.

Mr. WATSON. For the relief of destitute people at Trebizond.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And the vouchers not being obtainable this bill is necessary to clear the record.

Mr. WATSON. The gentleman has stated the case correctly; and also to clear Mr. Jenkins's honor.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of William L. Jenkins as American consul, formerly at Trebizond, Turkey, with the sum of $2,000, such sum representing the amount for which he is held personally liable on account of official vouchers lost because of warlike conditions in Turkey during 1916 and 1917.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LEWIS E. GREEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 999, for the relief of Lewis E. Green.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have here the proper form for the presentation of the claim to the Employees' Compensation Commission where the employee failed to present his claim within the time required by the statute of limitations. If the author of the bill is willing to accept this as an amendment, I have no further objection to the bill.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman explain the effect of the amendment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The effect of the amendment is to present the claim of this person to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission as if he had made it within the time required under the statute; and it provides that no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. WATSON. It does not weaken the bill any, then?

Mr. STAFFORD. Only to this extent: In the last Congress bills were passed in the form of the gentleman's bill where we had the assurance of the chairman of the Committee on Claims that no payment would be made retroactive from the date of the passage of the bill. Through the influence of some powerful person they got an interpretation by the Employees' Compensation Commission that the compensation allowance dated back to the date of the injury, an outrageous interpretation. We are now safeguarding the Government's interest in these cases by providing that no allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the enactment of the act.

Mr. WATSON. I accept the gentleman's amendment. I may say on behalf of Mr. Green that he worked for three months after the accident. His eyes were affected. He then became blind. He did not attempt to file his claim until several weeks after he had become blind. I want to give this credit to Mr. Green.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question but what it is a meritorious claim. It is merely a question of safeguarding the Government's rights.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and instructed to receive and determine the claim of Lewis E. Green, a former employee in the United States Arsenal at Tullytown, Pa., without regard to the limitation of time within which such claims are to be filed under the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Lewis E. Green, who purports to have suffered injury on April 15, 1925, while employed at the United States Arsenal at Tullytown, Pa., in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Lewis E. Green had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RAPIDES PARISH, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11242, to relinquish the title of the United States in and to lands in Rapides Parish, State of Louisiana.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to section 57, township 4 north, range 1 west, Louisiana meridian, Rapides Parish, La., containing 135.44 acres, as shown on a plat of survey made by A. C. Phelps, deputy surveyor, approved March 13, 1839, by H. F. Williams, surveyor general for the district of Louisiana, and segregated thereon as a double concession, be, and the same is hereby, released, relinquished, and confirmed by the United States to J. Taylor Compton, T. Maddox Compton, Ursula Compton Craig, and the legal representatives of J. M. Armstrong, and to their respective heirs and assigns forever: Provided, That the said parties shall first submit to the Secretary of the Interior satisfactory evidence of long continuous possession of the said land under claim or color of title, together with payment for the said land at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 2. That when the required evidence and payment have been made, a patent shall issue for the said described land to J. Taylor Compton, T. Maddox Compton, Ursula Compton Craig, and the legal representatives of J. M. Armstrong: Provided, That such patent shall only amount to a relinquishment of any right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

B. F. HART

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 222, authorizing adjustment of the claim of B. F. Hart.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of B. F. Hart in the sum of $65 as the bona fide holder of check No. 4957, dated May 15, 1925, issued by C. C. Collins, special disbursing agent, United States Veterans' Bureau, to the order of Theodore John Gustavus in payment under a vocational rehabilitation award, which payment was later determined to be unauthorized, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim an amount not exceeding $65. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $65, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WILLIE B. CLEVERLY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 902, for the relief of Willie B. Cleverly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORVILLE E. CLARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1579, for the relief of Orville E. Clark.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman wants to make a statement, I reserve the objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is the gentleman going to object?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman can give a proper reason why a man who is discharged in this way should receive this payment, I shall be pleased to hear what kind of reason he has.

Mr. ROGERS. I will tell the gentleman that the reason this claim made a favorable impression both upon the subcommittee and the entire committee, leading them to believe that this man in all fairness and equity was entitled to this $240, is best expressed in the unquestioned testimony that was brought before the committee that this man was duly commissioned as a captain in the United States National Guard and served as adjutant, and I now read directly from the report, which the evidence showed to be true:

Until January 12, 1918, at which time he was transferred to the depot, corps, and Army troops, Camp Wadsworth, S. C. Some time after, Captain Clark had been a member of the Second Pioneer Infantry and upon being informed that all other officers of the regiment had received their overseas examination, he remarked to the commanding officer of said regiment that he also would like to receive his examination. Nothing more was thought of this remark until about 10 days later he was ordered to appear before an examining board.

On so reporting he was handed a telegram from the War Department informing him he was honorably discharged from the service by reason of physical disability. At that time his attention was called to the fact that under an act of Congress of 1917, May 18, he should make claim for one month's additional pay and allowances when filing his final pay voucher. He made this claim under the law, and it was disallowed by the auditor of the War Department for the sole reason that the board finally appointed by the commanding general at that time was not appointed pursuant to this particular act.

This was the only reason the claim was disallowed. Then upon the suggestion of his regimental commander he came to Washington and made application for a reexamination, which was duly held in the Surgeon General's department, and as a result of this reexamination this man was recommissioned as a captain of the United States National Guard as of May 27, 1918, and served throughout the remainder of the war, being discharged July 17, 1919.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. You mean to say this man was a captain and did not know the difference?

Mr. ROGERS. He did what he was instructed to do, and the only reason the claim was not allowed was because the board of officers which was appointed by the commanding general at that time was not appointed pursuant to this particular act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And 15 years afterwards he comes in to get this $240 that he, as a captain, knew just as well then, as he knows now, he had the right to claim.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no; he did not.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I think that is a fair statement from the report.

Mr. GRISWOLD. May I call the gentleman's attention to this particular feature of the claim, because I investigated it pretty thoroughly and was of the same opinion as the gentleman to begin with. This man, after being discharged by this medical board, was recommissioned and went overseas and served out his time, and the thing that they discharged him for in the first place was "flat feet in marked degree." The first board must have been mistaken, because this man was recommissioned and went overseas afterwards and served until July, 1919. He was required to spend a lot of money in being transferred around after being discharged, in order to be recommissioned.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The very inconsistency pointed out is what impressed me that a man who rose to the rank of captain in the Army should not ask Congress to give him $240 as back pay that he was entitled to in 1917, if he is entitled to it at all.

Mr. LEWIS. He was obliged to spend more than twice $240 on account of being wrongfully put out of the service and then restored to the service. He is making no money out of the transaction, and, in fact, is still a heavy loser.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Let this go over, and if there is any opportunity to return to it, we can do so, and in the meantime I will read the report. I had no idea that this man had been reinstated; and even if I had, he knew then the facts and his claim has not been made until this time. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OFFICE OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, are we through with the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. We are through with the Private Calendar for to-day. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise here under protest, to call your attention to the fact that I have to-day introduced a resolution to investigate the office of the district attorney for the southern district of New York.

It is distasteful to me to do this, but the matter has gone so far that I think the House ought to know something about the condition of that office.

The Federal district attorney of New York is under the belief that the Republican Party was reelected at the last election, and from the day after election to the present time he has sent out thousands of subpœnas to innocent victims to find out if they saw anything wrong in the polling places.

Mr. SNELL. Is the gentleman referring to anything that took place in the House a few days ago?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed. Within three days after election he called the grand jury together and brought innocent people into the Federal court, trying to find out if some money for bribery was given any individual.

I assure you that the district he is aiming at, if you turned the people upside down, there would not be a nickel drop-out of any pocket.

At the same time he believes that money was given for the purpose of preventing votes to be cast for the Republican ticket. As a result of that crusade, for three months he has brought women and men to court, and he got a judge, a distinguished jurist, to my surprise, to issue an order for fingerprints and photographs of these alleged violators or conspirators.

Let me call your attention to the fact that we have several thousand cases for violation of the prohibition law that have been on the calendar for two years. We have at least a couple of hundred cases for violators, dope peddlers, and counterfeiters on the docket, and he has for three months kept his great office busy investigating the late election.

Nothing else was done by him and his assistants. Everybody is on the job to find out the great frauds that defeated the Republican Party. I venture to say that in one district between the tally sheets and the machine there was only a difference of 1 vote, and he indicted the whole board.

Remember gentlemen, I am not complaining about prosecutions in the district attorney's office, where the man is seeking to indict persons guilty of crime and where he is honestly discharging or seeking to discharge his duties.

I object most strenuously to the haling into court of innocent men and women whose only crime consists in being members of an election board seeking to certify that the Democratic and not the Republican ticket carried the last election.

The district attorney uses his office deliberately and maliciously to drag these people to court, make them lose their time from work, just so as to be able to prove that he has discovered frauds which as a matter of fact never existed.

As far as I know, this is the first time in the history of my city that a Federal district attorney took it upon himself to investigate elections.

It has been the unbroken tradition in New York for the local authorities and the State authorities to supervise all of our elections, and I do not know of any instance in the last score of years in which a Federal attorney would take it upon himself to become the chief investigator of alleged election frauds.

That is the sort of indictment the United States district attorney of New York after three months of investigation is getting. He has been indicting people most cruelly and unjustly seeking to take away from them their rights under the Constitution, both State and Federal.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why does not the gentleman have him impeached?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What I say is enough for impeachment. I do not want to be that cruel. I want to give him and his assistants the opportunity to appear before the Committee on the Judiciary and present their defense, because I am ready to-morrow to prove that he is using that office for his own purpose and feathering his own nest and abusing the privileges of his office and powers vested in him.

I am interested only in the protection of the weak and innocent citizens of my district, who are not treated fairly and who are forced to be made defendants in criminal cases, and retain counsel at great expense so as to prove their innocence where nothing in the wide world justifies this uncalled-for conduct on the part of the Federal attorney.

I believe it is my duty as a Member of Congress to protect the interests of these prosecuted citizens, men and women, so as to prevent injustice to be done to them.

Let George Z. Medalie explain his conduct. If he is innocent, I shall be the first to declare my gratification; but if he is guilty, let justice act accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BUTLER

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] at the memorial exercises held in The Dalles, Oreg., for the late Representative ROBERT R. BUTLER, of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Hon. W. C. HAWLEY, of Oregon, at the memorial exercises of the late ROBERT R. BUTLER at The Dalles, Oreg.:

These exercises are held under the auspices of the House of Representatives of the United States in memory of our former colleague, ROBERT REYBURN BUTLER, as an expression of the affection and esteem of the Congress.

Congressman BUTLER was born in Butler, Johnston County, Tenn., on September 24, 1881, and was the son of Dr. William Roderick Butler and his wife, Rebecca Carolin (Grayson) Butler.

He was educated in Holly Springs College and was graduated in 1903 from the department of law, Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn.

He engaged in the practice of law in Tennessee and Oregon for some 18 years. He was appointed circuit judge of the eleventh judicial district of Oregon, from which position he resigned after a service of two years. He was a member of the Oregon State Senate from 1912 to 1916 and from 1924 to 1928. He was elected as presidential elector in 1908 and again in 1916. He was elected to Congress in 1928 to fill the unexpired term of Judge Nicholas John Sinnott and reelected to the Seventy-first and Seventy-second Congresses.

He attained eminence as a lawyer, was an able and upright judge, and in the Senate of Oregon a sound and effective legislator. He loved and studied the great literature of the world. His was an earnest and informed patriotism. He diligently studied our history, the policies of its great leaders, and spoke with convincing eloquence of its achievements and ideals. He carefully explored every question with which he had to deal, and from a wealth of information he arrived at his conclusions.

He was by training and experience a sound and learned lawyer; his legislative experience was of great value; his wide and discriminating study of public questions informed him of the country's needs and enabled him to judge the value and practicability of legislation proposed to serve them.

That is, he came to Congress unusually well prepared and well qualified to serve in that distinguished body. He fully justified his election thereto by the quality of service he rendered.

The Congress of the United States is an exacting body. A Representative may enter its halls with a lifetime of success and achievement to his credit, but the House will ask, "Can he serve well here; is he capable of valuing information; is he careful in his statements, thoroughly advised before he speaks, able to form sound conclusions, and is the public welfare his greatest aim?"

Those in that body who are most often speaking on the floor of the House are not necessarily its leaders. Men of moment in Congress do not attain leadership quickly. Members will study, discuss, and judge them to determine what motives actuate them and whether at all times they are to be trusted.

In the comparatively short time Judge BUTLER was in Congress he steadily made his way, because he demonstrated his possession of the essential qualifications for service in that great body. His ideal was the public good and the welfare of the people he had to serve. From these purposes he could not be swerved.

When he came to Congress I was a member of the Committee on Committees that assigned the Republican representatives to committee appointments. Judge BUTLER did not request places on committees because of their supposed importance. The importance of any committee in any particular session depends upon the character of the legislation demanded to serve the country at the time. However, some committees have a continuing importance as the questions with which they deal are perennial in character. Judge BUTLER, taking into consideration his experience, training, and geographical location, decided he could best serve the country and his constituents if he were given places on the committees on Public Lands, Reclamation and Irrigation, and Claims. The event justified the wisdom of his decision. In four years and under unusual conditions, in adverse national circumstances, he has been unusually successful. What he has done will be his enduring monument and the fitting conclusion of a notable life.

The Congress of the United States expressed its sincere sorrow at his death and directed that a committee be appointed to accompany him to his last resting place in attestation of the honor and esteem in which the Nation held him, represented here by Representatives ROBERT L. DOUGHTON of North Carolina, in all probability the next chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, ALBERT JOHNSON of Washington, who attained national fame because of his work on immigration, ROBERT M. SIMMONS of Nebraska, an important member of the Committee on Appropriations, and RALPH HORR of Washington, of many useful public services, and myself.

We appear here as the representatives of the greatest legislative body in the world to express its sense of public loss in the death of a strong, able, and useful Member and that the world may know the honor due him.

The Congress of the United States has appointed this ceremony to call to the attention of the people of the United States, and especially to those of this district and State, that there has passed from its Halls a public servant worthy of great honor because of his acts and deeds and high conception of his duties and responsibilities. We have held and will continue to hold him in love, honor, and remembrance, because daily contacts and observation have determined him to be worthy of confidence and esteem.

I have given a brief summary of the life work of this notable man. The first stage of his life has ended. I am a profound believer in the immortality of the human soul and its continued intelligent existence and its capacity of unlimited development.

The memories of mankind generally of the worthy deeds and lives of yesterday and to-day are obscured by interests arising in the floods of the unending to-morrows with their immediate importance.

"So fleet the works of men back to earth again, Ancient and holy things fade like a dream."

But there is a memory that holds in everlasting remembrance earth's worthy men and their deeds, that accounts them of inestimable value, and preserves them in unfading recollection. Worth in life and character are imperishable. They add to the sum total of the value in human life and ennoble humankind. They are the vesture of immortality.

JOHN PAUL JONES

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon John Paul Jones, father of the American Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

John Hay, when he attended Brown University in his freshman year, was called upon for a speech and the toastmaster said, "Now, Hay, we don't want anything dry from you." "Well," said Hay, "now, really green hay can never be dry."

And I doubt not you may think the same of me to-night, so I shall endeavor to make this story as interesting as possible by giving you as much of the original words of John Paul Jones.

The Continental Congress met in its second session in Philadelphia on May 10, 1775.

It appointed a naval or marine committee, of which Robert Morris was chairman, to consider, inquire, and report on the organization of a naval force.

On June 24 the committee met and authorized its chairman to invite John Paul Jones, of Virginia, to lay before them such information and advice as might seem to him useful to the committee.

In order to understand more clearly the man of whom I am speaking, I shall give you a brief description of him.

First of all, he was a man of action, with energy and will power; he was also a dreamer, for he had a vivid imagination, and from his earliest days loved America and yearned to become like his brother William, an American colonist. He at an early age prepared himself for the future service to which he was called. As Lowell said in speaking of our country—

"They love her best who to themselves are true,
And what they dare to dream of, dare to do."

He carried himself erect, with dignity and with the air of a man completely self-confident, with a firm and supple gait like a panther.

He dressed neatly and carefully in the uniform of an American naval officer, as passed by the marine committee of the Continental Congress September 5, 1776, 3-cornered hat, a blue coat with red facings, starched cuffs, high stock collar, a cascade of delicate white ruffles, flat yellow brass buttons, scarlet waist coat edged with lace, blue breeches, white stockings, and low soft leather shoes; his buttonholes were embroidered with gold thread.

He stood 5 feet 7 inches in height, with slender legs, yet powerful shoulders and chest, small hands and feet, his dark brown hair powdered and tied with a queue at the back. His high cheek bones and grayish black eyes gave him the appearance of a man who was sound in body and mind. The best likeness of him is the bust by Houdon owned by the Academy of Fine Arts of Philadelphia. It was made from actual measurements from his person.

He possessed the "mens sana in corpus sanum."

He was a great reader and a careful student, using his spare time on shipboard toward improving his mind, which he undoubtedly accomplished, as his numerous letters written in beautiful English attest.

It is needless to say that he was absolutely fearless.

At a party at Norfolk, Va., he knocked down a drunken English lieutenant for saying something low about American women. He was small of stature, soft in speech, but under his softness he was bold, very daring, very resourceful, active, and intelligent.

In Longfellow's words: "The velvet scabbard held a sword of steel."

John Paul, for his name was not as yet Jones, was the son of an intelligent fisherman, who lived on a large estate known as Arbigland, on the southern coast of Scotland, along the Solway Firth; his father was in the employ of Robert Craik, a member of Parliament, who had bought or leased the estate from the Earl of Selkirk.

He was the youngest son of five children, was born in the year 1747, was educated at the parish school, and early took to the sea in his native fishing boats. At the age of 12 he made his first voyage in the brig Friendship to Virginia.

Here, on the banks of the Rappahannock River, he first met his brother, William Paul, who, having previously gone to Virginia, had married the daughter of a planter named William Jones and assumed his name and also the management of his estate.

William Jones, the owner of the estate at this time, offered to adopt John Paul, but he decided to stick to his ship and returned to Scotland.

He served on board a British man-of-war as acting midshipman and stayed there long enough to find that family influence had more to do with advancement than personal merit; his juniors were promoted while he himself remained unnoticed.

He later became a mate in an African slaver, but soon gave up this business in disgust, for out of every 100 slaves 20 died on the voyage across the Atlantic. And it was reported that large fortunes were made from this traffic on both sides of the Atlantic.

Later on he was appointed captain of a ship to trade with the West Indies. During this cruise the crew mutinied at the island of Tobago. A man named Maxwell was the ringleader. He attacked John Paul with a crowbar; and he, in defending himself with his sword, killed the man. On his return he was tried for murder on the high seas, but acquitted. He was of a sensitive disposition and for some time it weighed on his conscience.

The period of his life in which he took such a prominent part in our struggle for independence is naturally most interesting to Americans.

Now, in 1760 his brother in Viriginia died, leaving the estate consisting of a large plantation with some 200 slaves to John Paul, provided he assumed the name of Jones.

Having gladly agreed to this arrangement, John Paul adopted the name of Jones and became a Virginia colonist, where he hoped to live "in calm contemplation and poetic ease" for the rest of his days.

While he had formerly led a rough life and had been accustomed to all kinds of hardships and had been on all sorts of ships, he had never neglected the improvement of his mind and the refinement of his manners. He was therefore a very acceptable neighbor in the little Virginia colony. It is said he was in love with Dorothea Spottswood Dandridge, who in 1777 married Patrick Henry, then Governor of Virginia, as his second wife. She was the daughter of a former captain of the British Navy.

Jones settled in Virginia about a year before the first Continental Congress met. Of course it was now necessary for him to take a stand on one side or the other, and as he was a Virginia landowner he most naturally sided with the Colonies.

He determined also to do all in his power to actively aid the Colonies in achieving their independence.

Early in 1775 Philip Livingston, of New York, visited Virginia to discuss with its leaders—Washington, Jefferson, and Madison—the best methods to pursue in order to carry out the stupendous work they had undertaken of building a new nation. Paul Jones attended some of these meetings. He writes:

"I availed myself of these conferences to assure Colonel Washington, Mr. Jefferson, and others that my services would be at their disposal whenever they should require service in my own element."

In 1774 it became clear that the issue between the British Crown and the Colonies could only be decided by force. On April 19, 1775, the Battle of Lexington was fought, and on June 17 the Battle of Bunker Hill. At this time two French frigates under command of Commodore De Kersaint, with the Duc de Chartres as second in command, put into Hampton Roads. Jones cordially entertained these gentlemen, and in this way made friends with them, which lasted through his life.

In accordance with the invitation of the naval committee, Jones set out for Philadelphia to advise with them about forming an American navy, the proper qualifications for naval officers, and the best type of boats for them to buy.

Jones worked for many weeks on the reply that he prepared for the committee; and, in the words of Mr. Thursfield, "This masterly document is still, if I may so call it, the moral and intellectual charter of Annapolis and the sure and everlasting warrant of Jones's title to be called 'the father of the American Navy.'" I will quote a part of it:

"As this is to be the foundation—or, I may say, the first keel timber—of a new Navy, which all patriots must hope shall become amongst the foremost in the world, it should be well begun in the selection of the first list of officers. You will pardon me, I know, if I say that I have enjoyed much opportunity during my sea life to observe the duties and responsibilities that are put upon naval officers.

"It is by no means enough that an officer of the Navy should be a capable mariner. He must be that, of course, but also a great deal more. He should be as well a gentleman of liberal education, refined manners, punctilious courtesy, and the nicest sense of personal honour.

"He should be not only able to express himself clearly and with force in his own language with tongue and pen but he should also be versed in French and Spanish (for an American officer particularly the former), for our relations with France must necessarily soon become exceedingly close in view of the mutual hostility of the two countries toward Great Britain.

"The naval officer should be familiar with the principles of international law and the general practice of admiralty jurisprudence, because such knowledge may often, when cruising at a distance from home, be necessary to protect his flag from insult or his crew from imposition or injury in foreign ports.

"He should also be conversant with the usages of diplomacy and capable of maintaining, if called upon, a dignified and judicious diplomatic correspondence.

"Coming now to view the naval officer aboard ship, and in relation to those under his command, he should be the soul of tact, patience, justice, firmness, and charity. No meritorious act of a subordinate should escape his attention or be left to pass without its reward, if even the reward be only one word of approval.

"Every commander should keep constantly before him the truth, that to be well obeyed he must be perfectly esteemed.

"But it is not alone with subordinate officers that a commander has to deal. Behind them, and the foundation of all, is the crew. To his men the commanding officer should be prophet, priest, and king. His authority when off shore being necessarily absolute, the crew should be as one man impressed that the captain, like the sovereign, 'can do no wrong.'"

The report was at once adopted by the naval committee but not before it had been submitted by Hewes to Washington, who said: "Mr. Jones is clearly not only a master mariner within the scope of the art of navigation, but he also holds a strong and profound sense of the military weight of command on the sea. His powers of usefulness are great and must be constantly kept in view." Hewes was a member of the naval committee and a great friend and supporter of Jones.

Paul Jones wisely opposed constructions of ships of the line. He said, "Such ships are too large both in building and keeping in commission and require too many men for our present resources. Their use is mainly strategic and must operate in fleets and squadrons calculated to fight ranged battles, etc. On the other hand, I would keep a step farther than the English and French have yet gone in frigate designs. I would create a class of 18-pounder frigates to carry 38 or 40 guns. By this means we shall have a frigate type one-half again stronger than any now afloat."

Jones was now made first lieutenant of the Alfred under command of Dudley Saltonstall, of Boston. This was one of the ships he had surveyed and recommended for purchase.

He was deeply disappointed at not having command; but, as Saltonstall had not arrived in Philadelphia, he was directed to take command and break the pennant, the "Pine Tree and Rattlesnake" emblem with the motto, "Don't tread on me."

This problem was used for a few months before the Stars and Stripes were adopted, and Jones also had the honor of first hoisting the flag of our country over the Ranger.

The first attempt of the new Navy was not very good. In February, 1776, under Commodore Ezekiel Hopkins, four vessels set out for the Bahamas to intercept British commerce. Thanks to Jones, they captured Fort Nassau in New Providence.

They returned early in April, having failed to capture a British sloop, the Glasgow. The result was a series of courts-martial, both Hopkins and Saltonstall being retired, which, unfortunately for their own reputations, was only temporary.

Jones incurred no blame for this and thanks to his friend Hewes was given command of the sloop Providence. On August 21 he set sail for a six weeks' cruise, which brought him his first triumph. His ship was small but fast and carried only 12 guns. He selected his own crew. He captured three valuable prizes, which he sent home. While cruising in the Providence off the island of Bermuda he sighted a fleet of five sail, the largest of which he thought a merchantman. He ran down to cut her off but found she was an English frigate, the Soleby, of 28 guns and a fast sailer. With such a ship the little Providence had no chance, so he tried to escape, hoisting the Continental colors.

He now gave an example of skill and daring worthy of the best type of seamanship. The frigate began firing and Jones returned it. For four hours he was pursued, finally getting within musket shot.

The situation was now dangerous, but Jones was equal to the emergency. With great calmness he began edging gradually to leeward without arousing suspicion, until he had brought the Soleby on his weather quarter, when the helm of the Providence was turned sharply; suddenly crowding on all sail, he was off before the wind and escaped.

Jones said, "Our hairbreadth escape and the saucy manner in which we made it must have mortified the enemy not a little. He might have fired several broadsides when we were within musket range, but was a poor marksman and did not hit the Providence with any of the many shots he fired."

The news of his success was a great encouragement to the marine committee.

On his return he was promoted to captain, receiving his commission from the hand of Thomas Jefferson.

He now for the first time learned of the loss of his property in Virginia by Lord Dunmore.

Lord Dunmore, the British Governor of the Colony of Virginia, having been driven from the neighborhood, took refuge on a British man-of-war. There were no British soldiers in the Province, but with the aid of a few loyalists and negro slaves, to whom he promised freedom, he had ravaged the Virginia coast. Among other destructions, he completely demolished Jones's plantation—his houses were ruined, his wharf broken, his buildings burned, his livestock killed, and his slaves carried off to Jamaica to be sold. This left Jones penniless. He said at the time, "I have no fortune left but my sword."

In April, 1777, Jones was cut to the heart to find in a new list of commanders he was placed as low as eighteenth on the list; that even Hacker, who had deserted him, was above him. His friend and patron, Hewes, had lost his seat in Congress and was therefore no longer on the marine committee.

On June 14, 1777, Congress voted two resolutions:

That the flag of the United States be 13 alternate red and white stripes and 13 white stars on a blue field, and that Capt. Paul Jones be appointed to command the ship Ranger. This appointment restored his hopes and gave him encouragement.

The Ranger had been built in Portsmouth, N. H. She was very fast, with 18 guns, of 308 tons.

He was commissioned by Congress to carry the news of Burgoyne's surrender to Franklin and sailed from Philadelphia on October 30, 1777, promising to cross in 30 days. He landed at Brest on December 2, two days beyond his promise.

On the morning of December 5 he placed the dispatches in Franklin's hands in Paris.

Just two months later, February 6, 1778, the treaty of alliance with France and the United Colonies was signed at Versailles, which was of tremendous moral and physical importance to our country as well as assuring American independence. This was followed later by the dispatch of a French army to the United States under Rochambeau and a fleet under De Grasse, to which largely were due the final surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Jones did not arrive a day too soon. Louis XVI was King of France, and she was already, although a great power, a bankrupt country, having been ruined by the extreme extravagance of Louis XIV and Louis XV. The very year Jones arrived she had a huge national deficit, which was daily increasing.

A few years later the Revolution broke out and it would have been too late to receive any aid from France.

Here on February 14, 1778, in the harbor of Brest, Jones, on the Ranger, received the first salute ever offered to the American flag, from the French Grand Fleet under D'Orvilliers.

Jones used the Ranger for a descent on Whitehaven on the Scotland coast. Its actual results were insignificant, for he merely destroyed a single vessel, but it taught the English that the security of their ports was in danger and compelled them to take expensive measures of defense. Disraeli said:

"The descent on Whitehaven produced consternation all over the Kingdom. Expresses were immediately dispatched to all the capital seaports; all strangers in Whitehaven were arrested. Lookout vessels were appointed at every port and all forts were put into condition."

During one of these raids his men carried off some plate belonging to Lady Selkirk, but it was later returned by Jones.

Jones crossed the channel opposite Carrickfergus. There some fishermen told him the British war sloop Drake of 20 guns was at anchor. Jones was very glad to hear it, for he had been anxious for a fight with the English in their own waters.

The Drake moved out slowly, hoisted her colors, and hailed, "What ship is that?" "The American continental ship Ranger," called Nathan Sargent, as the American flag went up. "Come on; we're waiting for you."

The ships gradually were closing together, and then there burst from each a broadside. The action became furious, and both the captain and first lieutenant of the English ship fell. "I have never before seen men," wrote Jones, "handle guns as they handled the Ranger's 9-pounders." Holes began to be seen in the Drake's sides, and Jones ordered the guns to be aimed for the sails and rigging in order to save the hull and take her prisoner. Very soon the ship was helpless and soon struck her colors, and Jones boarded her after a fight lasting 1 hour and 40 minutes. She lost 42 men out of 160. Jones lost only two killed and seven wounded. Among the dead was Lieutenant Wallingford.

Jones returned to Paris, and at Franklin's house at Passy he met the Duke and Duchess de Chartres.

At the suggestion of the Duc de Chartres he wrote a letter to the King of France, asking for assistance in getting a ship. The letter was shown to Franklin, who returned it without comment.

The letter was presented to Louis XVI by the Duchess de Chartres early in December and on December 16th Jones was received in audience by the King with the result that he was given command of an old 40-gun ship LeDuras, which he renamed Bonhomme Richard in honor of Franklin.

Jones was authorized to enlist French sailors, if needed, and the ship was to be armed and equipped at the cost of the French Government. But the money not being available at once, the Duchess de Chartres, whose private fortune was immense, gave Jones an order on her banker for 10,000 louis d'or, almost $50,000. This money Jones insisted upon regarding as a loan and when later he offered to refund it, the Duc replied: "No; not unless you wish her to dismiss you from her friendship. She did not lend it to you, she gave it to the cause." Of the Bonhomme Richard's crew not more than 50 were Americans, the rest were French and Portuguese and a few British, with 122 French soldiers; besides Jones had the Alliance, the Pallas, and the Vengeance—three small American vessels.

Spain had announced an alliance with France and declared war against England, June 16, 1779. Admiral d'Orvilliers, commander of the French fleet, had put out from Brest unopposed with a fleet of 28 sail of the line, and before the end of July had joined the Spanish fleet off the Peninsula, making a total combined fleet of 66 sail of the line. By August 16 he was off Plymouth and on September 1 came in sight of the British Channel Fleet of 38 ships. But Admiral Sir Charles Hardy declined to risk an action, and D'Orvilliers did not attempt to force one.

It was just at this time that Jones entered the North Sea with his little squadron, having passed to the westward of both Ireland and Scotland, and on September 17 was off the Firth of Forth.

It was not merely luck that gave him this opportunity, it was partly due to careful arrangement and calculation. He knew that while the French fleet was at sea all the available British ships would be needed to watch it.

The first part of the cruise was devoted mainly to capturing prizes, which were sent back to French, Danish, and Dutch ports, their crews being held as prisoners on the Bonhomme Richard; thus it was he had over 200 prisoners on board under hatches during the fight with the Serapis.

Jones attempted to make a descent on Leith, hoping to place it under contribution, but was driven out by a high gale. The Alliance took no part, as she had now assumed an independent command under Landais, a disloyal French officer, who had been dismissed from the French Navy and having gone to America, induced the naval committee to give him a command.

Jones knew that a British convoy from the Baltic was due here about this season and that it generally made for Flamborough Head after crossing the North Sea.

He got news of the convoy on September 22, 1779; the Vengeance told him it had put into Bredlington Bay and was awaiting a favorable wind to carry it to the Downs. The next day it was sighted.

The convoy was attempting to weather Flamborough Head and the escorting men-of-war, the Serapis and Countess of Scarborough, occupied a covering position between Jones and the merchantman. The morning was spent in maneuvering for a position. The merchantman used this opportunity to escape. Jones ordered the Pallas to attack the Countess of Scarborough—a small ship of 24 guns—which she did, and later compelled her to surrender after a stiff action. He ordered the Vengeance to keep out, saying "You are not big enough to bear a hand in this."

Meanwhile the Alliance had reappeared, but not to aid the Richard.

About 7 o'clock in the evening the two big ships were within short range of each other, Jones having the weather gage.

They were about 7 miles offshore, the wind being light from the southwest and veering to the westward, the sea smooth, the sky clear, with full moon; both ships were on the same tack heading northwest.

The Serapis twice hailed the Richard, and the second time was answered by a broadside. Then began a fight lasting somewhat over three hours, probably one of the most desperate in the annals of the sea.

"The Serapis, with 40 guns," said Disraeli, "was one of the finest frigates in his Majesty's navy and had been off the stocks only a few months. Her crew were picked men, and she was commanded by Capt. Richard Pearson, an officer celebrated even in the British navy for his undaunted courage and exemplary conduct. The Bonhomme Richard was an old ship with decayed timbers and had made four voyages to the East Indies. Many of her guns were useless and all were ancient. The American commander had nothing to trust to but his own undaunted courage and extraordinary skill."

In a very short time the Richard's lower gun deck of 18-pounders was disabled and put out of action. The remaining guns on the upper deck were serviceable and were very well served.

Pearson tried to get across the Richard's bows so as to rake her, but failed; the two ships fouled, and Jones attempted to grapple, but the grapnels did not hold, and the two ships fell apart again. The firing was again renewed, and it was clear that the Richard was getting the worst of it.

"Dick," said Jones to Richard Dale, his first lieutenant, in command of the gun deck, "his metal is too heavy for us at this business. He is hammering us all to pieces; we must close with him; we must get hold of him! Be prepared at any moment to abandon this deck and bring what men you have to the spar deck, and give them small arms for boarding when you come up."

The Bonhomme Richard was leaking badly, and although the prisoners were kept at the pumps she had sunk 2 feet below her ordinary trim. He reproved at the time a sailor for swearing, with the admonition that any moment they might be in eternity.

But now the wind commenced to veer to the west and freshened as it veered. Gradually the Richard forged ahead and commenced to wear across the bows of the Serapis; being on the windward side, she took the wind out of her enemy's sails and stopped her headway.

If she could complete this plan, she would have another chance to grapple.

It was just now that Landais, the captain of the Alliance, took a hand in the affair, and after firing a couple of broadsides in such a way as only to hit the Richard, she turned and steered off.

Meanwhile Jones continued his plan of attack of crossing the bows of the Serapis and, since his guns were mostly silenced, of bringing his musketry into play.

Captain Pearson thus describes the fight at this point:

"I backed our topsails in order to get square with him again, which as soon as he observed, he then filled, put his helm a-weather, and laid us athwart-hawse; his mizzen shrouds took our jib boom, which hung him for some time, till it at last gave way, and we dropt alongside of each other, head and stern, when the fluke of our spare anchor hooking his quarter, we became so close, fore and aft, that the muzzles of our guns touched each other's sides. In this position we engaged from half past 8 to half past 10.

"Now that the anchor of the Serapis had caught the Bonhomme Richard, Jones had it securely lashed there, passing the lashes with his own hand in order to be sure that they held.

"The main deck of the Richard was now abandoned for Jones had determined, as soon as he could grapple, to fight with muskets and hand grenades. But the Serapis was still in good shape and now her starboard broadsides were brought into action, and the gun crews shifted from port to starboard. Her port sills had been closed and could not be opened because of the nearness of the ships. They were blown out by the first discharge of the guns. While the timbers of the Richard were being torn to pieces, Jones was getting the upper hand on the deck. He kept up a murderous fire with his small arms and muskets, so that scarcely a man could live on the deck of the Serapis. And, particularly, he attempted to prevent the effort of the Serapis crew from casting loose the fastenings of the anchor, which held her to the Richard."

At this part of the battle it is probable some one on the Richard called for quarter. As Captain Pearson said in his court-martial, "Hearing or thinking that I heard a call for quarter from the enemy, I hailed to ask if he had struck his colors. I did not myself hear the reply; but one of my midshipmen, Mr. Hood, did hear it, and reported it to me. It was to the effect that he was just beginning to fight. This, at first, I thought to be mere bravado on his part; but I soon perceived that it was the defiance of a man who, if he could not conquer, would sink with his ship alongside."

But Jones did not propose to sink, but rather to conquer.

He had prompted the Duchess of Chartres a frigate and this was his chance.

The master at arms on the Richard now opened the hatches and told the prisoners to come on the deck, believing the ship was sinking. Jones knocked a man down (he seems to have been everywhere during the fight), and Pierre Gerard, his French orderly, drove the others back, and killed one man who refused to go. Gerard was later second in command of the French ship Neptune at Trafalgar, and, therefore, took part in two of the most interesting naval battles in history.

Jones was afterward accused of murdering his prisoners at court of inquiry by order of the French Minister of Marine and Gerard stated he had killed the man on his own responsibility. Asked why he did so, without orders and during the presence of his commander, he replied, "Pour éviter les desagrements, monsieur, aussi pour encourager les autres prissoniers; ainsi pour subvenir au commodore les besoins d'un devoir assez penible."

Jones now sent up a supply of hand grenades into the maintop to be dropped from the yardarm into the enemy's hatch. A midshipman named Fanning succeeded in dropping one of them through the hatch to the main deck, where it ignited a row of cartridges, which did very great damage and rendered most of his guns on this deck unfit for action.

Pearson now tried one last chance. He anchored his ship, hoping that the Richard would drift clear of him, but he was disappointed, for the lashings held.

The fighting on the Serapis now relaxed and Jones took this opportunity to order John Mayrant, in charge of some American sailors recently exchanged from British jails, to board the enemy.

"Now is your time, John," cried Jones, "go on." Instantly, with a cry of "Remember Portsea jail," Mayrant sprang over the netting, followed by his men, and began fighting their way aft. There was little resistance; though Mayrant himself was slightly wounded, he shot his opponent down, and this was the last casualty of the battle. Pearson now struck his colors.

After the battle, the Alliance and Vengeance, signaling that they were sailing for the Texel, left the Serapis and Jones with 700 men aboard, but after two days of storm Jones anchored safely beside them in the afternoon of October 3, 1779, having saved all his wounded and prisoners.

At Amsterdam large crowds gathered to see him. Two disagreeable tasks awaited him. The first was to suspend Captain Landais and place Lieutenant Degge in command of the Alliance. The second to prevent Sir Joseph York, the British minister to Holland, from demanding the surrender of Jones and his crew as "rebels and pirates."

Landais angrily challenged Jones to a duel. Jones accepted. He appointed as his seconds Lunt and Mayrant. They told Landais, who was undoubtedly crazy, that Jones had chosen for his weapons pistols at 10 paces. Landais held out for the rapier, but they insisted, and he dropped the subject and left for Paris.

When Jones left the Ranger he took the American flag—which had been presented to him by the ladies of Philadelphia—with him to the Richard. When he returned to America he apologized to one of the ladies who made the flag for not having brought it back with all its glories. "I could not," he said, "deny to my dead on her decks, who had given their lives to keep it flying, the glory of taking it with them." "You did exactly right, Commodore," the lady said. "That flag is just where we want it to be flying, at the bottom of the sea over the only ship that ever sank in victory. If you had taken it from it and brought it back, we would hate you."

Here ends the active career of John Paul Jones as a naval hero under our flag, and here ends my story. It is true he served in the Russian Navy at the invitation of the Empress Catharine, but he was very badly treated by his associates. He died in Paris in 1792 at 45 years of age.

Jones's last words were: "Give to my good old Dick my sword given me by the King"—meaning, of course, Richard Dale.

Thanks is due to Gen. Horace Porter in his untiring and patriotic effort in finding the hero's remains in Paris and bringing them with all military and naval honors to a permanent resting place at Annapolis, where his spirit, let us hope, still dominates that great naval college. The President of the United States himself pronounced the funeral oration in the presence of a very distinguished company.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, when the military appropriations bill was before the House I offered, and there was adopted, an amendment to the bill which does away with the constructive service pay. The effect of this amendment and the reasons for it have not been very well stated to the public by the people who have attempted to criticize it.

It has been said by some that it is going back on a moral obligation owed to certain of our soldiers. That is not the fact.

At the present time officers who were commissioned from the ranks or from the National Guard are allowed to count their guard service and their enlisted service for the purpose of computing their pay, their pay being based, to a certain extent, on their length of service in the Army as commissioned officers. Thus an enlisted man or a former National Guard officer who receives a commission goes into the officer list of the Army and takes a position on the promotion list, is assigned to duty commensurate with that position, is under the officers above him, but by reason of the constructive-service proposition he is paid on the basis of commissioned service which he has not rendered, and he receives pay above those who are over him in command. Oftentimes one who is three or four ranks above an officer who has come into commissioned service from the ranks or from the National Guard, as a result of this discriminatory legislation, will receive pay below his inferior officers. Thus a lieutenant colonel who is a graduate of the Academy may receive less pay than a first lieutenant. Thus a major who became a major a long time ahead of one who is a junior in rank and under him by 500 or 1,000 numbers on the promotion list, and who may actually be in command of his junior, may receive from $1,000 to $1,500 less pay.

My amendment wipes out this false basis of pay and places them all on the same basis. It does away with the discrimination which permits those in lower rank and performing less important functions and less responsible work receiving higher pay than those ranking above them and carrying more responsibility.

Another condition has existed that those who were commissioned prior to July 1, 1922, from the Military Academy have been permitted to count their years at the academy toward their longevity pay, while those who were commissioned after July 1, 1922, were not permitted to do so. My amendment wipes out this discrimination.

It has always seemed to me that before we cut pay we should wipe out abuses and do away with those things which because of the inequalities they create and because of the fact that they permit in so many instances those with lower ranks and those performing less responsible functions to receive greater emoluments than their superiors. It seems to me that we should tend to those things first.

I have been criticized by many people who have not stated the facts, both on the floor of the House and before the Senate committee, over the radio, and in the newspapers.

My amendment does not touch the pay of second lieutenants to any extent except in perhaps a few rare instances. It does not touch the pay to any appreciable extent of most of the officers. Frankly, I believe two-thirds of the officers of the Army are in favor of my amendment. I quote from a letter received from one of them yesterday:

> As a former constituent of yours I am writing to let you know that your amendment will meet with the approval of the overwhelming majority of Army officers who for 10 years have had to watch a preferred group among their number receive a bonus of three and a half million dollars a year.
> The great bulk of the total sum went to about 1,500 officers, while about 3,000 more received enough of a crumb to induce them to support such a pay arrangement. The other 8,000, doing the same work as the favored group, had to take less than a decent living wage and make the best of it.

Just to show that this is no new matter and that it has been given very marked attention on the part of Congress, I quote from the report of the joint committee of Congress headed by Senator REED, of Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs:

> As noted above, under the present system it is possible not only for officers within one grade of a single service to be drawing more pay and allowances than their seniors in that grade, but also more than many of their seniors in one, two, three, and even four grades above. A striking case in point is the recent fact that a lieutenant of the Navy was receiving $6,357 a year, $138 more than the rear admiral, four grades above him, in command of a force composed of 38 destroyers, 1 cruiser, and 2 repair ships, on one of which the lieutenant was serving in, necessarily because of his rank, a subordinate capacity.
> This situation, though unusual in so marked a degree, is in lesser degree, with a disparity of but one or two grades involved, a frequent condition of affairs in many of the services, and countless examples could be cited. It is in the violation of this cardinal principle that the joint service pay act is most at fault and that its effect is injurious to the efficiency and morale of the services. As stated above (par. 46), this condition is difficult to eliminate in a pay schedule applicable to several services, but it can be ameliorated by having only base pay for each grade, by strictly limiting the types of prior service not counted for rank that may be counted for pay purposes, and by the elimination of allowances.

This report was signed by Senator REED and all of the other members of the joint committee who were on it. (Five members were from the Senate and the other five were from the House.)

It will be seen that this committee recommended practically what I have done and their report was presented to Congress by Senator REED on the 24th of January, 1931, and appears in Senate Document No. 259, Seventy-first Congress, third session, page 21.

This amendment is not a blow at national defense. It is an effort not only to protect the taxpayers of the United States from an abuse against the Public Treasury by paying one type of officer who performs less important functions and does less important work more money than those who are carrying the responsibility. It will restore to the vast majority of officers in the Army the morale which this long-standing discrimination against them in the matter of pay has destroyed.

Those who have opposed the amendment have cited individual cases of beneficiaries of the abuse which has crept up under the present legislation, but they have studiously avoided discussing the discrimination that this abuse has leveled against officers who are carrying more responsibility and are of far more importance to the Army.

My hope is that the people will pay attention to the facts and will understand this situation and where they are called upon to express an opinion will express it honestly and fairly in the interest of national defense and in favor of wiping out this abuse.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which were ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States in opposition to continuance of Federal gasoline tax

Whereas the Federal gasoline sales tax is the premium which the American people pay against the speedy return of prosperity; and

Whereas although the revenue which this tax has brought into the Federal Treasury totals millions of dollars, it is most unprofitable as a measure of economy and of sound business judgment because of the burden which it imposes upon the American motorists; and

Whereas gasoline is the only commodity in the Nation on which taxes are paid in excess of the value of the cost of the product; and

Whereas the Federal gasoline tax makes the tax total practically confiscatory, the same being levied at a rate of 130 per cent of the selling price of the product; and

Whereas from July 1, 1932, to December 31, 1932, the collections of the 1-cent Federal tax on gasoline totaled $52,839,826.70; and

Whereas the Federal gasoline tax is inequitable, onerous, uneven, costly, and productive of evasion, being not merely double taxation but multiple taxation, unwittingly imposed by the Congress when they were seeking the general good; and

Whereas, based on 1932 collections, the total 1933 State and Federal gasoline taxes in Nebraska, assuming that the present tax of 4 cents per gallon upon the use and distribution of motor-vehicle fuel continues and that the 1-cent gasoline tax for the United States still remains in force and effect, will amount to the fabulous sum of $9,893,105, which the citizens and residents of the State of Nebraska will be compelled to pay; and

Whereas a continuance of the 1-cent Federal tax, together with the present 4-cent State of Nebraska gasoline tax, will constitute a tax burden which is so confiscatory that, in history, is without parallel: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in forty-ninth regular session assembled:

1. That this house goes on record as unalterably opposed to the continuance of the 1-cent Federal gasoline tax law and urges that the Congress of the United States repeal the same without delay.

2. That the chief clerk of this house be forthwith directed to forward copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Congressman representing the State of Nebraska in the National Congress, to the end that our Congressmen and Senators from Nebraska will vigorously oppose the continuance of the Federal gasoline tax and thereby hasten trade recovery in petroleum and other industries.

HENRY BOCK.

LINCOLN, NEBR., February 7, 1933.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the house of representatives of the forty-ninth session of the Legislature of Nebraska on February 6, 1933.

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve if passed, a bill to repeal the packers and stockyards act (act of Congress, August 15, 1921), in so far as it authorizes or permits Federal authorities to fix charges for stockyard services at public stockyards as defined in said packers and stockyards act

Whereas the growing and feeding of livestock is Nebraska's chief industry; and

Whereas the major part of our livestock is necessarily handled through public markets and must bear the charges for yardage, feeding, weighing, commissions, and other stockyard services at such markets; and

Whereas the charges for stockyard services are a direct burden on the farmers and livestock producers of this State; and

Whereas the charges at all public markets serving Nebraska farmers and producers of livestock, such as those at Omaha, Sioux City, Kansas City, St. Joseph, St. Louis, and Chicago, as well as those at other places, are unreasonable and extortionate. For example, at the Union Stock Yards at Omaha the charge for prairie hay is now $22.50 per ton, the charge for oats is 65 cents per bushel, and the charge for corn is 75 cents per bushel, the charges at the other stockyards being also unreasonable and extortionate; and

Whereas the charges for stockyard services are under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and it is impossible for the farmer or shipper to go to Washington to seek redress because of the distance and the expense involved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representativs of the State of Nebraska in forty-ninth regular session assembled:

SECTION 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, a bill to repeal the packers and stockyards act (act of Congress, August 15, 1921), in so far as such act authorizes or permits the control and fixing by the Federal authorities of charges for stockyard services, although the livestock receiving such services at public markets may be part of the current of interstate commerce and although it may be, at the time of receiving such services, actually in interstate commerce.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, Senators, and Representatives from Nebraska.

HENRY BOCK.

LINCOLN, NEBR., February 7, 1933.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the house of representatives of the forty-ninth session of the Legislature of Nebraska on February 7, 1933.

MAX ADAMS, Chief Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution memorializing Federal authorities to confine all contracts to be let for work to be done on or in connection with the Hoover Dam and other Federal construction projects to American firms and corporations

Whereas the Hoover Dam is a great national project being built at the expense of the American taxpayers; and

Whereas economic conditions at the present time are such that any public money spent for construction projects should be utilized to give employment to the maximum number of American citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Federal officials who have charge of the letting of contracts for any Federal construction project, including contracts for the purchase of equipment and materials, to exclude from consideration any foreign corporation or other bidders, and to let such contracts only to American citizens and American firms and corporations, and to require that all material used in such projects shall be manufactured in the United States of America; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

L. 709), by authorizing cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories in relieving distress among unemployed needy transients, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. BYRNES presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, memorializing Congress to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act so as to permit the States and political subdivisions thereof to borrow money for the purpose of refunding loans to be retired by taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

STATE OF DELAWARE,

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 13, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact House Joint Resolution 191 to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen in 1783 of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, a hero of the Revolutionary War, by issuing special series of postage stamps in honor of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko

Whereas on October 13, 1933, will occur the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, a hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the service rendered by him was of great value and assistance to the cause of American independence and of such high importance that on October 13, 1783, he was appointed brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army and was granted his naturalization as an American citizen; and

Whereas it is but fitting that proper recognition should be given to the memory of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, whose illustrious service in the War for American Independence is well known to all who are familiar with our history: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Delaware (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the General Assembly of the State of Delaware hereby respectfully requests and urges His Excellency, Hon. Herbert Hoover, President of the United States. the Senators and Representative in Congress from the State of Delaware to respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation which will provide for the effective carrying out of the provisions of the said resolution, whereby the Postmaster General would be authorized and directed to issue a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents, of such design and for such period as he may determine, commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment of Thaddeus Kosciusko as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army on October 13, 1783.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to President of the United States, Vice President of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each United States Senator and the Representative in Congress from Delaware.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution regarding legislation to secure the farmers their cost of production

Whereas the present position of agriculture is the worst it has been in the entire history of the country; farm prices are at the lowest in generations and are still tending downward; dairy products were in December, 1932, 23 points below December, 1931; at least one-fourth of all farmers are delinquent in the payment of interest or taxes; and most serious discontent is developing in rural districts, which threatens the safety of government and society itself; and

Whereas the crux of the entire problem lies in the price realized for dairy and other farm products, since manifestly the farmers can not meet interest and taxes and continue to support their families unless they are paid a price for their products which gives them their cost of production; and

Whereas no single State can cope with this problem alone, since competition in the sale of farm products is nation-wide and to some extent world-wide, while the Federal Government, through its control of interstate commerce, foreign affairs, and customs duties, can affect the entire country and at least materially influence world conditions: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to guarantee to farmers a price for their products which will give them their minimum cost of production, and expresses its opinion that no other measures of farm relief will prove adequate. While it is no doubt necessary also to refinance the farmers at a low rate of interest, such a measure will not alone solve the problem, since it will still leave the farmers with a great burden of debt which they must ultimately repay through the proceeds from the sale of their products. Still other measures may be helpful, but a solution of the farm problem can be attained only through securing farmers their minimum cost of production; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof. A copy of this resolution shall also be transmitted to the Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, President elect of the United States, to whom the farmers of this State and the entire country are hopefully looking for leadership in solving the farm problem.

R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CORNELIUS YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Joint resolution relating to Federal aid for owners of mortgaged farms and homesteads

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill appropriating and setting apart a special fund with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of aiding farmers and home owners who are in financial distress and unable to repay the mortgages on such farms and homesteads: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes and urges the Congress of the United States to pass such bill, or some other bill, which will aid farmers and home owners to retain their farms and homes; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the Presiding Officers of each House of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials and resolutions will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

(The resolutions and memorials presented by Mr. JOHNSON are from the board of directors of the city of Pasadena, and city councils of numerous cities, utility districts, and associations, all in the State of California.)

I present these resolutions and memorials and request that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials and resolutions will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

COOPERATION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WITH THE STATES FOR RELIEF PURPOSES

Mr. BRATTON. I send forward a joint memorial passed by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, memorializing Congress to pass the bill (S. 5121) to amend Title I of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, approved July 21, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 709), by authorizing cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories in relieving distress among unemployed needy transients, introduced by my colleague [Mr. CUTTING]. I ask that the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Manufactures, and it is as follows:

Senate Joint Memorial No. 2 (introduced by Senator J. W. Tackett)

A joint memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the passage of Senate bill 5121, introduced December 8, 1932, by Hon. BRONSON CUTTING, United States Senator of New Mexico

Whereas upon December 8, 1932, the Hon. BRONSON CUTTING, United States Senator of New Mexico, introduced S. 5121, being "A bill to amend Title I of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, approved July 21, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 709), by authorizing cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories in relieving distress among needy transients"; and

Whereas New Mexico, by reason of its geographical location and climate, is daily in receipt of many hundreds of transients, and by reason of present conditions of unemployment and distress many of these transients become stranded and subjects of charity; and

Whereas the passage of said bill will aid greatly in meeting these problems, which are growing too great for local charity to properly handle: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to act at once so as to assure the speedy passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the Presiding Officers of the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

FEDERAL AID IN HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I present a memorial passed by the Wyoming Legislature in the form of an appeal to Congress to enact legislation providing funds for Federal aid in highway construction, which I ask may be appropriately referred.

The joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled joint memorial No. 2, senate, of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original senate joint memorial No. 2, approved by the governor on February 7, 1933, at 8.40 a. m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 8th day of February, A. D. 1933.

A. M. CLARK, Secretary of State.
By C. J. ROGERS, Deputy.

Memorializing Congress to take favorable action on S. 36, or a similar bill, authorizing an appropriation for Federal aid in highway construction

Whereas the so-called public-land States are denied sovereignty over a great portion of their domain and are thus deprived of the income and revenues which would otherwise be derived from taxation of such areas, by reason where the Federal Government to a very great extent owes to such States the duty of building highways across such nonproductive areas; and

Whereas it has been customary in the past for the Congress of the United States to authorize an appropriation for Federal aid in highway construction for two years in advance and no such Federal aid has been authorized by Congress beyond the fiscal year 1933; and

Whereas the moneys appropriated by the Federal Government and used on highways reaches down directly to the workingman and is of direct benefit to a large number of laborers and others, thereby greatly relieving distress and suffering among the otherwise unemployed; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming has utilized all Federal aid heretofore authorized and the completion of the work now under construction will throw out of employment a large number of Wyoming citizens, thus adversely affecting several thousand residents of the State, unless additional funds for construction work are provided for the purpose of completing the Federal-aid system in this State; and

Whereas an authorization bill designated as S. 36 has already passed the United States Senate and has already been favorably reported to the House of Representatives by the House Committee on Roads: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the twenty-second legislature (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be and is hereby memorialized to take favorable and prompt action upon and to pass said S. 36, or a similar bill, authorizing a Federal-aid appropriation for highway construction in an amount consistent with other governmental expenditures at this time; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully urged and requested to approve such bill upon its passage in order that the provisions thereof may become effective at an early date; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this joint memorial be sent to the President of the United States and the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the members of the congressional delegation of this State in Congress.

Speaker of the House.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS

Mr. FESS, from the same committee, reported back favorably without amendment the resolution (S. Res. 344) submitted by Mr. SCHALL on January 31, 1933, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-second Congress, to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that there must be a mistake in the resolution. The Seventy-second Congress will expire on the 4th of March.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is for unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution to authorize the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to hold hearings during the Seventy-second Congress. The Chair suggests that it probably should be the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the resolution?

Mr. FESS. It is a resolution to authorize the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to hold hearings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the committee have had no authority during this Congress to hold hearings, and the resolution is probably to cover the present session. The resolution will be again read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I inquire what investigations or inquiries are in contemplation under the resolution?

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Ohio merely heard the statement of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], who asked to have the resolution adopted. He does not know what the purpose of the Senator from Minnesota is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the resolution had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS (S. DOC. NO. 185)

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] made a most informative speech concerning the Library of Congress. It is of public interest because it states in detail just exactly how the Library may be utilized by all our people. I am asking, therefore, unanimous consent that his speech may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I have just read a memorandum of the history and activities of the Federal Trade Commission, which I believe should be printed, and ask the consent of the Senate so to do.

The only legal machinery which has been constructed that has proven it is equipped to meet the industrial problems of to-day in the interest of the public is the Federal Trade Commission, and we should not throttle it now by lack of appropriations when in all the history of our Nation it is most needed. Without that machinery combination power would have by this time through its intricacies of combinations, had it not been for the Federal Trade Commission, strangled fair competition, honest business, the law of supply and demand.

The Federal Trade Commission was the first institution ever formed to really accomplish anything in the thwarting of combination power and unfair trade, and its enactment was only had after years of bitter controversial struggle. It is the result of years of investigation and study by commercial, industrial, and governmental committees and organizations. Its accumulated efficiency should not be thrown away.

This commission is to-day the only instrument we have in the field of public utilities outside the railroads to guard the people's interest.

We have appropriated for the Interstate Commerce Commission seven times the amount that the Bureau of the Budget has recommended for the necessary expenses of the Federal Trade Commission, which is $1,100,000. The Interstate Commerce Commission has only the railroads to look after while the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction includes everything else in the country excepting the banks. The railroad investment is only $26,000,000,000 while the public utilities alone, outside of the railroads' investment, is $20,000,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, the House proposed to cut this recommendation, which is already pared to the quick, to $500,000. I protest that we should not cut off our noses to spite our faces or rather allow the public utilities and unfair combinations outside the railroads to deprive honest business wherever it is found throughout the country of a fair deal.

We have the Clayton Act, the Sherman Act, and the Webb-Pomerene Export Trade Act, and others; but, while there have been suspicions and rumors, never before had the facts been made certain and usable. Never before had there been competent evidence legal to go before a court. The Federal Trade Commission was organized September 26, 1914, with power, by one means or another under the law, to go into records, to get evidence, wherever that evidence could be found, to prove the things the country knew were going on, but had no means of legal proof. The men appointed went fearlessly ahead and did their duty and secured evidence sufficient to convict criminally of violation of law and thereby have, to a large degree, put the fear of justice into the hearts of corrupt combinations that in no other way could have been deterred in their unlawful procedures and have thereby saved to the people a thousandfold their investment. Might as well recommend the discharge of the police force, the fire department, the cancellation of insurance policies.

Everybody knew there was collusion and combination in restraint of trade, and everybody still knows it, but heretofore there was no machinery to collect competent evidence. With the Federal Trade Commission in action, there is always the possibility of securing that evidence which is a deterrent to unscrupulous business.

While I congratulate the Senate Appropriations Committee upon its action raising the amount of appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission to $780,000, as a move in the right direction, yet I can not help but feel that the Senate should take the Budget committee's advice and make the appropriation a million dollars. The Senate alone is saved more than that amount every session by being able to refer investigations to the Federal Trade Commission that would otherwise have to be undertaken by the Senate or the House, or both. This Federal Trade Commission was created in part to take off the shoulders of the House and the Senate these numerous investigations that were imperative from time to time; and, instead of having them investigated by special committees in a slipshod way by untrained investigators, we have within the Federal Trade Commission a body of trained economists, accountants, and statisticians who can in a fraction of the time make the same investigation that the Senate or the House would make at a small percentage of the cost.

Had not the war intervened, with its general blight on human progress, and through its dictatorial influence persuaded Congress to amend the original Federal Trade Commission act, which greatly limited its power, I believe that its service to the people would have reached a scope that would have made it entirely effective for the purpose for which it was created. Even in its limited scope it has served as a deterrent, and without it combination power would immediately suck the remaining independent vitality of the country. I hope that the Senate will not be penny-wise and dollar-foolish in this appropriation and subject, through its shortsightedness, independent farm and business to the Frankenstein of corporate combinations.

The Federal Trade Commission has proved its right to our confidence in spite of the attacks upon it by its enemies in their efforts to abolish, or at least curtail, its powers. Its members are able and fearless and honest and, if left undisturbed in their function, will prove an effective check to the all-absorbing power of the great financial trusts, who do not like the light which the Federal Trade Commission cause to shine into their darkmost corners.

I ask also to have printed in the RECORD a statement in support of Federal Trade Commission appropriations made before the Senate Committee on Appropriations by Mrs. Harris T. Baldwin, chairman department of living costs, National League of Women Voters, and also the accompanying memorandum.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Press department, National League of Women Voters, 532 Seventeenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.]

STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION APPROPRIATIONS MADE BEFORE THE SENATE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE BY MRS. HARRIS T. BALDWIN, CHAIRMAN DEPARTMENT OF LIVING COSTS, NATIONAL LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS

Within its first year the attention of the National League of Women Voters was focused on the value of the work of the Federal Trade Commission because of its investigation of the packers which led to the consent decree of 1920 and the passage of the packers' and stockyards act in 1921. The members of the league in facing their problems as purchasers discovered that the most valuable source of light on business conditions affecting prices and the cost of living came from the investigations of the Federal Trade Commission. League members also found that they as individuals and even the States are practically helpless in dealing with the factors in the conduct of business which affect price and value, and that the only hope of reducing unfair trade practices inimical to consumers was through the agency of the Federal Trade Commission.

Women, who are estimated to comprise 85 per cent of the country's buyers, are the victims of misbranding of products, false and misleading advertisements, price discriminations, imitation of brands and trade-marks, and substitution of products. We, therefore, feel personally grateful to the commission for its prosecution of cases involving fraudulent practices as to the quality, content, or merit of such commodities as silk, bread, aluminum, hosiery, soap, coal, cotton, cereal, milk, and many others of great importance to the public.

Utilization of electric resources from the standpoint of the public welfare and the regulation of public utilities have been among our major subjects of study. The electric-power investigation of the Federal Trade Commission ordered by Congress has been our most valuable source of impartial information in this field.

At the present time, under chaotic business conditions when the temptation is great to disregard normal fair-trade practices, consumers need more than ever a Government agency competent and available to guard the public interest which by its very presence services as a deterrent to the infringement of the rights of competitors and purchasers.

The action of the House by which it cut the appropriation by approximately $1,000,000 on the score that the House committee "does not approve the initiation of new economic investigations at this time," reveals either a startling ignorance of the public need or a deliberate intent to lessen the control of the public over business practices. The theory that the Congress will provide special funds for the investigation it orders permits the disintegration of the trained force of investigators, increases the danger that investigations will be charged with being proposed from partisan political motives and entirely disregards the right of the public to ask for investigations and to maintain an agency with power to initiate its own investigation whenever the public interest appears to be endangered.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Origin and composition

The Federal Trade Commission was established by an act approved September 26, 1914. President Wilson shortly before had delivered a special message to the Congress upon the subject. The commission was the result of years of investigation and study by commercial, industrial, and governmental committees and organizations. A pledge to create such a commission was contained in the platforms of 1912 of the Republican, Democratic, and Progressive Parties. In addition to the duties and powers given by the act creating it, the commission was directed to enforce sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of the Clayton Act approved October 15, 1914. It was also directed to administer and enforce the Webb-Pomerene export trade act, approved April 10, 1918.

The commission consists of five members, no more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party. There are at present only three commissioners, two Republicans and one Democrat. The term of one of the commissioners expired last September, and another died in January of this year.

Business practices and the public

The Federal Trade Commission is practically the only governmental agency to protect the public from exploitation by dishonest business. It is practically the only governmental agency protecting the honest business men from their dishonest rivals and the small business men from their more powerful and unscrupulous competitors. It is the only agency empowered and equipped to make thorough investigations of the conduct and practices of business generally as such affect the public welfare. It is the agency that through its investigation of public utilities has done most to expose the evils of high finance and those in powerful financial positions.

Results of power and gas inquiry

In the utility investigation, made at the direction of the Senate (S. Res. 83, 70th Cong., 1st sess.), the commission has exposed the vicious propaganda of the utility corporations through colleges, schools, governmental agencies, and the press. It has disclosed the use by many utility concerns of the most unreliable and inaccurate forms of accounting. It has shown an extensive padding of costs to operating companies through exorbitant fees charged for alleged services by holding companies, such fees amounting in some instances to 12 per cent of the cost of all additions, improvements, and replacements, and giving to the holding companies profits of over 100 per cent at a cost to the operating companies of millions of dollars. It has exposed capitalization of the earnings of subsidiary companies. It has shown an inflation of capitalization by deliberate appreciation or write-up of assets of more than $1,000,000,000 in the concerns that to date have been put in the record, upon nearly all of which securities of some kind have been issued and sold to the investing public. These elements enter into and constitute a part of the base upon which the rates which the consumers pay are established. It has disclosed retention of control of a large number of operating companies by a small group through control of the common stock of holding companies and the issuance of nonvoting or preferred stock to the public.

As a direct result of the commission's investigation most of the utility information bureaus in the States for the preparation and dissemination of propaganda have been abolished. The joint committee here in Washington, a national propaganda agency, has been whittled down to nearly nothing. The dissolution of the National Electric Light Association has been announced, as has also the intended abandonment of all propaganda activities. The Edison Electric Institute, newly organized, has announced a program of financial reform which, according to the statement of the director, is the direct result of the commission's inquiry, and if carried out will save the country hundreds of millions of dollars. Many of the utility companies have already reversed numerous improper entries and practices and have largely reduced or abolished so-called management and service fees. Many concerns have reduced substantially the amounts of appreciation or write-ups (watered stock). One concern upon which public hearings were recently held had at the time the commission analyzed its records in preparation for the public hearings $102,000,000 of write-ups or appreciation. When the public hearing was held this appreciation had been reduced to $30,000,000. In a large number of instances rates to consumers have been reduced following the commission's investigation and exposure of the elements that had been incorporated into the base upon which the previous rates had been established. These changes have resulted in direct savings to the public of millions of dollars. One company has stated that $2,600,000 had been saved in two years by residential customers as a result of a reduction by it in rates after the commission's investigation. Detailed information as to these things can be furnished if it is desired.

Final report on utility investigation

While public hearings in the utility investigation will end this fiscal year, many utility concerns will not have been investigated and put in the record. Some of these are Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, Gas Service Co., Stone & Webster (Inc.), Duke Power Co., the United Light & Power Co., United Gas Corporation, Natural Gas Co. of America, and others. Very few gas concerns will have been covered by the investigation. These concerns are daily becoming of more importance and are covering the United States with pipe lines from Texas and Kansas to the Canadian border and the Atlantic Ocean.

This investigation is one of the largest ever undertaken by any governmental department or agency. It involves an investigation and study of the practices, organization, relationship, conduct, and management of utility corporations throughout the United States. The organization, management, and relationship of many of these corporations are very complicated and complex. Some of the holding companies have as many as 250 to 400 subsidiaries and affiliates. In order to trace the growth, development, and relationship of these corporations it is necessary to review their records for periods of from 10 to 20 years. There are involved an investigation and study of much the same character for utilities as are required of the Interstate Commerce Commission in its efforts to value the railroads. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been working for 20 years upon this valuation, and there has been appropriated for such work approximately $45,000,000. The electric and gas utility companies constitute an industry comparable in size to the national railway system. The public utilities represent an investment of about $20,000,000,000, as compared with about $26,000,000,000 invested in the railroads.

The commission has made, considering the magnitude of the task, an efficient and speedy investigation with the forces available. It never has been given the appropriation requested for this investigation. The final report upon this investigation can not be completed by the end of this fiscal year. It is necessary, in order to prepare efficiently such report, that those familiar with the investigation have charge of its preparation. With the appropriation provided by the House of Representatives it will be impossible to expeditiously and efficiently prepare the final report for the Congress. The action of the House almost completely wipes out the division of the commission which largely conducted this investigation and makes it impossible for the commission to efficiently continue the investigation should the President or Congress later direct.

Value of the commission's work to the public

It has been testified that the commission action in the so-called Pittsburgh plus case against the United States Steel Corporation saved the farmers of the Middle West alone $30,000,000 a year. By preventing false and misleading advertising and misbranding, following the decision of the Supreme Court in Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 258 U. S. 483, in which the commission ordered the Winsted Hosiery Co. to cease and desist selling cotton goods as and for wool, the commission has saved the public generally millions of dollars annually.

One of the earliest cases the commission had in court was against a chain mail-order house directing it to cease and desist misrepresenting its products and falsely disparaging and defaming competitors. This action of the commission was upheld by the court. (Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 258 Fed. 307.)

In another case the commission protected the cooperative method of marketing grain and established the right of farmer organizations, grain growers, and shippers to admission to the trading places, preventing a monopoly in the grain trade. (Federal Trade Commission v. Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis.)

The commission also prevents such unlawful practices as price-fixing agreements, unlawful price discrimination, inducing breach of competitors' contracts, false defamation of competitors, and false disparagement of competitors' products, commercial bribery, unlawful secret rebates, the use of fictitious mark-up prices, espionage, selling goods below cost to injure competitors and to destroy competition, substitution of products, conspiracies in restraint of trade, bogus independents, trade boycotts, etc.

Cooperation with other departments

In performing its work the commission has not duplicated or trespassed upon the work of any other department or agency. It handles and reaches matters that can not be reached by other agencies or departments of the Government, as is evidenced by the fact that many other departments and agencies send to it matters coming to their attention which they can not handle. The office of the Solicitor of the Post Office Department has sent cases of alleged false and misleading advertising and misbranding which that office could not handle to the commission for action and the commission has stopped the practices. The same is true of the food and drug division of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

Some of the most important cases of the Department of Justice under the Sherman Act to protect the public from monopolies and restraints of trade have been as a result of investigations conducted by the Federal Trade Commission, which were referred to the Department of Justice. Among these were the cases against the Cement Manufacturers Protective Association, General Outdoor Advertising Co., Maine Cooperative Sardine Co., Southern Hardware Jobbers Association, Maple Flooring Manufacturers Association, Radio Corporation, and Bolt and Nut Association. In practically all of these cases decrees were obtained by the department. The case now being conducted by the Department of Justice against the Sugar Institute in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York resulted from an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission which was referred to the department.

Duties imposed by statutes and present status of work

Congress, by statute, has imposed upon this commission the duty of preventing unfair methods of competition, unlawful tying and exclusive dealing contracts, unlawful price discrimination, unlawful acquisition of stock of competitors, interlocking directorates, and the administration of the export trade act. In these matters the commission has no discretion. The Supreme Court, in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz (253 U. S. 421), held that unfair methods of competition include practices which are opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression, and practices against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly. In compliance with these duties the commission had pending on December 31, 1932, 411 preliminary inquiries, 425 applications for complaint, 183 complaints charging violations of law, 9 court cases, and 8 export trade investigations. Within the last 10 days the commission has obtained favorable decisions in 3 of these court cases, 1 from the Supreme Court and 2 from lower Federal courts.

Fifty-one export law associations, representing about 1,000 producers, manufacturers, and distributors located in all parts of the United States, have taken advantage of the provisions of the export trade act under the supervision of the commission. The purpose of that law is to promote exports from the United States to foreign countries and to enable American exporters to operate on equal terms with their competitors abroad. Associations are required to file with the commission documents and reports covering their organization and operation. If the commission has reason to believe that an association is in violation of the law, it conducts an investigation and makes recommendations for the adjustment of the association's business. This involves continuing supervision of these associations and this work by the Federal Trade Commission.

The fact-finding functions of the commission

The commission is the economic fact-finding body of the Government designed to protect the public from unfair and wrongful business practices. Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act contemplates special investigations upon the initiative of the commission, such as were planned for next year, and at the direction of the President or either House of the Congress, and the maintenance of a staff to make such investigations. Many of these have saved the consumer millions of dollars. The investigation now being conducted upon the initiative of the commission into price bases has resulted in substantially lower prices on cement because of the elimination of the so-called plus fictitious freight rate from fixed basing points rather than from point of manufacture and shipment.

To perform its duties under section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act and in connection with the prevention of the practices condemned by the acts which the commission enforces, the commission must keep a limited number of trained investigating economists, accountants, and statisticians. Many of these now with the commission have been continuously engaged in investigations of the organization, conduct, and business practices of corporations and business concerns for a period of nearly 30 years. They constitute an important economic, accounting, and research organization. The personnel of the old Bureau of Corporations of the Department of Commerce, created about 1903 upon the recommendation of President Theodore Roosevelt, was transferred to the Federal Trade Commission upon its organization in 1915. There came from that bureau a staff of 93. The commission's estimates for 1934 provide for a staff of only 102 for such work.

Special investigations

The commission has conducted 73 special broad investigations under section 6 of its act. The commission has power to make such investigations upon its own initiative (par. (a), (b), and (c)), at the direction of the President or either House of Congress (par. (d)), and upon application of the Attorney General (par. (e)). Five of these 73 have been at the direction of the President, 44 at the direction of the Senate, 8 at the direction of the House of Representatives, 2 upon application of the Attorney General, and 14 upon the commission's own initiative. Many of these have resulted in court action to prevent unlawful practices or in remedial legislation. Some of these investigations so resulting are: Cooperation in American export trade, farm implements, food inquiry, Lumber Trade Association, radio, and newsprint paper. For a brief description of each of these 73 investigations see annual report of the commission for 1932, pages 261–269.

Proposed investigations

The broad investigations the commission proposed to undertake next year are most important and of widespread public interest. They are:

1. Financial practices of corporations:

Resolved, That the commission undertake, as soon as present work and appropriations available permit, an inquiry into (1) the facts regarding the form, adequacy, and accuracy of published financial reports made to stockholders and others by corporations engaged in interstate commerce, excluding banks, common carriers, and public utilities; (2) the effects of the financial practices of corporations prior to and since the stock-market collapse of 1929, including the volume and extent of corporation call loans; issuance of bonds and preferred stocks, accompanied by stock-purchase warrants or rights to subscribe; profits and losses of corporations from operations in the stock and bond markets; stock and script dividend issues of corporations; overexpansion through reinvestment of earnings; officers' salaries and bonuses; participation of officers and directors in underwriting and syndicate operations in securities of their corporations; and purchases from and sales to their corporations of securities or other property; (3) the facts regarding concentration of the voting control of corporations through nonvoting and management stock and the effects thereof on the financial practices and methods of corporations; (4) all other financial practices or methods affecting the public, all with a view to determining whether the commission shall recommend to the Congress any changes in or additions to existing laws.

2. Effect of antitrust laws on industries exploiting natural resources:

Resolved, That the commission undertake as soon as present work and appropriations available permit an inquiry into the effects of the antitrust acts with relation to the industries engaged in the exploitation of petroleum, natural gas, coal, and lumber and the advantages or disadvantages to business and to the general public of agreements of competing concerns in such industries with regard to prices, margins, production, profits, markets, territory, and any other similar agreement or arrangement affecting competition, and the like advantages or disadvantages in such industries of concentration of financial control and of combinations of plants, including the costs and profits of single and multiple plant operation, with a view to determining whether the commission shall recommend to the Congress any changes in or additions to existing law.

3. Effects of certain competitive practices widely engaged in:

Resolved, That the commission undertake as soon as the present work and appropriations available permit an inquiry into the facts regarding quantity discounts, selling below cost, reciprocity in dealing, brand advertising, guarantee against decline, wholesale and retail price stabilization and the effects of each on business and the general public with a view to determining whether the commission shall recommend to the Congress any changes in existing law.

They concern matters often discussed in the last presidential campaign, referred to in the platforms of both political parties, and are the subjects of discussion among business men, lawyers, and economists throughout the country, as is shown by the memoranda inserted in the record of the hearing before the subcommittee of the House of Representatives at pages 257 and 263.

Summary of work done

Since its organization and to June 30, 1932, the commission has instituted 20,206 preliminary inquiries, of which 6,124 have resulted in the docketing of applications for complaint and 13,659 have been dismissed after investigation. During the same period the commission has docketed 6,933 applications for complaints. Of these, 1,270 were disposed of by the proposed respondent stipulating to abandon the practice complained of, 3,564 were dismissed after full investigation, and in 1,717 of them complaints were issued. During the same period the commission has issued 2,054 complaints, of which 37 were disposed of by the respondent stipulating to abandon the practice complained of, 671 were dismissed after hearing, and in 1,143 of which orders to cease and desist were issued. During the same period the commission has instituted and disposed of 375 investigations under the export trade act. To June 30, 1932, the commission has been involved in 209 cases in the Federal courts. It has been successful in 112 of these and 97 of them have resulted in decisions against the position taken by the commission. It must be remembered that the vast majority of the cases in which the commission issues orders to cease and desist are never taken to court, the respondents complying with the orders. It is only the closest and most doubtful action of the commission that is taken to court. This commission is breaking new ground and preventing practices that could not before be reached under the law.

The entire work of the commission to the end of the present fiscal year will have been done with a maximum annual appropriation of $1,864,800, a minimum annual appropriation of $430,- 964, and an average annual appropriation of $1,196,393.99; a maximum annual number of employees of 663, for the year 1918, a minimum annual number of employees of 214, and an average annual number of employees of 352.

Appropriation cut 65 per cent by the House of Representatives

The commission voluntarily cut its estimates for the next fiscal year from $1,466,500, the appropriation for this fiscal year, which is more than 20 per cent below the appropriation for the previous fiscal year, to $1,300,000, a reduction of over 11 per cent. The Bureau of the Budget reduced the amount to $1,109,550, excluding the legislative furlough, a reduction of over 24 per cent from the appropriation for the present fiscal year. The House of Representatives authorizes $510,000, a reduction of over 65 per cent from the appropriation for this fiscal year and of over 54 per cent from the Budget estimate.

The total reduction in the independent offices appropriation bill by the House of Representatives for the next fiscal year is but a little over 2 per cent from the appropriation for the present fiscal year. The total reduction from the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget is but one-sixth of 1 per cent.

Out of a total decrease in this bill below the Budget estimate of $1,657,522, $1,000,000 is from the sum for the Supreme Court Building upon the assurance that that $1,000,000 is not needed now, and $599,550 is from this one agency, the Federal Trade Commission, leaving a reduction of only $57,972 for all other agencies included in the bill. The reduction for this commission with a Budget estimate of only $1,109,550, amounts to more than 36 per cent of the total reduction from the Budget estimates in a bill proposing an appropriation of $1,002,890,779 for 32 separate offices and agencies.

The President-elect advocated a cut of 25 per cent in Government expenses. The amount allowed by the Bureau of the Budget amounts to a 24⅓ per cent cut for this commission.

Effect of the cut

The cut means and is in effect a scrapping of the commission. The commission could in no way effectively discharge the duties imposed upon it by the statutes. Out of this sum of $500,000 must come the salaries of the commissioners and the expenses of their offices, the expenses of the Secretary's office, the expenses for the sections of accounts and personnel, docket, mail, and files, etc., which must be maintained. There would remain only between $300,000 and $350,000 for all other purposes of the commission, including supplies, travel, witness fees, salaries, reporting service, etc. This would mean almost a complete elimination of law-enforcement work and almost a total abolition of the economic division. With only $10,000 for printing it will be impossible for the commission to enforce its orders to cease and desist. The commission's orders to cease and desist can only be enforced through the Circuit Courts of Appeals. In these courts the commission must file a printed copy of the record in addition to briefs and petitions. The printed records and briefs and petitions through the Government Printing Office cost on an average of from $3,500 to $5,000 a case. The commission, in addition to such expense, has the printing expense involved in the release of its decisions, reports, etc.

Reduction of personnel

The commission's appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 provided for 427 employees. The commission's estimates for the fiscal year 1934 covered 376 employees, the permanent staff only. All contingent and temporary employees that had been engaged upon the various investigations being conducted by the commission were to be released at the end of the present fiscal year. This was a reduction of 51 employees. As a result of the reduction of the commission's estimates by the Bureau of the Budget there remained provision for 336 employees, a further reduction of 40, which would have to be made from the permanent staff. The bill as passed by the House would leave the commission with only 131 employees, a reduction of 205 from the figure covered by the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget and 296 less than the staff for the present fiscal year. This would practically wipe out the economic division and completely destroy the branch investigatory offices of the commission located at New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and Seattle.

Loss of trained personnel

The action of the House means a cessation at the end of the present fiscal year of practically all of the commission's work and the scattering and loss of its especially trained personnel. And if the commission were to be given adequate funds for the following fiscal year it would be impossible to reassemble the present highly trained personnel consisting of lawyers trained in this particular phase of work, investigating statisticians, accountants, and economists, all of whom are necessary to the proper discharge of the duties imposed upon the commission by law. This would mean a much less efficient administration of the law during the years, it would require to again train adequate efficient personnel. The commission in its estimates for 1934 requested only enough to maintain its permanent personnel, asking nothing for contingent or temporary personnel. Without this highly trained, permanent personnel upon which expansion can be made for the particular needs of the particular moment, it would be impossible for the commission to properly perform its functions under the acts. By this action of the House of Representatives the commission would be so crippled as to make it wholly inefficient and useless for any purposes that the incoming administration may have with respect to it.

COMMENTS ON THE EXISTING DEPRESSION BY HON. ELMER THOMAS, SENATOR FROM OKLAHOMA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, on the 6th instant, being comments on the existing depression.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen of New York, I call upon you to-night to face the facts.

We are now in the forty-first month of the worst depression in history.

While all know of the effects, yet practically no two agree as to either the cause of or the remedy for the economic and personal distress now existing among our people.

For over two years the responsible head and the policy-making branch of the Government refused to acknowledge the existence of a depression. The third year was given over to the enactment and administration of measures for relief, and as the result we now have 10 Federal agencies loaning Federal credit to the States, cities, counties, and to industry, large and small, throughout the country. Dozens of bills are now pending in the Congress proposing to extend the provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act so that practically all may share in the Federal doles.

During the past 12 months, the Government, acting through its loaning agencies, distributed over $3,000,000,000 in credit to industry and to the public. During the same time the Federal reserve system placed in circulation over eleven hundred million dollars through the purchase of Government bonds and obligations. Simultaneously the national banks, acting under the Borah amendment to the home loan bank act, added some $150,000,000 to the circulation.

The credit distributed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was used by borrowers to pay bank loans, taxes, interest, and expenses, hence has had but a single result—keeping the wolves from their doors for a few months, or for perhaps another year.

The money the Federal reserve system paid the banks for their bonds was returned immediately to liquidate indebtedness due the Federal reserve banks.

The money placed in circulation by the national banks, acting under the Borah amendment, was withdrawn immediately by the Federal reserve system through the resale of a portion of its bond purchases.

While the relief measures distributed over four and one-half billions of credit and currency, yet on January 26, 1933, we had $35,000,000 less in circulation than on January 1, 1932, one year ago, when the relief measures were inaugurated.

On January 26 we had $115,000,000 less in circulation than on August 1, only six months ago. During the past three years almost twenty billions of credit, termed deposit money, have been withdrawn, canceled, and destroyed.

Because of these continued policies of deflation of credit and currency economic conditions and personal distress are more acute to-day than when the present policies of relief were begun.

As a member of the policy-making branch of the Government, and one who has been in many parts of the United States during the past few months, I come to New York, the Nation's metropolis, to present the facts and to reason with you—you, and you alone, who can give the order and set in motion the machinery which will check the downward trend and start the greatest, strongest, and richest nation of the earth upward toward economic and human recovery.

What are the conditions to-day?

Millions are unemployed, trade is stagnated, business is paralyzed, taxes are in arrears, interest is in default, law is ignored, and individuals, corporations, cities, counties, States, and the Federal Government are using the Nation's credit with which to pay taxes, interest, and to meet the overhead and running expenses of our several organizations.

Why are conditions thus?

Why are our people, corporations, cities, counties, and States forced to borrow from the Government?

The answer: Because there are no other institutions or agencies able or willing to extend such credit.

Why are the regular institutions and agencies unable or unwilling to take care of such demands?

The answer: Because our people, our institutions, our municipalities and our States are without income and ability to meet their existing obligations, and therefore are not good risks for further credit.

When will conditions improve?

The answer: When the people regain buying power, when the unemployed have jobs, and when farmers have cost of production—then will trade be revived, taxes and interest will be paid, value will reenter commodities, farms, and factories, and the prosperity we once knew will again return.

Standing here in the center of New York, the richest and most influential city of the earth, let me digress to say that New York, your city and our city, does not live and exist off Manhattan Island.

If immediately surrounded by an impregnable wall your people would be starving maniacs and your institutions would suffer destruction within the course of days.

The greatness, prosperity, and happiness of New York are the greatness, prosperity, and happiness of the prairies of the West, the plantations of the South, and of the hundreds of millions of peoples of not only America but of the world.

When the masses prosper, all who live off the masses enjoy prosperity; but when the masses are impoverished, all others borrow from the Government and ask quick and easy bankruptcy as a possible means of relief.

What is the cause of existing and growing distress?

It would seem that we have everything necessary to make a people prosperous, contented, and happy.

We have the richest, strongest, and most influential Nation of the earth.

We have almost one-half the monetary gold of the world.

We have a magnificently developed country.

We have food, clothing, and merchandise in abundance; and we have an industrious, ambitious, and a patient people—but something is wrong, something is missing, a cog in our economic machinery is worn, damaged, or destroyed.

What is this something wrong, this something missing, and this something destroyed?

For what do wage earners work, toil, and sweat?

For what do farmers work throughout the long hot days and into the nighttime?

For what do merchants buy and sell?

For what does industry hazard programs of activity?

The answer: Without exception, each and all plan, work, and slave, if need be, to secure that which buys bread, clothing, and shelter; that which pays taxes, interest, and debts; and that thing which all want and which all must have—money—and money for many is neither possessed, found, nor even seen.

Gentlemen of New York, face the facts. Sound business and prosperity increase in proportion as sound money and credit expand.

At the risk of boredom permit me for a moment to indulge in figures.

In 1912 the amount of money in circulation was three and one-third billion dollars. From 1912 to 1921 the money in circulation increased from three and one-third to six and one-half billion dollars.

In 1920, with the greatest amount of money ever in circulation, we had the highest prices and the best times in history.

In 1920 influential powers decided that prices were too high and such powers, sometimes wise, decided to bring down or cheapen prices by increasing the value of the dollar.

This was done by withdrawing money from circulation, thereby making money scarce, and at the same time increasing its purchasing power.

The program was inaugurated. One-third of the money of the people was withdrawn from circulation. Deflation was in progress. The value of the dollar went up, and the prices of commodities, farm lands, real estate, and property generally tumbled down.

The plan from the viewpoint of its powerful sponsors worked. It was a complete success, and to-day we have the highest valued dollar and the consequent lowest prices in history.

Wheat is the lowest priced in 400 years; hogs and livestock the lowest in a century; and other commodity prices and property values generally low in proportion; and yet these powerful influences responsible for this economic crime and tragedy seem to wonder why our economic structure is near collapse.

If increasing the volume of money in circulation from 1912 to 1920 was responsible for the general increase in commodity prices and values; and if from 1921 to 1933 the decrease of the currency and the destruction of credit were responsible for the general fall in prices, then why are we not justified in concluding that a reversal of the present policy of deflation would bring an end to the present depression and start the Nation on the upturn toward economic recovery and prosperity?

With conditions as they are to-day, it is not a question of whether we want to check deflation—not whether such check is desirable—but the demand is mandatory that an end to deflation be brought about and at once.

Even an end to deflation will not suffice.

The dollar has value and buying power which it can not retain if the poise, peace, and equilibrium of our people are to be maintained.

In support of this conclusion, I direct your attention to the following facts:

From the most reliable estimates we must concede that the total massed debts of the people amount to at least $200,000,000,000. Most of this indebtedness was contracted immediately prior to, during, and immediately after 1920, and at a time when the value of the dollar ranged from 40 to 60 cents.

To-day we can not liquidate this indebtedness with 50-cent dollars, not even with 100-cent dollars, but to get rid of these bonds, notes, mortgages, and installments, we must pay with 160-cent dollars.

Hence it must be plain that instead of the people owing massed debts in the sum of $200,000,000,000, they must earn, save, and pay value to the extent of $320,000,000,000 to liquidate such indebtedness.

To further illustrate—of the bonds issued by the Government during and immediately following the World War, some $20,000,000,000 remain unpaid.

For such bonds, when issued, the people obtained value on the basis of a dollar's worth from 40 to 60 cents; but to-day to liquidate such bonds the people must pay on the basis of a 160-cent dollar. Hence, instead of the people owing $20,000,000,000 in Government bonds they owe $32,000,000,000 of value as represented by such bonds.

I next call your attention to the tax burden of the Nation. It costs the people annually some $5,000,000,000 to run the Federal Government.

It costs the people of the States, cities, counties, and districts annually some $7,000,000,000 more to pay their local expenses; hence, the people must earn and pay each year some $12,000,000,000 to meet their tax obligations.

But can they pay with $12,000,000,000 of value?

Most certainly they can not.

Instead of being able to pay with $12,000,000,000 of value they must pay in 160-cent dollars, which, when computed, forces the people to part with wealth in the total sum of $19,200,000,000 to meet their annual tax bills.

If this analysis and interpretation are correct, do you still wonder why taxes are not being paid?

Let me recapitulate briefly.

The people to-day owe value covered by bonds, notes, and installments in a total sum of over three hundred and twenty billions. The people owe interest on this gigantic debt, and such interest must be paid with 160-cent dollars.

The people owe annual taxes, Federal, State, county, city, and district, in the total sum of over $12,000,000,000, but in order to meet such assessments, obligations, and demands they must part with almost twenty billions of value and wealth; therefore, in order for the people to pay their taxes and interest they must part with value and wealth caused by the present 160-cent dollar in a total sum approximating the present annual income of the people.

Yet some wonder why taxes are not being paid, why interest, notes, and bonds are in default, and why millions of our people are walking the streets looking for shelter and begging for bread.

The people are not paying their taxes, and they are not paying their interest and their debts, because they are unable to secure these high-priced dollars with which to meet their obligations.

To demand and insist that they meet a 50-cent obligation with a dollar and a half payment is nothing short of oppression, rapacity, and extortion.

The people understand fully the predicament in which they find themselves.

But congressional leaders do not appear to understand, and as fast as time and occasion permit, such misrepresentatives of the people are being exiled to private life.

The new administration is to have its opportunity. If it fails or hesitates, the isle of exile will be crowded because the "forgotten man" still lives.

Is there no relief, help, and aid possible for the people of the country?

Relief, to be worthy the name, must go further than Federal loans and doles to industry, the States, counties, cities, and even to the people of the Nation. Relief in the form of loans and doles only postpones the day of economic death.

Relief, to be of benefit, must mean employment, must mean cost of production, and must mean expanding and growing purchasing power in the hands and pockets of the masses of the people of the country.

Can such relief be provided?

Reason with me for an additional moment.

If the expansion of the currency and credit from 1912 to 1920 caused a general increase in commodity and property prices, and if the deflation of the currency and credit from 1920 to 1930 caused a general decline in commodity and property prices, then who can deny that a reversal of the present policy of deflation and the inauguration of reasonable and controlled expansion of currency and credit would bring an up-turn in business and resultant hope to countless millions now on the verge of despair?

To-day the powerful influences controlling the economic and political policies of America are making the bond market the barometer of prosperity.

Do not understand me to say, or even to intimate, that I am not ever mindful and always jealous of the credit of our Government, but I remind you that all bond interest and principal are paid by sweat, by toil, and by products created by the labor and the genius of our people.

Hence, instead of relying wholly upon the bond market as the barometer of business, I would create a prosperity barometer resting not alone upon the bond market, but also upon the commodity markets, the property markets and the general welfare of our people.

If conditions are as represented, and if such conditions have been brought about in whole or in part by a manipulation of money and credit, then who is responsible for what President Hoover concedes to be the "worst depression in history"?

Under the Constitution the Congress, and only the Congress, can coin money and regulate its value. This responsibility is fixed. The power abides inherently and exclusively in the policy-making branch of the Government; but from a practical standpoint the Congress is either unable or unwilling to assert and exercise usch specially conferred and expressed constitutional power.

Notwithstanding the plain mandate of the Constitution, as a rule financial policies do not originate with the Congress.

As a rule, they do not even originate in Washington.

When I stated a few moments ago that "you, and you alone, can give the order and set in motion the machinery" which will pull us out of the mire, I meant that the financial policies of America originate right here in this great city.

The New York Federal Reserve Bank is the head and heart dominating and controlling the fiscal policies of our Government. Working and cooperating with this financial institution are the great banks of New York City.

The policies of these banks are controlled by the wisest financial brains of the Nation, and such control, as might be expected, is exercised always in the interests of the stockholders of such institutions.

The heads of these powerful banks, together with their economic and financial advisors, have, as a practical proposition, Washington and the Congress as their agents.

To-day the Government at Washington is only one of the clients of this unified and powerful financial aggregation.

A nod and a whisper by the powers mentioned can turn the tide and reverse the processes of deflation and depression. The longer the signal is delayed the more terrible the penalty now certain to be inflicted.

The people forming the cities, counties, States, and even the Federal Government are bankrupt and prostrate. Because of their condition moratoriums are being declared and enforced. Judges are silent, the law is impotent, and the tide of resentment and condemnation is sweeping eastward across the continent.

In conclusion, if the present financial policies are not altered; if deflation is not checked; if the people are not to be permitted to even have a chance to retain their property—a chance to pay their taxes—a chance to meet their interest, and a chance to pay their honest debts, then a new issue will arise—the form, extent, and result of which can not now be foretold.

Bankers of New York, I plead with you to face the facts, meet the issue, and permit the people and the Nation to live.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for publication in the RECORD an address by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in an open forum in New York City on February 6, 1933, on the subject "The Way Out."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen: It is a common saying that the depression or the panic or whatever name may be used to characterize the condition in which America finds itself is unprecedented. I wonder how many who are studying this problem realize that modern conditions, the elements that enter in, the luxuries and necessities of our everyday life are unprecedented. The last 50 years as compared to all previous conditions surrounding civilized people is as different as though we were in a new world. In every department of human life from the lowest to the highest there has been a miraculous change in the conditions surrounding every department.

The discoveries of science, the practical application of these discoveries, has forever made obsolete the condition heretofore obtaining. It is needless for me to recite these. On the farm modern implements have revolutionized the processes incident to production. Mechanical devices have largely supplanted man and animal power. In the home, the farm home, electric lights, refrigerators, have taken the place of and become necessary for the proper comfort of the farm home. The radio has brought to these isolated places both matters of interest and amusement from the world at large. The hard-surface road, the automobile, have made possible the personal contact of the far-distant places and erstwhile isolated homes with the great centers of population.

In manufacturing, labor-saving devices have revolutionized industry and made possible a mass production superior in quantity and quality to meet the need of the millions now constituting the population of the earth. Never before in the history of civilization have the necessities and luxuries of life been so easily, abundantly, and perfectly produced. The production of the raw material and the finished article have reached the stage of the miraculous. All this change has been brought about by the urge of humanity for better living conditions, conveniences in the home, the elimination of isolation, the suppression of disease, the gratification of the desire for relaxation, pleasure, and amusement.

The marvelous discoveries of genius and their practical application have made all these possible and yet these modern conveniences, all these revelations of modern progress, are being converted into a withering curse to the masses of mankind. The arguments heard upon the floor of Congress is that the present horrible depression has been brought about by extravagance. Just how far is this true; just to what extent do the actual necessities of modern life exceed in cost the necessities of the old tallow candle, and the horse and buggy, or in other words the old conditions. The argument is heard that in order to relieve this condition we must revert to the old order.

Does anyone believe that the amount of money either in the form of credit or currency per capita that sufficed heretofore can meet the requirements of normal modern life?

In 1913 there was enacted into law the Federal reserve act. The passage of this act was clearly in response to a demand for a more flexible currency, one that would meet more adequately the demand for an expanded currency and credit and which would domestically at least expand and contract approximately according to the amount of wealth available for distribution. Almost from the beginning of the operation of this law the conditions throughout the world insofar as they affected America were such as to test the practical use and efficiency of this new law.

From 1913, after this law became operative, bank failures in America began to decline and steadily declined until 1919, when there was not a single bank failure in all America. Credits were easily obtained and in the main wisely used. Commodities both raw and finished were freely used as the basis for a temporary currency and a consequent satisfactory credit. From 1915 to 1920, despite the destructive influence of a world's war, America never saw such an era of prosperity. Farm products had risen for the first time in my knowledge of farming to a profitable price. Old debts that had been incurred under the old rigid and restrictive currency laws were liquidated. Farm implements were purchased, farm mortgages were lifted, outbuildings were repaired and freshly painted. Everything produced on the farm found an eager and adequate market. Labor was amply paid for service. Factories were running at full time. All methods of transportation were carrying capacity tonnage.

The authors of the Federal reserve act, viewing with pride the manner in which it met a world's crisis and during this period saw the splendid prosperity of America, boasted that never again could there be a money panic. Cotton rose to 35 and 40 cents a pound, wheat to $2 and $3 a bushel. Labor was receiving ample and adequate wages.

The cost of living during this period was high, but the means of meeting that cost were adequate and satisfactory. Happiness, contentment, characterized the people. Enterprise was stimulated throughout the country. The masses were buoyant with satisfaction and hope. Our schools were packed with pupils; our colleges and higher institutions of learning were filled to capacity. In a word, credit and capital were abundant to move profitably the wealth produced by the teeming masses of America.

And then there came a frost, a chilling, deadly frost, without rhyme or reason. A crime was perpetrated that blasted the hopes of millions of Americans and changed overnight the sunshine of prosperity into the deadly darkness of despair. On May 20, 1920, the governors of the Federal Reserve Board, their officers and advisory council, met in executive session and decreed that America was too prosperous; that money was too abundant, credit too easy, the people too happy, and therefore it must cease. They decreed that the circulating medium must be restricted, credits must be drastically curtailed, that all temporary currency must be withdrawn. There was established by them for the banks of the country a maximum or what they termed a base line of credit, beyond which a progressive and graduated discount rate should be applied. The normal rate had been greatly increased below this base line. So mercilessly determined were they that deflation should be immediately accomplished that in one Federal reserve district, through the application of their graduated and progressive rate of interest, one bank in this Federal reserve district was charged 87½ per cent. The result was immediate and horrible. This action did not alone destroy the credit of the people but it did infinitely worse than that. It destroyed their confidence in the financial institutions of this country. They lost faith in the laws upon which they had fondly believed their prosperity was firmly based. Obligations incurred which could have been easily met had the conditions been left alone were now made an intolerable obligation. To visualize the startling effect of this action on the part of our banks and bankers it is sufficient to cite the fact that in less than 24 months cotton dropped from 40 cents a pound to around 8 and 10, wheat in like proportions, all farm products in practically the same degree.

It is to be noted that when deflation was determined upon our bank officials did not call an international conference to determine that there should be deflation. They met in America, the conference composed wholly of American bankers met in the city of Washington, and they there and then began effectively to deflate. And now that we have reached the horrid condition that deflation has brought, the slogan is that in order to relieve the condition that is the inevitable result of deflation we must call—America must call—an international conference to restore prosperity to America. We are told that there is as much or perhaps more money in existence in America to-day than there was during the time of prosperity. And therefore there should be no attempt to increase the currency supply and expand the credit possibilities of this country. This condition then proves the falsity of the statement that our Federal reserve act made the conditions in which we now are impossible. If the volume of money in America is as great to-day as it was from 1915 to 1920, where is it and why is it not available to relieve this unprecedented panic? Our laws certainly permit this retirement and hoarding of money in the hands of the few. And the result is that destitution and want, bankruptcy and despair, is universal in spite of an abundance, a superabundance of foodstuffs, clothing, building material, in fact, every commodity needed for human comfort and luxury. Is Congress and the people of America impotent in the premises? Are our currency laws such that our national-bank officials can decree a contraction of the currency to the stagnation and ruin of business, enabling a few, a favored few, to get possession of the money of the country and to hoard it in banks and private places?

The Constitution provides that Congress shall have the power to coin money and regulate its value. The present situation coming as it has over a period of years, growing worse each day, involving thousands of bank failures, the ruin of the credit of sovereign States, impoverishing millions, is an indictment of the courage and patriotism of Congress and the financiers of America. The answer to this condition domestically is inflation, a radical inflation, until the terrible distress and debts are relieved.

Deflation was fatal enough to the masses of the people, but as though this were not enough to condemn America to certain ruin and bankruptcy, there was erected an iniquitous tariff wall that made impossible any slight amelioration or improvement in the distressing conditions. Therefore, in conclusion, let the incoming Congress address itself to see to it that the currency and credit shall be made abundantly available for the American people and that our tariff shall be so modified that easy and profitable trade in our abundant surplus may be had with the nations of the earth. The condition of this country is epitomized in that homely verse which says:

"The toad beneath the harrow knows
Exactly where the tooth point goes;
The butterfly upon the road
Preaches contentment to the toad."

The suffering people have grown weary and resentful of the butterfly preachment.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, there is lying on the desks of Senators my proposed amendment to the pending Army appropriation bill, being House bill 14199. Day before yesterday I filed written notice of a motion to suspend the rules so that this amendment might be considered on the Army appropriation bill.

Early in January there came to my attention exceedingly great distress being suffered by young boys and young men, all the way from 14 to 25 years of age. They were tramping the country widely, without any resources or any place to go. As a result of that information, I introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the chairman of that committee, referred the bill to a subcommittee of which the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] was chairman. I spoke to the Senator from Iowa about hearings on the bill because there was certain information that I thought the committee ought to have with respect to the distressing conditions. The subcommittee, however, did not hold any hearings, and I understand reported the bill to the full committee on Military Affairs, and the full committee in turn reported it to the Senate unfavorably. I am quite convinced that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs did not have adequate information to pass upon the bill; and I further desire to point out that there is a public impression that the War Department has disapproved of this plan. That is not accurate.

First, I want to invite the attention of the Senate to just what this amendment provides. It is not long; it is very simple. It provides:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to provide for the admission to any military post of the United States, without enlistment in the Army, of any unmarried male person between the ages of 17 and 24, both inclusive, who is without means of support and who shall apply at any such post within one year after the date of enactment of this act and give satisfactory evidence to the commanding officer thereof that he is unemployed at the time of application and that he has been continuously unemployed for at least six months prior to such time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator whether he has made an effort to ascertain the number of persons who might thus become eligible to admission to military posts under his amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; I intend to cover that a little later and to refer to the evidence submitted to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; I will wait without further question.

Mr. COUZENS. Continuing the reading of the amendment in line 2, on page 2:

The Secretary of War shall further provide for housing, feeding, and clothing any such person upon his admission to any such post for a period of not to exceed one year from the date of enactment of this act.

Any person admitted to any military post pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this section shall, so far as practicable, be subject to the customary discipline maintained at such post and shall participate in all forms of beneficial and healthful exercise.

Any person admitted to any military post pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this section who shall withdraw permanently from such post, or who shall absent himself temporarily therefrom without the authority of the commanding officer thereof, shall no longer be entitled to the benefits of this section at such post.

The Secretary of War is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is it intended that these boys shall have the training and the opportunity for study such as are afforded boys admitted to the Military Academy?

Mr. COUZENS. No; there is no provision to that effect; but they will have to conform to the customary discipline of the military post.

In that connection I want to say that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] has an amendment to propose to come in after line 10, on page 2, which I think will improve the bill very much, but I am not going to comment on that now, because the Senator from Iowa will do that. However, I want to emphasize, Mr. President, the War Department has not disapproved of this bill. In response to an inquiry sent to the War Department by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee [Mr. REED] the department replied in a communication addressed to him on January 27, as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR REED: Careful consideration has been given to the bill S. 5363, "A bill to provide for the housing, feeding, and clothing of certain unemployed persons at military posts of the United States," which you transmitted at the War Department under date of January 23, 1933, with a request for the views of the War Department relative thereto.

While the bill does not give the total number to be cared for, it is understood that Senator COUZENS has mentioned a figure—300,000.

If the Army were assigned this task, it would adopt the general principles of the citizens' military training camp idea as the basis of its solution. This would conform to the bill, which recognizes no enlisted status and no obligation on the part of the United States which might later serve as the basis of claims against the Government. The men would be sheltered, fed, clothed, would pursue active course of basic infantry drill and recreation, would be disciplined on the basis of section 2 and section 3 of the bill, and would be discharged upon application. Unlike the citizens' military training camp student, a greater measure of self-sustaining work would be required of him, his ration allowance would be less, and his clothing would be only that absolutely necessary to meet the requirements of each individual case. Where military outer garments were used, they would be uniformly dyed.

Difficulties in the solution of this problem arise when we reach the question of shelter, unless it is proposed to assemble a large proportion of the applicants in southern climates, where tentage could be used throughout all periods of the year. Our records show that approximately 25,000 could be accommodated throughout the nine corps areas in permanent barracks, and approximately 43,000 in temporary barracks. This gives us a total of 68,000. Any increment above 68,000 would have to be sheltered in tents.

However, all-year encampment would be practicable only in the Fourth, Eighth, and Ninth Corps Areas.

Without much change in Regular Army personnel, excepting medical, another 20,000 beds could be provided in tents at southern stations. Any increase over 88,000 beds, however, requires expensive construction and increased officer and enlisted personnel from the Reserve Corps.

The Army could draw from its current stocks and from war reserve the supplies and equipment necessary for this undertaking, but all current stocks would have to be immediately replaced, as current budgetary allowances are now at the very minimum. In addition, certain reserve stocks, especially tentage, would also have to be replaced, as such items as tentage are critical in our plans to meet emergencies and our supply of tentage is now low. It must be pointed out also that it is very expensive to house troops under canvas. Each tent costs approximately $40, and tentage soon wears out when constantly used.

While the War Department is fully sympathetic with the purposes of this bill and is anxious to contribute in the present emergency, a careful study of this whole plan shows that the aims of the bill could be better and more economically accomplished by localizing the problem in our cities, where a large majority of these young men are now found, by using for their shelter buildings which could be made available by the local communities. If such buildings were made available for this purpose, the Army could install in each the necessary equipment and a small Regular Army group to supervise messing, housing, sanitation, and the control of the unemployed assigned to the particular unit. Such a plan would involve much less in the way of public funds and Army equipment. The unemployed taking advantage of this shelter could be required to conform to certain rules and regulations, including prescribed exercises, and the governing personnel from the Regular Army, as they circulated among the unemployed and dealt with them, would have many opportunities to make a right impression upon the unemployed group and do much good work of this kind, which would go far in molding a better morale throughout the men so housed, to the end that criminal tendencies might be lessened and respect for Government augmented.

With the passing of the emergency these men would be better located for absorption in the normal life of the Nation than they would be if concentrated in large camps or cantonments.

Sincerely yours,

PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Secretary of War.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a few questions in order that I may better understand just what is involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, the age limit is between 17 and 24. In time of war, with the consent of their parents, boys as young as 16 may enlist, and I am just wondering if the Senator felt it unwise to reduce the age limit to 16?

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to say to the Senator I did not. I drew this bill merely tentatively, and it is subject to amendment according to the judgment of the Senate. I have been advised by a number of Senators that they think the age limit is too high in one place and not low enough in the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is my thought.

Mr. COUZENS. And if it is the sense of the Senate that the age limits should be changed, I am entirely agreeable to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator any estimate of the number of men between the ages of, say, 16 and 21 who are out of employment?

Mr. COUZENS. I am coming to that, Mr. President. I am going to discuss the evidence that was submitted to the Committee on Manufactures that deals with that problem.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will not anticipate the Senator. May I ask him another question? As I listened to the number of men that would be cared for in permanent buildings and tents, roughly, it seemed to me that perhaps 75,000 or 80,000 might be taken care of.

Mr. REED. Eighty-eight thousand?

Mr. TYDINGS. Eighty-eight thousand. I did not make the exact calculation. Does the Senator intend to limit the number to 88,000?

Mr. COUZENS. My intention would be, Mr. President, to limit it to the capacity estimated by the War Department. I have no intention of asking for the increase of any permanent facility. I want to come to that question a little later, too.

Mr. TYDINGS. One other question: I note in the report of the War Department that they say that perhaps these young men could be better cared for in the buildings in their cities. That is a natural inference; but I think the Senator knows that the buildings that could be utilized for that purpose are already pretty well crowded.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to say in that connection that I think the War Department have confused the issue, because, as the amendment points out, it is not my intention to include the older men; and in most of these cities, particularly in Detroit, the buildings to which the War Department refers are occupied by older men who are machinists and mechanics and laborers who are out of work.

That is not the group I am trying to reach. That group will have to be taken care of by other ways and means. I am trying to look after the youth who probably never has had a job and has been driven away from home because of economic conditions that his family have encountered through no responsibility of their own.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. GLENN. Does the Senator contemplate any training or education or drills?

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment provides for any exercise or drilling or training that the commanding officer may prescribe. In other words, the amendment provides that the rules and regulations shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming that the full capacity of 88,000 young men is taken into account, has the Senator any approximate figure as to what the 88,000 would cost the Government over a period of a year?

Mr. COUZENS. I have no estimate of that, because I did not attempt it, for the very reason that I have no knowledge whatever as to how many boys would avail themselves of this opportunity. There may be a large number or there may be a few. What I provided in the amendment was that when the Army ascertained its needs in that connection it would have to ask for appropriations from Congress; but the Senator from Maryland, perhaps, knows more about the cost and the care of those youths in the camps than I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was wondering, if the Senator will permit, whether the Senator from Pennsylvania would give us the maintenance cost of a soldier outside of his pay.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. REED. There has not been much time to make a comprehensive study of this matter; but I asked the War Department to give me the best figures they could get on it, based on the estimate of the Senator from Michigan of 300,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Just a minute, Mr. President. I do not want the Senate misled by estimating 300,000, because I am not asking to take care of more than 88,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we get the figure of 300,000, we can reduce it to 88,000 ourselves.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not want the impression to go over the Senate that that figure that is presented is going to be the cost to the Government, so I prefer to have it reduced to the cost of the number I propose rather than the cost of the whole unemployed youth of the Nation.

Mr. REED. Very good. Then I have it also broken down to so much per man for each item. The estimate, I suppose, would be no greater per man if the load were limited to 88,000, though, obviously, the more men there are the cheaper it is to take care of them on the average.

Based on the number of 300,000, the estimate for buildings and quarters per man per year is $68.

Subsistence per man per year, $73.

Clothing and equipage, $116.

Medical attention, $18.

Transportation; that is, to these tent camps in the South, $6.

Reserve personnel, because there is nobody else to command them, $84 per man per year.

It totals about $365 or $366 per man per year.

Mr. TYDINGS. Again making a very hasty calculation, it looks as though perhaps twenty-five or thirty million dollars would be required for 88,000.

Mr. REED. For 300,000 men, the estimated additional appropriation needed would be $109,674,800.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I decline to yield to confuse the issue.

Mr. REED. I do not want to confuse the issue.

Mr. COUZENS. The issue is entirely confused, because no such number is in contemplation; and I object to the injection of problematical numbers that are not contemplated under the amendment which I have.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an observation, even taking the figures of the Senator from Pennsylvania it would cost only about $25,000,000 to take care of the 88,000 boys he has in mind, assuming that the proportionate cost was the same.

Mr. COUZENS. I have not all of the items; but, if the Senator will hand them to me, I want to point out the absurdity of some of these items as applied to each one of the probable 88,000.

Mr. REED. It amounts to about a dollar per day per man. I had not heard of the Senator's intention of limiting the number to 88,000. If I had, I would not have had these figures prepared on the 300,000 basis.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the information I get from the War Department is that the actual food costs, which is the primary cost, is 30 cents a day—30 cents a day for feeding a young man who is in distress because of economic conditions.

I want to point out in that connection that much of the work that is estimated here in this memorandum prepared by the Senator from Pennsylvania, or which has been prepared for the Senator from Pennsylvania can be done by the boys themselves. There is no contemplation of any transportation cost.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. REED. How are we going to get these boys down to these southern tent camps?

Mr. COUZENS. They will apply wherever they are, the same as they are doing now. They are tramping the highways. They will apply to any camp where they choose, and the amendment makes no provision for transporting them. They will have to apply themselves. There is no provision or thought of furnishing transportation.

Mr. REED. Certainly there is no room on Governors Island for all that would apply at New York City.

Mr. COUZENS. They could not take any more than there are facilities for. I am not asking that the Army facilities be increased.

The Senator has pointed out in these figures that the reserve personnel amounts to $84 per year per man, when the War Department in their reply said there would be no such charge. The War Department in their letter to the Senator from Pennsylvania said specifically, with respect to the 20,000 in the South:

> Without much change in Regular Army personnel excepting medical service another 20,000 beds could be provided in tents in the southern stations.

There is no occasion whatever for augmenting the Regular Army appropriations to the extent of $84 per year for each individual cared for.

Mr. President, it is inconceivable that to supervise these boys would cost $84 for the supervision of each and every boy. It is just a deliberate attempt to misrepresent the cost to the Government.

In any event, however, I am not going to rest this proposal simply on the question of cost. There is much more at issue than the matter of cost. Assuming, for instance, that all of these figures submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania were correct——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not know whether they are correct or not. They are the answer that I get from the War Department in reply to my inquiry. I do not vouch for them.

Mr. COUZENS. I said to the Senator, assuming that the figures he presents are correct, it would take less than a third of the estimated amount with all of their estimates for each activity per man. The amount would be reduced by more than two-thirds if we accepted all of these figures under the provision of the amendment, because there is no provision in the amendment for extending permanent Government facilities.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Assuming that 80,000—possibly a less number, but assuming 80,000—should apply to be given relief, has the Senator estimated about how much it would cost?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I have not estimated how much it is going to cost, because I do not care what it is going to cost.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator. I merely wanted that information if he has made an estimate.

Mr. COUZENS. I want at this point to say that I am not disposed to waste Government money; and I am in full sympathy with the bill presented by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and made an addition to or a part of the so-called Costigan-La Follette bill, which is now on the Senate Calendar. I say that because their proposal is not confined to boys. Their proposal is for transient unemployed boys and men. My proposal is confined to youths.

If the Congress wants to provide for the facilities contemplated in the so-called Cutting bill, I am in favor of it, because I realize that the provision I am proposing to the Congress in no way conflicts with that proposal. In other words, there are probably a million men outside of the category to which I am referring who are transient and in need of assistance and who could be provided for under the so-called Cutting bill. It does not seem that I should have to stress the need of taking care of boys from 15 or 16 to 21 years of age who are tramping the country, with no economic resources, coming in contact with all kinds of dissolute men and women, or that I should have to emphasize the fact that it is a Federal responsibility to do something with those 300,000 boys.

I submit that this proposal will take care of only 88,000, and at the most extravagant estimate the cost would be a dollar a day. That is $88,000 a day. Are we justified in spending $88,000 a day to preserve this group of youngsters who have the future conduct of the country in hand? Is it necessary that I emphasize the fact that we have a great army set-up, for which we spend from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000 a year, that is already equipped with facilities, with personnel and opportunities for caring for these youths, all of which is admitted by the War Department?

They do not deny their ability to care for the 88,000 young men. The War Department has not even opposed the idea of their being required to look after the youth. Certainly, Mr. President, if we could go out and drive these men to war, if we could pick them out of the cities, out of their homes, and send them to France, we can, when the cost would be much less and when the purpose would be far better, use the same facilities for their care that we used for driving them into war.

Mr. President, I am no pacifist. I never voted against adequate defense. I have voted for every proposal to maintain an adequate Army and Navy. I am unwilling, however, to deny the use of these facilities in times of peace to a large group of our citizens, our boys and youth, who need them. I am unable to understand anyone standing up in this body and opposing a proposal to take care of 88,000 of the best young men of the country, who have never had an opportunity, never an opportunity for a job; who, in the last three years, during the most terrific economic depression, have tramped the country without any opportunity of getting a job.

Mr. President, most of these young men have never had a job. What are we going to do about them? Are we to let them keep on tramping and going around in circles, being killed on railroads and encountering disease and crime while we stand idly by, with an Army and Navy fully equipped with facilities and personnel for their care?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator contemplate that the boys to whom he refers, if sent to these camps, will receive military training?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I had not thought of that. The bill provides that the Secretary of War shall prescribe rules and regulations for their care.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator think that some provision ought to be made for giving them some sort of training? Nothing could be more demoralizing in a military organization than to have a lot of fellows loafing around an army post doing nothing.

Mr. COUZENS. There is a provision in the bill, which the Senator will find if he reads it, that rules and regulations are to be provided by the Secretary of War. I have not attempted to deal with the details. I know nothing about military training; I have never participated in it; and I am perfectly willing to leave that, if the Senate agrees, to the rules and regulations provided by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLARK. Does the bill provide that the Secretary of War shall have the right and duty of providing training?

Mr. COUZENS. "Rules and regulations," it says, and I can not contemplate what rules and regulations will be prescribed, but I still insist that the proposal is open to amendment or modification or change. The fundamental principle back of the proposal, however, is that the facilities of the War and Navy Departments, of the War Department in particular, shall not remain idle while thousands and thousands of our boys tramp the highways, with no place to live.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. In reference to the question asked by the Senator from Missouri, I desire to offer an amendment to the Senator's amendment, on page 2, line 10, to strike out the period and to add the following words: "and vocational training, as far as practicable with available facilities."

Mr. COUZENS. I think that would greatly improve the bill, because if there are facilities in the camps for teaching the boys anything along the lines of agriculture or anything else, I would want them to have that opportunity.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I must make a point of order against any amendment's being offered by the Senator from Iowa, because the amendment of the Senator from Michigan is not before the Senate.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I was not offering it at this time. I said I had an intention to offer it at the proper time.

Mr. REED. Of course, the Senator from Michigan could accept any modification he wished to accept to the amendment he has sent to the desk.

Mr. COUZENS. When the matter is reached, I will accept the amendment. But I had hoped there would be a disposition in the Senate to waive suspension of the rules and permit this matter to be voted on on its merits. I appreciate that in order to get a suspension of the rules I must have a two-thirds vote. I hope that not only will I get a two-thirds vote but that I will get a nine-tenths vote. However, I would prefer to have the matter passed on its merits rather than under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think this proposal has real merit in it, and I certainly am inclined, from what little study I have made of it, to support it. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not mind if I make what might be called a controversial observation, but I make it out of pure good faith, and in great seriousness.

May I point out that we are appropriating $9,440,000 a year for prohibition enforcement? I am not questioning those who favor that appropriation, but I point out that 94,400 men at a hundred dollars a year could be taken care of out of that one appropriation, and it seems to me that in a time such as that in which we find ourselves it would be wiser, in the interest of humanity, to transfer that sum to a work that has behind it so many fine impulses as has the proposition offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator knows I have always been a wet, and have never changed my mind about the unwisdom of the eighteenth amendment, so he and I will not differ so far as his attitude on the wet question is concerned.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if we are short of money, if we have not the money necessary, it would be much better to use the money appropriated for prohibition enforcement for the purpose the Senator has in mind, than to spend it on a lot of prohibition agents seeking to enforce an impossible proposition.

Mr. COUZENS. This talk about insufficient money is getting terribly disgusting. We appropriate millions for the protection of migratory birds, and, though it is hard to believe, there is complaint because some of us want to appropriate money for the care of migratory boys. What kind of sense is there in such action of Congress? Mr. President, is it any wonder that the country, editorially and otherwise, is condemning the futility of maintaining a Congress and proposing the setting up of a Mussolini, or autocrat, or dictator, or whatever he may be called?

Not only that, but if we go through the appropriations of possibly $2,000,000,000, other than those for fixed charges, which I shall not discuss, we will find that there are millions and millions of dollars used for purposes much less admirable than providing for these boys. Just reflect on the millions of dollars that are spent for looking after insects and birds and pigs; yet there is objection to such a proposal as I have made, and the suggestion that I be required to get the assent of two-thirds before a vote may be had on the matter on its merits.

Mr. President, we are spending millions of dollars for reforestation, the benefits from which we will not get for from 30 to 50 years. I propose that the Government spend a few million dollars for benefits we can get beginning to-day, and yet there is resistance to it.

Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate held hearings on Senate bill 5121, introduced by the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], with which, as I have heretofore said, I am in entire sympathy. But I submit that the proposals provided in the Cutting bill could not be operative for some time. It would not take care of all the conditions. My bill provides for taking care of the younger men, but there is a provision in the Cutting bill for taking care of the older men.

I am not attempting to confuse the issue. I do not want any one of these 88,000 boys who might be taken care of under my proposal roaming the country and saying, "My country does not care a damn where I go or what I do. They did care a lot when they wanted me to go to save their hides in France."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if they are 16 years old, they were not born then.

Mr. COUZENS. Well, the Senator from Pennsylvania can be as sarcastic as he likes. They are the same group of boys and the same classification of boys who, the Senator knows, went to war in 1917. Some of the boys who would be provided for under this measure, if the age stays at 24, were cognizant of the conditions during the war.

Does the Senator mean to imply that because the boys were not born at that time they do not know anything about the conditions and the suffering and the sacrifices made by their brothers and parents? Certainly they did. The Senator may shrug his shoulders and throw his glasses down in disgust as he always does when it comes to considering human affairs.

Going back to the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures on the bill of Senator CUTTING——

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to that question, I trust he will permit one or two questions. I appreciate that the personal service in connection with these cantonments, or camps, will cost the Government hardly a penny, nothing outside of the supervisory expense. That is, all of the sanitation, patrolling, building, mess, and all other personal service, in all probability would be required to be performed by the boys and men in the respective camps. So that the only cost for personal services would be the supervisory cost of expert mechanics, expert carpenters, and a few others who would be necessary to supervise and direct the construction and all the other activities of the camp. Therefore the cost would be very greatly reduced when the personal service is to come from the men in the camps themselves.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it seems to me that is perfectly obvious. If the Senate wants to make more sure about that, it can amend the proposal to accomplish that purpose. I do not contemplate that these boys will be waited on hand and foot by butlers or uniformed Army officials. I expect that they will be required to do everything that is humanly possible for them to do within the camp, and the Senator from Wisconsin hits the nail on the head when he says that all that will be needed, practically, will be food and supervision and such clothes as may be necessary. We do not know what clothes the boys already have. It may not be necessary to spend any money for clothes for a year. Yet it is provided in the estimates furnished by the War Department that the clothing alone would take $116 per year per man. Mr. President, just think of estimating the clothing of these young men at $116 a year per man.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, would they have to have a medical examination before going into the camps?

Mr. COUZENS. No. Of course, anybody who wants to defeat this proposal can present all kinds of facts in the way of expenditures and other things which they think will help defeat it. But this is not a question of dealing with details. This is a national, fundamental question, which must be dealt with on a broad scale and not be hobbled with a lot of restrictions which will discourage somebody from undertaking a big project.

Mr. President, I want to refer again to the estimates and some of the conditions which exist. Some question has been raised as to my estimate of the number of young men who are tramping the Nation without any facilities and who are able to say, "I have nowhere to go." Whether the boys will accept this proposal of mine or not I do not know, but at least they will be forever estopped from saying that their Nation took no interest in them and left them or put them in a position to say, "I have no place to go." I want the youth of the country to know that the country at least does provide some place to go.

In the hearings before the Subcommittee on Manufactures on page 9 appears the following:

> Of the 3,257 men from whom age information was secured, 2,393 or 73.5 per cent of the total were under 41 years of age. The number under 22 years of age was 655 or 20.1 per cent of the total.

A little later I shall give some further evidence, but this is the basis of my contention that there are about 300,000 of these boys, because the testimony further shows that there are from 1,250,000 to 1,500,000 of unemployed transient men and boys and 20 per cent of that number would be about 300,000.

There was testimony before the Committee on Manufactures with respect to the activities of unemployment camps in California. The testimony clearly indicates it was a very worth-while undertaking. My plan would not interfere with any such work. But I want to point out that in the testimony submitted to the Committee on Manufactures, as shown on page 13, the 3,950 young men and boys counted came from practically every State in the Union, so it is quite clear that it is a national problem.

In other words, there were from the State of Michigan 127 men being cared for in California. There were 122 men from the State of Pennsylvania being cared for in California, 180 from the State of New York, 182 from the State of Illinois, 48 from Massachusetts, 89 from Missouri, 29 from New Jersey, 6 from New Hampshire, 3 from Rhode Island, 29 from South Carolina, 71 from Colorado, 16 from Connecticut, 20 from Georgia, and 31 from Idaho. I mention these to indicate that it is a national problem. There is no reason why the State of California or any other State should be burdened with a problem which is purely national and especially when the National Government has the facilities to care for at least 80,000 of these men with little or no expense.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the record show where the camp is in California to which the Senator referred, and the number we are caring for there?

Mr. COUZENS. On page 13 of the hearings the Senator will find the names of the camps. There are some 13 camps in all in California. In that list of age groups it shows that under 21 years of age there were 20.1 per cent; from 22 to 30 years of age, 31.7 per cent; from 31 to 40 years of age, 21.7 per cent; from 41 to 50 years of age, 14.8 per cent; and over 50 years of age, 11.7 per cent.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In all, as the record shows, in the different camps our people in California are taking care of about how many?

Mr. COUZENS. There are 3,951 recapitulated in this report.

In the hearings, beginning on page 23, there is testimony from Miss Grace Abbott, Chief of the Children's Bureau in Washington. As I understand her testimony, the evidence she had from the special agent of the Southern Pacific Railway was that in 1927 more than 50 per cent of the trespassers on railway property and trains were men of middle age and older. In later years the older men have largely disappeared, and it would be their estimate that 75 per cent of the 1932 trespassers range in age from 16 to 25 years. That is largely the basis of the ages which I have provided in my amendment. If 25 is too old in the judgment of the Senate and 17 is not young enough, I am perfectly willing to modify it so as to have the facilities of the Government used for the protection of the youth of the land of younger ages.

I want to refer again to page 26 of the hearings, which indicates the number of injuries among the youth and the older men who have been compelled to travel the country because of lack of work. It shows that there were trespassers killed and injured on trains and in train-service accidents—this information coming from the Interstate Commerce Commission—403 boys under the age of 14 in 1928; 372 in 1929; 278 in 1930; 278 in 1931; and 324 in 1932. There were youths between the ages of 14 and 21 killed to the number of 655 from 1914 to 1922, while in 1932 the number had increased to 1,184. Young boys from 14 to 21 years of age are being killed in accidents on the railroads in their efforts to go from place to place seeking jobs. Most of these boys, it is perfectly obvious, have never had a job, and the testimony is complete that most of them were driven from home because of economic conditions in their families. They would not stay home and see the food taken out of the mouths of their younger brothers and sisters while they perforce sat idly by and could do nothing to care for themselves.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. Some of us would be interested to have the Senator's views as to the difference in principle between the plan he is now proposing and the things that have already been done by the Congress and are now proposed to be done. In other words, several hundred million dollars have been taken out of the Treasury and loaned to States to defray the cost of taking care of the destitute, and there is a proposition pending to appropriate $500,000,000 more to be given to the States for the same purpose. Aside from the feasibility of what the Senator from Michigan is proposing, I should like to be told what is the difference in principle between what we have already done and what he is proposing to do.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think the principle is much more in favor of my proposal, because my proposal provides for using facilities which the Government already has on hand. With a complacency almost impossible to realize, the Government has sat by while $1,500,000,000 of the Government's credit at least, and possibly the taxpayer's money before we get through, has been used for the purpose of keeping going those who are already well off and well to do.

(At this point a message was received from the House of Representatives, and other business intervened, which appears after the speech of Mr. COUZENS.)

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, in the testimony before the Committee on Manufactures there appears testimony given by the chief of police of the New York Central Railway under date of January 13, 1933. I quote from page 24:

> It is generally known, however, that in recent years the number of young men between the ages of 16 and 20 riding trains has increased alarmingly. This is due in part to the difficulty experienced by boys on leaving school to obtain employment and who then use the trains as transportation to other places where they believe work may be found. One thing we have noted, that is, that persons apprehended for illegally riding trains represent every possible trade and profession.

In the testimony submitted by the chief special agent of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, he said (p. 35):

> We took official notice, in 1928, of 13,745 transients, trespassers that we found on our trains and property.
> In 1929 that figure was 13,875.
> In 1930 we took a record of 23,892.
> In 1931 that volume jumped to 186,028.

So, Mr. President, it is quite evident in what condition the unemployed transient is to-day.

On page 42 of the hearings there appears testimony to the effect that of the unemployed boys appearing at Phoenix, Ariz., 15 per cent were under 21 years of age.

On page 45 Professor McMillen, who did some work for the Department of Labor, testified:

> I think it is undoubtedly true that fully 60 per cent are under 30 years of age, and about 25 per cent are under 21 years of age.

On page 50 of the testimony I again quote Professor McMillen, where he says:

> I talked with an 18-year old boy in the camp at Big Basin. His attitude was touching. He told me he came from Mississippi and that he had been living around there amongst various married brothers and sisters and he had gotten to the point where he was definitely a dependent wherever he was living because there was no employment for him; so he had struck out, hoping to make his own way. He found it very tough going and when California opened up her arms and let him go to a camp where he knew he could eat and have a place to sleep, his gratitude was very great indeed.

That is just an example of the gratitude that at least 80,000 boys would have if they had an opportunity to get an adequate place to sleep and some food.

On page 61 of the same hearings, testimony appears as follows:

> The boys, for instance, are gradually growing harder and more difficult to adjust. They are joining the professional group of homeless men; they are becoming diseased, crippled, are growing accustomed to the road, and if employment were offered many of them would not accept it.

A prolongation of this condition is only making the condition worse; and here we have facilities all ready to undertake the solution of this problem in part.

I recognize that these uniformed West Point officials do not like the task of looking after these boys, but it is not a question in these days of what we like or do not like; it is a question of using every facility and every chance we have for relieving the present conditions.

I again make reference to the total number of boys who, it is estimated, are tramping the country.

On page 63 of the hearings Mr. Nels Anderson, instructor in sociology, Columbia University, testified:

> The cities that we have heard from report a total of 256,124 persons, which seems to be about one-fifth or one-sixth of the homeless and transients in the United States.

If that is the proper percentage, it would be about 1,300,000 altogether, of which 20 per cent would be 260,000.

Again, there appears on page 67 of the testimony this statement:

> This would bring my estimate of homeless in the United States up to nearly 2,000,000. I have, at other times, estimated 3,000,000, which is probably too high. The estimates run from 2,000,000 to 5,000,000, so I am giving you a very conservative figure here.

I again refer to the fact that all the testimony indicates that about 20 per cent of the transient unemployed are boys within the ages I have discussed.

On page 68 reference is made to the type of boy that usually starts out on his own:

> The road draws out a younger, more able-bodied type of person. Older men stay in the large cities.

On page 69 of the hearings testimony appears from the same Professor Anderson with respect to the fact that this is an intercity problem. I will not go to the extent of reading it all; but if anyone is interested in determining whether this is an intercity problem, he may find the evidence to that effect.

On page 72 of the record there appears testimony from a Los Angeles witness to the effect that out of 3,000 there were 1,000 boys under 21 years of age who passed through the police station in a short period of time. On page 73 of the testimony there appears the following:

> Last summer a study of police statistics of Los Angeles indicated that in the period of six months 10,000 boys had passed through the hands of the vagabond squad. That meant those 10,000 boys had spent a night in jail, appeared in the night court, had been given 30 days with 29 days suspended, and told by the police that the following day they would have to leave the city.

Mr. President, these boys are kicked around from place to place, with the opportunity of saying that no thought is given for their welfare or no facilities provided for them.

On page 74 of the testimony there appears the following statement:

> To review the present policy, it is "move on" for the men, except for a relatively small number which are absorbed by our camps. It is "move on" for the boys, except a fortunate small number which are taken by a private agency, the community boys' lodge, and for whom personal plans and adjustments are worked out.

Mr. President, even the girls and the women are suffering to some extent in accordance with our principle "Women first and girls first"; they do not suffer the same conditions the boys suffer.

On page 78 there is testimony given by Mr. William R. Lovejoy, secretary of the New York Children's Aid Society. He testified to this effect:

> There is also a serious effect on health. These boys, wandering from place to place, hitch-hiking, and bumming their way across the country, or riding the rods on the trains, living in jungles and camps, are exposed to a very direct danger to their health. The spread of venereal and other communicable diseases is becoming marked in many sections of the country, and we have noticed that in New York.
> As to the effect on morals, it is impossible to make any generalization that would be of any value, although I believe our judgment would indicate that if a boy had gone clear across the country hunting for a job and has simply been moved on from place to place and finding that there was no job, and continue several months or years in his search, he will end the search by hoping that he will not find one.

Mr. President, that typifies the possibilities from letting this matter go unconsidered.

Mr. Lovejoy again testified, as appears on page 81 of the hearings, referring to the proposal for the treatment of these boys in military camps:

Only this, that unless the optional treatment meant the option to stay or go, to stay inside, or go outside, I should be very much opposed to it.

He says he would not object if they were privileged to move on if they wanted to, and that is taken care of in the measure I have proposed. He says he would be opposed to putting them under duress in a camp, and I would equally be opposed to that.

General Glassford, who formerly was superintendent of police in the District of Columbia, testified before the committee, and his testimony appears on page 126. He said:

The more venturesome and the more ambitious take to the road. Those without ambition, content to remain in their communities unemployed, idle, and hanging around street corners and pool rooms, and picking up a little food here and there, with occasionally a few hours of employment, are not in any way comparable with the young men who are traveling the road to-day.

Mr. President, that is another bit of evidence that the cream of these boys are the ones who are tramping the highways and not the ones who are remaining about the cities in pool rooms and making themselves generally loafers. General Glassford testified further:

It is because of the pressure of harsh economic conditions. Many of them come from families that are destitute; they are existing on charity. They have brothers and sisters younger than themselves who are underfed, and they believe by going out they could find employment somewhere in order to relieve the situation at home.

Mr. President, there is no plan that can be adopted, in my judgment, that will drive these boys back home to continue under the present economic conditions. It has been testified before the same subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures that what we ought to do is to send these boys back home. To send them back home would mean further to humiliate them by requiring them to live in homes that are already supported by charity, to see the food taken out of the mouths of their younger brothers and sisters so as to maintain them. No decent, self-respecting boy would stay at home under those conditions.

Mr. President, we have facilities all ready, the personnel, and clothing to the extent of millions of pairs of shoes, millions of pairs of socks, and all other facilities ready to provide for the needs of these boys, but we sit indifferently by and store these facilities in warehouses while the boys tramp the highways.

General Glassford further testified:

The communities that I visited are doing very little. The various cities, those of 25,000 inhabitants and over, have missions or municipal lodging houses where the transients are given a night's lodging and one or two meals, and then required to move on. The most constructive measures that I have observed were in Florida.

He went on then to describe a camp at Jacksonville, where they take care of 302 transients; and, from the testimony, it seems that that is a very worth-while thing. But the appropriation for which I am pleading would in no way interfere with such projects.

General Glassford further testified, as appears on page 129, that if funds were appropriated they could be utilized to send boys home. The very contention I make is that these boys will not go back home, and properly should not go back home, and help to augment the difficulties their families are already encountering because of the economic conditions.

The Department of Labor issued a memorandum entitled "The Transient Boy." I do not want to encumber the RECORD with an unnecessary repetition of the reasons why these boys should be taken care of, but I am going to quote from a few of the comments in this memorandum. I doubt whether it is worth while having it all printed in the RECORD.

These facts were assembled in the spring of 1932, and the information the Children's Bureau asks for was:

1. How many boys are leaving their homes, wandering into the communities and other States and becoming stranded there?
2. To what parts of the country are these boys going in largest numbers?
3. What are local communities doing, or planning to do, where the migration is of such proportions as to constitute a genuine problem?
4. Are local resources adequate to take care of this nonresident boy problem?
5. What is actually happening to these boys on their wanderings?

In the same report there is a paragraph headed, "Boys under 21 years of age on the road." Under a subheading there is the statement:

Numbers riding the freight trains.

In autumn, winter, and spring the migratory army of men and boys flows toward Florida, the Gulf States, the Southwest, and California. From first-hand observers, from local police, and from special agents and other employees of the railroads come estimates that seem to indicate a problem entirely beyond the knowledge of most of the country's social workers.

Mr. President, if it was beyond the knowledge of the country in the spring of 1932, it certainly should not be beyond the knowledge of the country in the rigid winter of 1933.

Under another subparagraph, the same memorandum states:

The men in charge of plant-quarantine stations on the principal highways entering California made some actual sample counts of hitch-hiking boys under 21 entering that State during April and May. The number averaged about 150 per week at each of three points.

To indicate the fact that it is a national problem, under a subheading in the same memorandum this is stated:

From practically every State in the Union boys fare forth to join the aimless army. The Community Boys' Lodge in Los Angeles reported the place of residence of 623 boys who applied for shelter there in the five months ended March 31. Forty-five States and the District of Columbia had contributed to this group.

New York stood first in a community 3,000 miles away from New York. Illinois stood next; Pennsylvania third; Texas fourth, with 38; then Oklahoma, with 35; Michigan, with 34; Ohio, with 28; Missouri, with 26.

And so on down the list. Of the 1,529 boys served by the Volunteers of America in Phoenix more than 50 apiece came from Texas, California, Oklahoma, Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, Colorado, and Michigan. Twelve additional States have contributed from 25 to 50 boys each.

Under a subhead entitled "Types," referring to the types that had been discovered as tramping the country in search of work, there appears this statement:

There is much testimony to the effect that these boys came from substantial American families. A study of 5,438 young men and boys served by the Salvation Army in Atlanta, Ga., during four winter months shows that 194 had been in college and 1,641 had attended high school.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED COTTON

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I make an explanation in reference to the joint resolution that has just come from the House appropriating money for carrying into effect the Red Cross cotton legislation which we passed several days ago? A few days ago we passed substantially the same provision or exactly the same provision in the Agriculture Department appropriation bill, but it is not known when that bill will be finally approved. The Red Cross is very anxious to start this work immediately. I am wondering if I may not ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution to carry that provision into effect?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the joint resolution be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 597) to provide appropriations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to authorize the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved February 8, 1933, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Federal Farm Board to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved February 8, 1933, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,100,000: Provided, That in addition to the purposes for which an appropriation was made by Public Resolution 43 of the Seventy-second Congress, approved July 22, 1932, for carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat and cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved July 5, 1932, any balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, now or hereafter existing in such appropriation is hereby made available to enable the Federal Farm Board to carry into effect the provisions of such act of February 8, 1933: Provided further, That the unexpended balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the appropriation under Public Resolution 43 of the Seventy-second Congress, approved July 22, 1932, shall be transferred in such amounts from time to time as may be requested by the Federal Farm Board to the appropriation herein made for the purposes of such act of February 8, 1933.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have submitted the matter to the Parliamentarian who prepared the provision contained in the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, and I am informed by him that it is precisely the same. I hope it may be passed to expedite the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the character of the measure before us.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is the same provision that was adopted as an amendment to the Agricultural Department appropriation bill on last Friday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like a little further explanation of the matter.

Mr. SMITH. When the conferees met it was ascertained that there was an amount approximating $11,000,000 that had to be provided to meet the obligations incurred in connection with the cotton in question. The market price amounted to about $8,000,000 and the overhead to about $2,000,000. It was ascertained that there was about $4,000,000 still unexpended of the previous appropriation made in the allotment of the cotton to the Red Cross. That had not been carried into or reported as a part of the revolving capital of the Farm Board. An agreement was reached that the $4,000,000 which they had left over from the previous transaction should be used by the Farm Board in liquidating this expenditure. The Farm Board then agreed that they would take $2,500,000, which was the overhead, and assume that out of their revolving fund. That made $6,500,000 that was taken out of the fund of the Farm Board directly and indirectly, leaving a balance of $4,000,000 required to liquidate the transaction. That is the situation. Instead of the Government making an appropriation of $11,000,000 to liquidate—the total amount was $11,500,000—the Farm Board assumed $6,500,000 and the Government $4,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure that I follow the Senator and understand all the implications of the pending measure. When the bill came from the House providing that 350,000 bales of cotton should be turned over to the Red Cross for proper distribution to the aid of the needy, it called for the Federal Government to assume all the obligations incident to the discharge of the existing liens against the cotton and the future charges against it. The Senate refused to accept that view and adopted an amendment, under the terms of which the Farm Board was to pay the entire charges against the cotton. That went to conference, but the conferees struck out the Senate amendment and accepted the position of the House. When the report was submitted it was adopted. A motion was subsequently entered, in due time, for a reconsideration; and when the motion for reconsideration was brought to the floor, it was agreed that the bill should go to conference again and conferees were appointed by the House and by the Senate.

The conferees reported the second time, and I understood—I was not present when the matter was brought up in the Senate—that under the terms of the amended bill agreed to by the conferees, approximately $4,000,000 only were to be paid by the Government of the United States, and the residue, amounting to about $7,000,000, was to be paid out of the $28,000,000 to the credit of the Farm Board in the Treasury of the United States, which $28,000,000 constituted a part of the $500,000,000 revolving fund.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has stated exactly what I said—that there was unaccounted for of the $28,000,000 the sum of $4,000,000, left over unexpended in the previous transaction in connection with the 500,000 bales of cotton which, in 1931 or 1932, had been allocated to the Red Cross. There was an unexpended balance of $4,000,000 which ultimately would have been at the disposal of the Farm Board. Now, they take that $4,000,000 and assume the overhead, which is $2,500,000, making $6,500,000 that comes out of the funds of the Farm Board, the Government only to appropriate $4,000,000. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount is $4,100,000, and that authorization has already——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That authorization has already been agreed to, and this measure provides for carrying it out.

Mr. SMITH. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the appropriation was provided day before yesterday on the agricultural bill, but the House has passed this separate joint resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. If this joint resolution shall be passed by the Senate, then, of course, the conferees will strike the provision out of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that will be done. I really think the joint resolution ought to be passed, and I hope the Senator from Utah may see his way clear to let it pass.

Mr. SMITH. It was the best we could do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it was the best we could do.

Mr. KING. In view of the rather labyrinthine, not to say serpentine, course which this matter has pursued and the obligations which have arisen and the misinformation which has been sent out from Washington all over the country as to the effect of this measure, I am not disposed to hold up the matter; but I do feel, Mr. President, that it is very unfair and very unjust to take $4,100,000 out of, to use an Irishism, the empty Treasury of the United States in order to pay debts—for that is what it amounts to—of the Farm Board. The Farm Board has incurred obligations in connection with this cotton—that is, the Farm Board and its subsidiary, the Stabilization Cotton Corporation—of approximately $11,000,000, as stated by the able Senator from South Carolina. Now the Treasury of the United States is asked to appropriate $4,100,000 to help liquidate those charges which have been incurred in the purchase of the cotton, its storage, insurance, and so on. But, as stated, Mr. President, I am inclined to think the Senate conferees have done the best they could, and without complimenting them too highly upon the job which they have done, I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be considered as having——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. I ask that the joint resolution be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Utah?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks that the joint resolution be passed over temporarily. The Chair understands he wants to inquire into it further.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope we may dispose of it right away.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we should do that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution go over temporarily. I am not in any mood to make any objection, but I want to ascertain if an amendment may not be offered here that will not interfere with the measure at all. I should like to have an opportunity to look into it, and all I ask is that it be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I was just going to observe, as chairman of the conference committee, that a few days ago we brought in the measure providing for the distribution of cotton the second time in the form in which it was finally passed, with the idea that we would provide the necessary appropriation at the first opportunity. I sincerely hope the Senator from Utah may collect himself and decide what he wants to do with it right away or very shortly.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to send for the papers which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] said he wanted me to look over. I have no desire to interfere with the passage of the joint resolution, but I do want at least to see whether the suggestion made by the Senator from New York can be added to the joint resolution without interfering with its passage in any way, shape, or form. I am as much interested in this relief legislation as is the Senator from Tennessee or the Senator from South Carolina or the Senator from Arkansas; all I am asking is that it go over temporarily.

Mr. McNARY. May I suggest to the Senator from Utah that day before yesterday, when the agricultural appropriation bill passed, an amendment carrying this particular appropriation was offered by the Senator from Tennessee and adopted and is now in conference, the conferees having been appointed yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that, and in the meantime it is to pass the pending joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The joint resolution merely provides an appropriation to carry out an existing authorization.

Mr. McNARY. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all it does.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Any modification of the authorization would be subject to a point of order and cause delay, and I respectfully suggest that we ought to pass this joint resolution providing the appropriation to carry out the authorization. Then, if the Senator wants to offer a new resolution, let him do so, but we have had already enough delay, it seems to me, in regard to this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Utah, if he will permit me, that I shall be glad to join him in his purpose. I know what it is; I think it is very wise, and I have no objection to it; but I do not think the amendment he has in mind ought to go on this joint resolution, and I do not believe it can be attached to it, as I think it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be; I do not know as to that; but all I want is that the joint resolution go over temporarily. I repeat, I have no desire to defeat it; it can be passed to-day, but I do feel that I should have an opportunity to comply with the request of the Senator from New York to look into it. That is what I ask, and I have no intention whatever to prevent the passage of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Utah will decide as soon as possible whether he is going to ask to have the joint resolution referred to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I have already stated my purpose to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Haste is imperatively necessary in getting this joint resolution through; otherwise the House would have waited for action on the agricultural appropriation bill. If the Senator can make up his mind on this matter, and we can get the resolution agreed to within an hour or so, it will do a great deal of immediate good.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, this debate can not continue in my time. I feel I have been yielding now for 20 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan decline to yield further?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not see why the discussion on the matter should be continued indefinitely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan declines to yield further.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, I find that the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is not included in this joint resolution, and therefore I have no objection to its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I raise the question of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. COUZENS. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

(After the conclusion of the speech of Mr. COUZENS.)

C. N. HILDRETH, JR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives and calls it to the attention of the Senator from Florida. The title of the bill will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 11461) for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr., was read twice by its title.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senate day before yesterday passed practically an identical bill, and I ask unanimous consent to consider and act on the House bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11461) for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr., was read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of C. N. Hildreth, jr., former collector of customs for collection district No. 18, with the sum of $89.10, representing the amount of a payment made to the A. A. A. Garage of Miami, Fla., on voucher 851 in his August, 1928, accounts, and heretofore disallowed by the Comptroller General.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock noon Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think this session has brought to light one serious matter in relation to the Congress making appropriations. We have 12 appropriation bills, and we consider each subject matter unto itself without taking into consideration the relationship between the total amount appropriated for a particular activity and the total appropriations for all activities. When we are considering the War Department or the Navy Department appropriations or the Veterans' Bureau, or what not, we talk of the sum of money which is to be appropriated for the single purpose and consider that sum of money without considering its relationship to the total appropriations. We do not consider what part of our money goes for the Army or the Navy or for any other particular purpose. We simply put down what ought to be used to regulate or run or operate a particular department or bureau without regard to the national picture as a whole.

Nothing could more clearly illustrate this than the amendment which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] proposes to offer to the pending War Department appropriation bill. In that amendment he proposes to take care of about 80,000 or 90,000 boys from 14 years to 21 years of age. To take care of those boys would require, roughly, about $85 apiece per annum. In other words, it would require $8,500,000 to provide for facilities to take care of 100,000 boys in an Army camp for a year. We do not feel that we have the money to do that. We say we can not afford such an expenditure, but that economy should be effected in the conduct of the National Government. But, Mr. President, in another bill entirely we have appropriated just that sum of money for another purpose. The sum of $8,440,000 has been appropriated for prohibition enforcement.

I know there are many here who feel that that appropriation is necessary. I know there are conscientious men who will support the $8,440,000 for prohibition enforcement. But if we must decide between the two propositions, whether we are going to take care of these 100,000 boys on the one hand, or have the prohibition agents on the other hand, by the elimination of which of these will the national moral fabric be done the greater harm? I submit that the national moral fabric of America will be improved if we take the $8,500,000 now proposed to be appropriated for prohibition enforcement and give it for the use of the 100,000 youths of the Nation, who now are roaming the roads and highways of the United States.

If there is anything in relativity, if we are looking after the morals of the young men of the country, is it not better to take the man with no home, who is sleeping in a box car, consorting on occasion with criminals as the testimony shows, while he is in his tender years, and place him under some wholesome influences, than it is to take that money and employ 3,000 or 4,000 prohibition agents to police a country of 120,000,000 people, a country 3,000 miles from east to west and practically 2,000 miles from north to south?

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator underestimate the cost of taking care of the 80,000 young men or boys to whom he refers? I recall that in the appropriation for the Indian Bureau a few days ago it was disclosed that it costs $425 to take care of each little Indian child in boarding schools where the buildings have already been constructed. That is merely for the food and clothing.

Mr. TYDINGS. While the Senator from Utah was absent the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] together produced figures, one from the War Department and the other from investigators, as to what it would cost to take care of 100,000 men in this manner. Those figures were purely an estimate, but they ran to a little less than $100 a year.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. For food alone it would run to $73 a year, and for clothing more than that, counting nothing for housing, nothing for medicine, nothing for transportation, nothing for the service of the officers who will be required. We could not possibly do it.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, of course, wants the amendment defeated, and I do not blame him for taking a pessimistic view; but, by his own statement, made a few moments ago, he said that nothing would be needed for housing. He read the number who could be taken care of without any additional facilities. Why does he want to put that item in the equation now, when the figure I am using is the figure which he, himself, used but an hour ago?

Mr. REED. If these young men were put into tent camps, using all the tents the Army has, the Senator would surely expect those tents to be replaced? They will not last more than about a year.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not so much worried about the tents being worn out in a year, and I do not think the Senator is. I lived in a tent for a considerable period during my own life—for almost three years—and I think the life of a tent is considerably more than one year, and I believe the Senator thinks so, too. So that when the housing and other costs are dragged into this picture, I do not think they are fair items to be charged up in the cost of operating this service. But whether they are or not, I want to go back to the original proposition that it is more in the interest of humanity, more in the interest of morals, more in the interest of patriotism, more in the interest of economy, more in the interest of the future of this Nation to take that sum of money—$8,440,000 which is now appropriated to pay prohibition agents—and to spend it upon these 80,000 or 100,000 boys than it is not to spend it on those boys and to apply it to prohibition agents with salaries of $2,000, $3,000, and even $4,000 a year. I do not think any man in his right mind, be he "wet" or "dry," prohibitionist or antiprohibitionist, if he had the choice to make between those two purposes, namely, the use of this money for prohibition agents, on the one hand, or its use to take care of a hundred thousand boys from the ages of 14 to 21, on the other, would hesitate a moment to appropriate that sum of money for the care of the youth of this country. I say it is little short of a legislative crime to take nearly $9,000,000 and hand it out for prohibition enforcement and not to spend it for the care of these youngsters who have no homes, who have no food, and who are frequently subjected to conditions and circumstances which can do nothing but hinder or prevent that wholesome development which more kindly events and circumstances would permit.

How can we get at this matter? As I said in the beginning, under our system there is no relativity in the consideration of appropriations. We have before us one appropriation bill at a time; now it is the Army bill; we can not transfer an appropriation from the independent offices bill to the Army bill, because it must come up separately; so that the question of merit as between these two items, as a parliamentary proposition, is not susceptible of solution in the way ordinarily to be taken to accomplish the desired result. But, Mr. President, I am hoping that we can accomplish the result I have in mind by adding just that sum of money to this amendment if it shall be adopted, namely, that we appropriate $8,440,000 to take care of these boys who are without any homes and that we take that sum of money from the prohibition enforcement appropriation. When the bill carrying that item shall come before the Senate——

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. In just a moment I shall yield to the Senator from Iowa—I shall offer an amendment to strike out the prohibition-enforcement appropriation, if we shall adopt the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, so that in the end the appropriation necessary to take care of these boys will not have cost the Government a single solitary red cent. We shall simply take it from something where it is now, in my judgment, being wasted, anyway, and apply it to where it will yield golden dividends in the rehabilitation of 100,000 boys who are without homes and without support in this emergency.

Now I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. Some time ago the Senator pointed out that there were a good many million bootleggers in this country. Will not his scheme turn those bootleggers out among the unemployed?

Mr. TYDINGS. If it would turn them out into Iowa, I think, in some respects, it would help the general level in logic. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, suppose all the American people could be assembled in this Chamber; suppose the proposition could be debated, and suppose finally it could be put to a yea-and-nay vote, namely, shall we spend this $8,440,000 to pay three or four thousand prohibition agents or shall we spend it to provide care and training and food and housing for 100,000 boys from the ages of 15 to 21? What would the answer be? I may be perhaps over enthusiastic, but I believe that the response would come back, "Spend it on humanity; spend it to take these boys off the road, out of the stockyards, off the railroad trains; spend it to house them and feed them and train them; they are in their impressionistic years; they are in the years when they are laying the foundation for all their manhood; give to them the chance to be good citizens and let the men who are enforcing prohibition do without that sum of money." If that would be the attitude of the American people, let me inquire in whose interest are we here if not in the interest of our country, looked at as a whole? I would not be afraid to go to Kansas or to Iowa or to any other State in the Union, if it were physically possible, and submit that question to the men and women of the various States. In my judgment, the answer would be like a tidal wave in its magnitude; the answer would be, "We doubt very much, anyway, that any good comes from the so-called enforcement of prohibition, on the one hand; but, even conceding that there does come good, let us take care of these boys from 15 to 21, if it costs no more money than is now being expended on prohibition-enforcement agents? I dislike to inject the wet-and-dry question into this very meritorious matter.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland what amount of money would the Treasury have to appropriate for the maintenance and upkeep of the hundreds of thousands of people who would annually find their respective ways into these camps?

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to the Senator from North Carolina it was roughly estimated—and, of course, it was only an estimate; there could be no accurate figures—that, with the housing now available at the Army posts, with the tents we have now available, about 88,000 persons could be cared for by the Government. It was also estimated that the cost of keeping them for a year, without equipment, such as rifles, and so on, would be somewhere around a hundred dollars a year.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. We might as well be accurate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; let us be accurate.

Mr. REED. The estimate for subsistence alone is $73 a year; the estimate for clothing is $116 a year more——

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, Mr. President, does the Senator mean to say that one of these boys during a single year would require $116 worth of clothing, bought at wholesale?

Mr. REED. That is what the estimate says, if the boy is to be clothed. The estimate for medical attention is $18 a year; the estimate for transportation is $6 a year; the estimate of the cost of the officers necessary to take care of them is $84 a year; and the estimate, which the Senator disputes, for barracks and quarters, which includes the operating cost of the barracks—the heating of them, and that sort of thing, for, presumably, those in the North would have to be heated—averages $68 per man per year, representing a total of about a dollar per day per man. It was brought out by the Senator from Utah that we are spending about one-third more than that in taking care of the Indian children who are our wards out in the West, but, presumably, these young men would not be cared for at so much expense as we are under in taking care of the Indian children.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, first of all the Senator says "clothing and equipment." He did not stress the word "equipment" very heavily, because the Senator knows that the soldier's equipment costs more than the soldier's clothing. First of all, he has to have a rifle; he has to have a cartridge belt——

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in a moment—he has to have a first-aid case; he has to have a canteen; he has to have a mess kit; he has to have a knapsack.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator himself has been a soldier and he knows that rifles are not included in the quartermaster's item of clothing and equipage. The Senator knows that rifles come from the Ordnance Department, which is a totally different branch, and in the estimate there is no allowance whatsoever for such equipment.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is drawing a distinction which his own memorandum does not show. It does not show that part of the estimated cost is from the Ordnance Department and a part from the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. REED. There is not anything included from the Ordnance Department.

Mr. TYDINGS. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. REED. Because the item of clothing and equipage has been carried in the Army appropriation for probably a hundred years, and includes only quartermaster stores.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I can draw the difference between the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania and that of myself to a head by this observation, that, speaking from a commercial standpoint, I myself would love to have the contract to furnish boys from 15 to 21 years old clothing at $116 apiece a year, and I doubt if there is any man in this Chamber who would not like to have such a contract.

Mr. President, it is easy to furnish these young men clothing at a figure away below the amount estimated in this memorandum, which is $116 a year, when suits of clothes may be purchased by the Army at from $8 to $10 and shoes at $2.60 a pair. How many suits will a boy want at that figure?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. REED. I did not prepare these figures, and the Senator need not "shake his glory locks" at me, because I am not to blame for them. This is the estimate of the Army, and includes not only outer clothing but under clothing; it includes mess kits and knives and forks and blankets and pillows, and heaven knows what all. When the Senator takes the contract of which he is speaking he will be astonished to find how many things, such as blankets and pillows and cots and articles of that sort, that he had not counted on will be included, and he will not make so much money.

Mr. TYDINGS. We have already on hand a year's supply of blankets for a million men, and certainly we could use those without buying any new ones. We have also a year's supply of shoes for a million men, and we certainly could use those to the extent of a hundred thousand.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator would be the last Senator in this Chamber to advocate doing away with our reserve stock which we are keeping for the Army, and which we will have to have in the next war.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. REED. Certainly, if we devote that reserve stock to this asylum performance, as suggested by the amendment, we will have to replace it, and it will cost just as much as if we bought it for these young men originally.

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, Mr. President, I am of the opinion that it would be better to impair to a slight degree the reserve stock of a million men in times like these than it would be to keep that reserve intact and leave 12,000,000 people unprovided for for months and months and months. After all, the greatest element of national defense is confidence in and love for one's country.

Unless people have some regard for their Government and their country, all the reserve uniforms and rifles will not be worth a continental. With 12,000,000 people out of work, with 5,000 bank failures, with over a million farms sold under mortgage foreclosure and for delinquent taxes, this appropriation bill comes before us and Senators insist on making practically a uniform year's appropriation for prohibition enforcement when we could use the same sum of money to take care of 100,000 youths or even 50,000 youths. I say that we are showing neither morality nor heart nor intelligence nor logic if we continue to appropriate this vast sum for prohibition enforcement while these hundreds of thousands of young men roam about this country.

I lay that down as a basic proposition, and I should be glad to make it in any church in this land, because I have the belief that the most sincere lover of national prohibition as a theory and a principle would recognize that were he or she forced to make a decision between the two, the decision would lie on the side of these young men. Most of these church people are mothers. It might be their boys that are concerned. It might be that this would represent the difference between making a good citizen and a bad one.

Mr. President, I should be reluctant to stand here and draw this parallel if these agents could go and stamp out all the liquor in America. If it could all be wiped off the face of the earth, I should be glad to see the hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated; but we have had 13 years of this effort. We have had national prohibition with us ever since 1920. It is now going in its fourteenth year, I believe; and we know that while there may be some small gain, there are big losses connected with the eighteenth amendment.

Therefore, when I seek by this motion to transfer that sum from prohibition enforcement so that it may be used to take care of these young men, I do it with absolute confidence that on the whole there will be just as good enforcement without this appropriation as there will be with it. On the other hand, the 100,000 young men or the 50,000 or 60,000 young men that that sum of money would care for will be better off by far if it is appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. President, at the appropriate time I shall move to recommit the bill, with instructions to report it at once with an appropriation of $8,440,000 in line with the purposes of the Couzens amendment; and on a subsequent date, when the independent offices bill is before us, I shall make a motion to strike out the $8,440,000 appropriated for prohibition enforcement; so that what we will have accomplished will be the transfer of an appropriation from one bill to the other, the canceling of the enforcement appropriation, and the making of an appropriation for the care of the young men referred to in the Couzens amendment.

Now, I want to revert just shortly, before yielding the floor, to the figures adduced by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Barracks and quarters, $68 a man.

Mr. President, I do not follow that logic. I believe that the men who made this estimate allowed lots of safety; that a factor of safety was used, because they would not want to be caught in the position of having underestimated the cost; and I think even the Senator from Pennsylvania will concede that perhaps that was done in this matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. It is quite obvious, is it not, that in the North these barracks are going to have to be heated?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. REED. It is quite obvious that all over the country they are going to have to be cleaned.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. REED. It is quite obvious that there is some expense involved in keeping house for these young men, just as there is in keeping house for anybody else.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Pennsylvania says the barracks will have to be cleaned. I am assuming that there will be enough discipline in these camps that the men who occupy them will be compelled to keep them clean. As for heating the camps, it strikes me that on many of our reservations, like Camp Meade, over in Maryland, the Edgewood Arsenal, or Fort Hoyle, over in Maryland, there are lots of pine woods owned by the Government and a great deal of brush growing up in those woods where these young men could be taken out and could cut, for the most part, all of their firewood.

Mr. REED. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the bill before us provides that the only thing that can be done with these young men is to give them healthful exercise, and I do not think scrubbing floors or peeling potatoes would be called healthful exercise. We would have to hire somebody to do that for them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but the Senator also recollects that there is a general provision in the bill that the Secretary of War shall prescribe what those healthful exercises happen to be; and I think both the Senator and myself remember what some of those prescriptions were in years gone by. I have no fear that these young men will not get the healthy exercise which we all want them to have. They will have to peel potatoes, of course. I do not see why they could not garden on a part of these reservations, why they could not raise a part of their food, at least their fresh vegetables. There is plenty of ground there. It strikes me that a great many of these boys have some knowledge of raising agricultural products, and certainly that would lower the cost of subsistence. It would not be $116 a year for one man.

Mr. REED. Seriously, can the Senator imagine a lot of East Side boys on Governors Island running a successful garden?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I can, with a little training.

The Senator figures that clothing and equipment will cost $116 a year. I am sure the Senator must concede that that is a tremendous outlay to clothe a boy 15 or 16 years old, particularly where he is dressed in a uniform that is made on the same pattern at wholesale. I have not the exact figures, but my recollection is that an Army coat and an Army blouse cost about $6 for the two. A pair of shoes costs $2.50. That is $8.50. After providing underclothes and shirts you have practically given the boy clothing for normal days like spring, summer, and fall; and if you can do that for $15 you would still have $101 left over to take care of him in three months of the wintertime.

I do not concede for a minute that these men are going to wear dress uniforms. They will have no shakoes in their hats. This is plain, substantial clothing, which we hope will be sufficient. Ordinarily, I would not be so much inclined to support a proposition of this kind, and I may be wrong about it, but I simply want to renew this thought: If $8,440,000 will permit 75,000 or 100,000 of these boys to be housed and trained when they are 15 to 21 years of age, it is a lot better to spend the money there than it is to pay three or four thousand prohibition agents this $8,440,000.

If anybody cares to take issue there, I can understand that he is more in favor of national prohibition, it seems to me, than of humanity in its broader aspects, because prohibition is not responding to national control.

Therefore I want to leave just this additional thought: Out of the first 3,000 prohibition agents who were hired by this Government, 872 of them—over 25 per cent—were discharged for discovered corruption. I think Colonel Woodcock has greatly improved that service. I think he is a fine, conscientious man, who has done his best as he sees it to enforce this law; but the result as far as drinking is concerned, as far as bootlegging and hijacking are concerned, as far as stills are concerned, still remains with us.

Senators, in a period of great national emergency I think it better to spend this money to take care of 100,000 boys of tender age than to spend it on the futile experiment of trying to force morality upon the people with the bayonet and the bullet in a disguised form.

ON THE PUBLISHED TERMS OF DEBTORS TO BE PROPOSED TO THE FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beseech the Senate to let me occupy a moment of its time upon a subject not expressed in this bill, but which has to-day become timely and appropriate in view of the public statements given us in the cables of this morning sent from the foreign countries who are included in the general definition of international debtors to the United States.

Mr. President, I have listened with a commanding interest to the discussion we have just heard upon the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], and I have heard our distinguished friend the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee [Mr. REED], and my honorable comrade in arms from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] descant upon the relative figures touching the subject they are presenting.

Mr. President, may I be pardoned parenthetically here to offer a definition? These gentlemen, eminent as they are, indulge in the pastime, so often resorted to, of quoting statistics. I think I can define statistics when presented to the Senate. Statistics is something that to the Senate seldom stays and never sticks. [Laughter.] Therefore, I must depart from any allusion to it. I return to another form of statistics, that of an international character and relating to a subject which, as I feel, greatly impends upon us in this hour.

Mr. President, I see upon the floor the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. BORAH], one who has done a service entitling him to the credit he receives from his Nation; and I delight if I can have his attention while I present my thought for a moment.

We are told in the public press, and in a general form of public information, that there is to be held in the city of Washington at an early day an international conference. It is designated one, called as an economic conference. On this floor some time past I dared venture the prophesy to the Senate that it would discover that under the guise of an economic conference the true object was to force the adjustment of the international debts, either through some form of cancellation or some other form of reduction and concession.

Mr. President, while these views are before the country as generally expressed, and while it is understood that the delegates of the debtor countries are being selected to make one of those annual hegiras known as international conferences, and to do us the compliment of presenting their personalities for our admiration, and voicing expressions of their sublime philosophy for our inspiration and guidance, we read that it is cabled for four consecutive days—I mention the time merely that it may be seen that that to which I refer was not an accident or an error, but so oft repeated as indicating a conviction and a fixed purpose—it is published that two of the debtor nations announce that there will be, so far as they are concerned, no trading nor any concessions touching any trade privileges.

They come to this conference with a proposition complete, and, as the public-print cables this morning announce, they have instructed the distinguished ambassador of Britain to return to the United States and present for that country, eminent as it stands in international relations, the specific proposition they bring to their creditor. The other land announces that what they have previously presented is what they will continue to repeat.

These two eminent debtors, eminent in international affairs and in historic conference, practically tell the United States, "We say to you, Mr. Creditor, we come to this conference with our proposition shaped and molded. It is one to our advantage. We have, after much consideration and deliberation amidst our own officials, reduced our proposition to an exactness, and we are to present it to you to take it or to leave it." While one of these debtors insists—on what, through four different sources of its official officers it has repeated—that that which they have previously presented will be repeated and they will accept no qualification.

Mr. President, these eminent debtors of ours, however much we may feel kindly toward them in all senses of a friendly Nation, seem to discard the fact that we did not ask for the conference. It is they who imposed upon the present sitting distinguished President of the United States their wish, and, out of the accommodating spirit of our Nation, executed their will.

They now confront us with the audacious proposition, rarely paralleled in the relations of a debtor to his creditor, that, "We come to you with a proposition framed and shaped, to our advantage, and to let you know in the beginning, before we assemble, that there is to be neither concession nor qualification, and further to inform you that the conference, so far as it is called to be such, is to be on our part the presentation of that which we have already decided, concluded, fixed, and established. Whatever may be its effect upon you or your commerce is not in our consideration, Mr. United States. Whatever result it may have upon your people, and the way they will react to their representatives, we do not know, nor pause we to consider. We merely announce to the world that we are moving toward you with the assumption that we, as debtors, will dictate to the creditor, and are confident that in our dictation we bear the means by which we can enforce our will by visiting upon the United States some commercial aspect of disadvantage, or visit punishment on your people if our offer is declined."

Mr. President, I rise to say that if these constant reports, quotations from officials of the Governments, as reported by the reliable news agencies of our land and of their exchanges in Europe, be true, why should there be this conference? What justification can the United States now have for holding a conference, ostensibly economic in name, but now guided by the spirit of dealing with the debts of the debtors, if we are to be confronted with the statement that they who are the debtors and who come to the conference are prepared neither for concession by proposition from us nor offering one which they themselves could appropriately tender? If we are already prejudged, and the debtors have prepared to come to the United States with a flaming defiance, asserting to us that the propositions they have shaped and framed among their delegates shall be tendered as their ultimate, final, and sovereign ones, and that any attempt by us to qualify them is to be a transgression, sir—if that is the attitude, and we are to assemble those who prejudge us and, in their prejudices of the past, are to renew all their hostilities of mind and heart for the future—it is an error for us to go one step farther in the convoking of this conference.

Mr. President, it should be ascertained now whether these declarations on the part of these eminent representatives have been made as represented; and if it is their object to adhere to them, sirs; if such is true, let us not multiply these prejudices by another assemblage which may break out in some further flame of hatred. Better our foreign debtors remain in their homes, while we carry the presumption of kindness in their behalf, than to proceed to an unhappy error in their international statesmanship as recorded in their expressions. We proclaim that if they come here with the purpose solely of hippodroming by number, or, sir, intimidating the United States by design of finance and force of tariffs into adopting whatever they propose, and do not give us the quarter of courtesy to hear our proposition where we have one, and withal announce their unwillingness to concede anything in any manner of a conference of friendship, better that we now declare the call, by whomsoever made, as void and at an end. Better, indeed, is it, not to repeat these farces which have been enacted in seven different places since the World War, but which have, when we, the United States, are involved, left us where we have either been made ridiculous before the world or the object of pity in the eyes of our own Nation and its people.

Rather than that such again be duplicated in its offensive attitude and its harsh reenactment it is far better that we remain as we stand, presenting, as we have before, our righteousness, based upon the law both of justice of the world and of humanity of mankind. It is here that we inform these debtors that if they can not come to us in the spirit of Holy Scripture, transcribing in its expression, "Come, let us reason one with another," then it is better that they not come at all.

Mr. President, I do not want to see another repetition of proceedings that awaken more hatred in the bosoms of European nationalities against the United States. I want to see no further drama which invite the citizens of the United States to carry with them a continuous suspicion and a judgment of enmity against those of foreign lands. I want to see no more or never again the constant conduct that has produced no result other than to incite fears on the part of our own Nation, that is being juggled with, to the object of a trickery that cheats a people of its debt and humiliates it of its honor.

I wish to see no more where the nationalities of Europe, long practiced in the art of delusion and deception in matters of statecraft and diplomacy, shall again try their ancient craft with success upon a trusting and indulgent people such as we have ever shown ourselves to be in every gathering that has ever been summoned looking to the reestablishment of a friendship or the fixity of a friendly commercial rivalry in trade and finance.

Therefore, Mr. President, I impose upon the time of the eminent chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and that of the Senators in charge of this pending bill, all advocating one aspect or the other of right and justice in our national defense. I beseech their attention to the fact that it is timely that we again consider the international threat boldly made as to the United States, and that before it reaches the point where it can be executed that from some place of authority in this Government the voice may go out that if such threat as expressed is to be the policy of those who shall attend the conference—that is, to yield nothing, to concede nothing, demand everything, and have it or to retire with what they feel a wound for having been refused, while they flaunt us before the world as again either being defeated in combat of intellect or made ridiculous in diplomacy—that we will have nothing to do with it.

Therefore, I rose, Mr. President, to call attention of my honorable colleagues to the position in which we were being placed at the hour by these publications being circulated in every court in Europe and in every civilized part of the world, all of which inditing upon the hearts of Americans and flashing upon the minds of statesmen that which already puts us before the conference to be assembled as having been discredited before we began and dishonored at the finish.

If these honorable nations which are invited shall assemble in the spirit of some mutual concession, they are welcome here, both in the courtesy that comes from an American heart and in the generosity of the American nature.

We seek only justice. We hope that the conference will do nothing more nor less. If it shall do the justice that is sought by mankind, that we approve, for we delight to express here that we accept the expression of the great Cardinal Richelieu: "For justice all places a temple, all seasons summer."

I thank the Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is before us I want to enter my protest against the consideration and adoption of it. I know that the principle involved may be one that is humanitarian, but I want to ask my colleagues, particularly those who come from the section of the country which I in part represent, what they would visualize if this should become the law? Every post would be flooded with young men between the ages specified. All sorts of affidavits and asseverations will be made that they are unemployed. Even those who are employed or who could find employment, as a matter of course, would select and elect to go to where the Government was furnishing them food and clothing and delightful training and recreation for a year.

Just visualize what effect that would have, not only in the South, where we have a very improvident race, but in every section of the country. It is an invitation to young men to accept by every conceivable device this proposal of the Government. There is no limit to the number that may go. Therefore none of us can say what would be the limit of the appropriations necessary under the provisions of the amendment in order to meet the condition which we ourselves create and which would practically bankrupt the Treasury if we persisted in it. The calculations which have been made here as to what it would cost per capita are interesting, but the principal consideration is, What would be the number that we would have to feed and clothe?

So far as the available labor supply in nearly every section of the country is concerned, it would be exhausted between the ages specified in the amendment. It is bad enough for us to have unemployment and to be making appropriations for those who have earnestly sought employment and could not find it. It is bad enough for us to have to meet that condition. We should meet it. But deliberately to introduce a measure that invites unemployment is beyond my comprehension. That is what the Senator's amendment proposes to do. The young men or boys must make affidavit that they have been unemployed for six months and we give them a year in which to do so, six months of which time they may idle around and then make application and the necessary affidavit.

Aside from that, the principle involved is disastrous to the youth of the country, no matter to what race they belong. In the very formative period of their character for us to invite them to take advantage of this proposal would be extremely disastrous.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator if the way things are going now is not disastrous to the youth of the country?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I recognize that, and I want to beseech the Congress to address itself to remedying the principles which have brought about this condition rather than to indulge in certain legislation which intensifies the destruction of self-respect and a respect for the Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. I quite agree with that principle, but I want to ask the Senator another question. It will take some time for anybody's plan of relief to employ these boys and get them jobs. In the meantime should not something like this be done to take care of them?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President. I really think that in the main we are prone to exaggerate the condition. But suppose we do not. This plan would not relieve the condition that has brought about the present distressing situation, but would intensify it. If we are to invite the unemployed between the ages specified in the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to become the wards of the Government, we have instilled into them the idea and started the habit in their very youth of depending upon the Government for their support, for their food, clothing, and training. They and we ought to recognize that the Government is not instituted for the purpose of providing these things, but for the purpose of providing a means by which every man, woman, and child in the country shall have an opportunity to make a decent and comfortable living.

We all know what has brought about this condition and yet we have not the courage to meet it and solve it. We know why this financial restriction. We know why this deflation. Every man understands what the conditions were when we had an abundance of currency and easy credit, when everybody had a job, when from 1914 to 1919 the bank failures in the country decreased until 1919 there was not a bank failure in the United States. On May 20, 1920, by the exercise of the arbitrary power of our bankers and their allied interests, deflation was set about which gradually grew from bad to worse until to-day we are the victims of the crime of May, 1920.

We did not call an international conference to deflate. We did it with American bankers in the city of Washington. Then why should we be here asking for an international conference to rectify that wrong which American bankers did? Why do we stand here day after day and treat or attempt to treat the symptoms of a fundamental disease of a lack of adequate circulating medium? Here we are actually attempting to jeopardize the character of the youth of our country, causing them to look to a dole from their Government rather than creating a condition where they can look to their own efforts for an honorable living and setting aside enough for an honorable old age.

No, Mr. President; I am not going to vote for any more of these treatments of symptoms.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from South Carolina very eloquently said a moment ago that the Government is not organized for the purpose of looking after these youths. I wonder under what conception the Senator believes the country is organized to relieve the cotton farmers?

Mr. SMITH. I am not asking the Government to relieve the cotton farmer. I am asking the Government to take the barriers away and let the cotton farmer relieve himself. That is what I am asking be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Considering the amendment of the Senator from Michigan as a military measure—that is, as a provision designed for the improvement and strengthening of the national defense—it seems to me to be almost wholly ineffective. It makes a boarding house, so to speak, of every Army post in the country, requires no service, provides no training for the young men who are presumed to be the beneficiaries of the provision. Therefore as a military measure it is ineffective.

Considered as a measure of destitution relief, it limits the alleged benefits to certain classes on the basis of arbitrary distinctions. First, there is an age limit between 17 and 24. Next, in order to get admission to an Army post under the provisions of the amendment the applicant must prove not only that he is unemployed but that he has been unemployed for at least six months.

I have a full appreciation of the motives and purposes of the very able Senator from Michigan, who offers the amendment, but I do not think it is to be approved either as a military measure or as a destitution relief measure.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator a question right there in my own time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. For what character of young men are we providing their board and keep at the expense of the Government?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no limit except as to age and period of unemployment.

Mr. SMITH. Does not the Senator know that these young men, and their name is legion, who would not accept a job if it was offered, who are idle and hitch-hiking on the public highways, infesting our cities, overrunning every highway and byway on the ground that the Government owes them a living, would constitute a part of this group?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am assuming that there are many young men in the country who would like to have employment, but are unable to secure it, and that there is a considerable number who would actually be benefited by the operation of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan should the same be enacted into law. But I make the point, and reaffirm it, that to admit into the military posts any young man who happens to be between the ages of 17 and 21 and who has been out of employment for a period of six months, without any requirement or provision for training, with only the general arrangement that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of the amendment, makes the provision ineffective for any military advantage.

Then, passing to the second phase of the matter, the limitations as to the beneficiaries are arbitrary, and perhaps necessarily so, because manifestly all of the idle can not be provided for at Army posts. Manifestly it is essential to make some limitations. It seems to me that the limitations made by the Senator from Michigan are not unreasonable. Nevertheless it is an inadequate arrangement for destitution relief. It will work harm rather than benefit to the military service, because, as suggested by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in a question that he asked during the early period of the debate this morning, it is impossible to take a hundred thousand idle men in military posts with only a general requirement that they shall be subject to discipline and with no definite plan for the utilization of their services without threatening, if not breaking down, the morale of the men who are actually in the service and with whom they must come in contact.

I think the Congress must in the early future proceed to the consideration of a destitution relief measure. We passed one last session, and I think we must pass another in the very early future. In all probability it will be brought forward within a day or two. However good its intention is—and I concede it to be good, and I recognize that the Senator from Michigan has an active, quick mind and that he is always able to give logical and forceful reasons for any proposal he advances—I feel it my duty to say that I do not believe the arrangement proposed will prove a very effective destitution relief measure.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the fact that I gave notice of my intention to offer an amendment including vocational training so far as there may be practicable or available facilities, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] said that he would accept the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me further?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understood the Senator from Michigan to say this morning in answer—at least indirect answer—to a question I asked him, that, according to his estimate, about 88,000 young men should be provided for under this arrangement. A mere amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan providing for vocational training will not accomplish very much. Military posts have no facilities for that sort of training.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator is mistaken as to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not mistaken in the sense in which I am speaking. I recognize the fact that my statement may not be taken literally but certainly the Senator from Iowa will not contend that the facilities now provided by law at military posts are adequate for the vocational training of 88,000 additional men, that is, 88,000 men in addition to the number that are now at such military posts. If he makes that contention, I should like to hear him discuss the facts upon which he bases it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think I still have the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; and I thank the Senator from South Carolina for yielding to me.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me, just for a moment, to reply to the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I wish to call attention to the situation at Rock Island, Ill. Right now there is equipment there for the vocational training of fifteen or twenty thousand men, and it is standing idle.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have expressed myself in reference to this amendment. Just a word in indorsing what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has said.

What will be the effect upon every Army post of having precipitated upon it this flood of young men who are not there for the purpose of military training, and who, if they were, entirely lack previous training and previous equipment along the lines of discipline? It would mean the total demoralization of discipline at every Army post; it would be converting our military posts into temporary boarding houses for all the idle youth from the age of 17 to 24. Who can determine what number would be there? Beside that, Mr. President, the principle involved is a wrong one.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH. I yield for a question.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish, if I can, merely to correct what I think, from a statement made by him, is a wrong impression on the part of the Senator from South Carolina as to the type of young men who are now wandering through the country and who are called "transients."

I understood the Senator to say that they are young people who do not care to work. As a matter of fact, they are not of the type which we used to designate as "hoboes" or "tramps." They are young men and young women, a very large number of them—it is said there are more than 50,000 young women in this category—who are wandering through the country, having left their own homes because during these depression days there is no opportunity for them to secure employment at home, and they are going out into the country in search of an opportunity for employment. As they arrive in other localities they are denied unemployment relief because of the restrictive measures which nearly all municipalities have now adopted, providing that one must be an actual resident of the community for a year or so before any employment will be given to him by relief agencies. So these young people, striving for an opportunity for employment, many of whom are educated, some of them being college graduates, are denied that opportunity, and their case becomes absolutely hopeless, unless, with the cooperation of the Federal Government, the State is able to deal with the particular problem.

Mr. SMITH. This amendment does not propose to provide employment.

Mr. WAGNER. I was not speaking in behalf of the proposed legislation. I simply heard the Senator from South Carolina say that these were young men who do not want to work. I wanted to assert, after having had the benefit of listening to the testimony of witnesses who have made a thorough investigation of this whole subject, that these are young people who do want employment, and they are out in search of it but can not get it.

Mr. SMITH. I recognize, perhaps equally as well as does any Member of this body, the distressing condition of unemployment, but this amendment does not propose to provide employment. It does not seek to bring about a condition under which one may maintain his self-respect and, at least, make an effort, under provisions made by the Government, to sustain himself in some kind of employment. He is simply to be the guest of the Government at an Army post for a year without any cost, with food and clothing furnished him.

The Senator from New York indicates that there are an equal number of young ladies wandering over the country. If we should follow the modern fashion we would have coeducational institutions at the Army posts and let the boys and girls be there together. I think we might augment the number of unemployed if we would incorporate such a provision in this measure.

But, Mr. President, it seems to me we have selected the wrong place for housing and caring for the unemployed. The adoption of the proposal would demoralize our training camps and inject a flood of irresponsible individuals who in a manner would be put under the discipline of those who have charge of the camps without being required to do anything but to take a certain amount of exercise each day and to receive food and clothing.

Mr. President, there is not a Senator here but who can visualize what would be the result if this provision were enacted into law, particularly in the South. I am not so well acquainted with conditions that exist elsewhere as to the character of those who would take advantage of this opportunity, but I know what would happen in my section.

I am against the principle involved in this bill. I think if we would resolutely set our faces toward curing the disease that has brought these manifestations of distress we would not need to take care of the unemployed. There is plenty in America, and there should be the opportunity for every able-bodied man and woman to be employed and to enjoy its vast wealth. The difficulty is that the wealth is in the hands of a few, so that at a time when we have the greatest amount of wealth the Nation ever had, even our Government is failing to meet its expenses; States are defaulting on their bonds; municipalities and other political subdivisions are going bankrupt, banks are failing all over the country, fear and distress exist everywhere. Why? Because Congress has not the courage to do its duty under the Constitution, and we are subject to the sweet will of those who take advantage of our laws, hoard our money, and permit the country to become bankrupt and ruined.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that a few days ago I received a letter from a business man living in a little town in my State. In the letter he referred to the Government supplying food and clothing to the unemployed. He happens to live in a cotton-growing section of my State, where usually the farmers depend on colored labor for picking the cotton crop. He said that since the distribution of free food and clothing began last September it had been impossible for the farmers to prevail upon the colored laborers to engage in their customary pursuit of picking cotton, that they preferred to rely on Uncle Sam's bounty and favor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to offer and have considered an amendment which I understand the committee is willing to accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, line 18, after the word "States," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be so construed as to prevent the application of funds herein contained to the pay and allowances or travel expenses of any officer or enlisted man of the National Guard who may surrender said pension, disability allowance, disability compensation, or retired pay for the period of his service in the National Guard.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand that this amendment is being considered by unanimous consent and does not interfere with the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has not as yet made his motion.

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to point out that I have not made the motion as yet.

Mr. REED. Very well; I am glad to be informed as to the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in order, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the only purpose of this amendment is to guard against a construction which might be given to the provision which was adopted by the House and retained by the Senate committee. It is simply designed to make it clear that that provision is not intended to apply to a National Guard officer or enlisted man, drawing disability pay or pension, who surrenders such disability pay or pension during the period of his service in the National Guard.

Mr. REED. My understanding is, Mr. President, that this amendment is in entire accord with the thought of the committee. We had supposed that it affected only those who are actually drawing compensation from the Government. If the amendment of the Senator will make it more clear, as I think it does, I interpose no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the amendment but merely to make a brief statement. I should not like to vote against the amendment without making the statement, because I think everyone must sympathize with the general purpose which the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] has in mind—to wit, some sort of care and relief for the very large number of young men who are traveling about the country at this time without employment.

It seems to me, however, that in the bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and in the Costigan-La Follette bill, a much wiser and better provision is made for the same general purpose. Moreover, it is much broader, because, as I read both of those bills, provision is made for the transient unemployed wherever they may be found.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. There is another advantage in that dealing with the subject is delegated entirely to the States where the individuals are located.

Mr. GEORGE. I was going to come to that. It seems to me, also, to be a very distinct advantage over the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to leave to the States, as both the Costigan-La Follette bill and the Wagner bill do, the relief of the transient unemployed of all ages.

It seems to me to be rather dangerous to bring about unusual concentrations of young men between 17 and 24 years of age in the various military posts of the country, wholly aside from all of the other objections that have been pointed out. These unusual concentrations must make against the public health. They can not promote sanitary conditions, because these young men can not be placed under military restrictions in any proper sense. I therefore believe that the true principle would be the care of the unemployed transients not by concentration but by decentralization, leaving the problems to each of the States, and by making the necessary appropriation to meet the necessities of the present time.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to ask the Senator if there is not much more danger to the public health in the way they are concentrating now, without medical attention or anything else, than there would be if they were brought together in orderly fashion and under medical care in these military posts?

Mr. GEORGE. I should unhesitatingly say "No," because I think the Senator must realize what we may expect to find when an unusually large number of young men are brought together without very strict military discipline in the several military posts scattered throughout the country. It is bad enough as it is; and the purpose to relieve this situation is altogether laudable and commendable. If there were no other way of doing it, or, as I think, no better way, I think I should vote for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Michigan; but I think a better way is pointed out in both the Wagner and the Costigan-La Follette bills.

Mr. President, I merely wanted to make that statement before voting upon this amendment, because I should be unwilling to vote against it without a word of explanation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a few moments ago, when I was out of the Chamber, I understand that the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] offered an amendment to this bill which was accepted. I had an amendment to the same provision which takes care of a condition which the committee desires to take care of; and I should like to send that amendment to the desk and have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Alabama offers the following amendment:

On page 48, line 18, after the word "States," insert:

Provided further, That present adjutant generals who may be drawing such emoluments may be continued in a federally recognized status without pay under this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. REED. There are now four adjutant generals in the United States who were partially disabled through wounds received in action with the enemy. They are apparently entirely capable of performing their duties as adjutant generals. In case of war they would not be called upon for field service, but would remain in their home States. For that reason their cases are different from those of the officers of the National Guard generally, who would be called upon for field service.

The committee was asked to make an exception for these adjutant generals from this provision that is found on page 48, and our inclination was to do it; but we refrained from doing it because of the feeling that if we did it for the adjutant generals it would be unfair to the officers on their staffs and to the other members of their staffs, and that is the only reason they were not excepted entirely.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama changes the picture quite a little because of its provision that these adjutant generals may be federally recognized, but will cease to draw any pay from the Federal Government under this Army appropriation bill. For that reason, Mr. President, I know that I speak the sense of the committee when I say that I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Byrnes | Fletcher | Hull |
| Austin | Capper | Frazier | Johnson |
| Bailey | Caraway | George | Kean |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORBECK. Would it be in order for me to make a motion at this time to reconsider the vote by which a joint resolution passed the Senate day before yesterday? I would like to make the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator should enter a motion to reconsider and at the same time make a motion to request the House to return the joint resolution.

Mr. NORBECK. I enter that motion, and I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska. If the motion is agreed to, I shall take no further action on the joint resolution in the absence of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], with whom I have an agreement that we might reconsider it. I merely want it restored to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota moves to reconsider the action whereby the Senate passed House Joint Resolution 533 and requests the House to return the joint resolution to the Senate and restore it to the calendar. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, does the Senator object to the bill, or what is his object?

Mr. NORBECK. No; I do not object to the measure. I am heartily in favor of it. I had an amendment that I wanted to offer to it simply making it possible to keep better track of these mining claims and have them available for mining purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from South Dakota that the House of Representatives be requested to return the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a number of Senators have asked me my intention about continuing with the bill. I hope very much that we shall be able to pass it this afternoon. I believe that we can pass it before 5 o'clock. I should like to run along for a while in the effort to do that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who desire to be heard more or less briefly, some of whom are not here. I am here, but I should prefer that the matter should go over until Monday.

Mr. REED. Those Senators knew that the Senate would be in session to-day. I do not think they are entitled to go away and hold up the business of the Senate. The Senator from Michigan tells me that he has not quite finished his remarks; and therefore I will withhold my own brief remarks until he finishes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina made a statement which I challenge, that is, that these boys are not willing to work.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator in that statement? I said a percentage of them were not willing to work; not all.

Mr. COUZENS. I venture to say that the Senator from South Carolina can not present any authentic information showing that a percentage are not willing to work.

Mr. SMITH. I may not be able to present information as to any great percentage, but the Senator from South Caroline is pretty thoroughly convinced that there is a percentage of the individuals to whom the Senator refers who are not willing to work. So far as that is concerned, even were there not, I think I gave satisfactory reasons why I thought this amendment should not be agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator also referred to doles. I would welcome his analysis of the doles, which have amounted to nearly $2,000,000,000, which have been passed out of the Treasury through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and doles which have gone to the cotton States by the hundreds of millions, which will never be repaid. If those are not doles, then I do not understand the meaning of the word.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate just what appropriations that have gone to the South he considers doles, outside of the emergency fund which has just in the last few months been made available for the relief of unemployment?

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator admits that the one we just let go through by unanimous consent was a dole?

Mr. SMITH. I think the one we provided some time ago, amounting, I think, to $300,000,000, to be allocated among the States at the request of the governors of the States, looking toward helping out unemployment, had at least an element in it, so far as it applied to my State, that was infinitely better than a straight dole, in that the people are employed in different kinds of work, sweeping up leaves on the lawns or cleaning out drains—at least making a gesture to earn the amount that is donated.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator very properly calls it a gesture, but I want to submit that during my service here the Senator from South Carolina has made the most earnest pleas on this floor—most of which have been listened to and complied with—for relief of Southern States suffering from drought, floods, and one thing or another. If the appropriations we have made were not doles in the emergencies when they were made, then the appropriation I ask would not be a dole, because the present emergency is equal to those of the past.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that if they will refer to the history of the loans made to the drought and storm-stricken regions and to the sections where, on account of very low prices, the banks have failed, it will be found that in excess of 87 per cent of the money borrowed has been paid back by those who received it.

Mr. President, there is not a man in this body for whom I have a higher regard than I have for the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. I have had no colleague here who has more earnestly cooperated with me in the efforts I have made to relieve the distress to which he has referred. But we must differentiate between such relief as is requested here and the furnishing of credit to those who can not otherwise get it, and who, employing that credit, have sustained their self-respect and paid back to the Government in excess of 87½ per cent of the actual amount borrowed plus the interest on it.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, if the Senator reduces this whole problem to a question of gold, then he probably is accurate. If the Senator is unable to visualize any return under Government activity except gold, then he is undoubtedly right. But I have submitted evidence this morning, and I am going to submit some more, to the effect that there will be returns to this country which will be much greater and better than gold. Therefore I refuse to reduce this discussion to a mere balance sheet, to a mere calculation of the percentage of gold that will be returned to the country as a result of the Government's activities.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I heartily concur with him in that, but I do object to the manner in which he proposes, in this measure, to bring about what I think could be brought about in another way, a way which would enable the individuals to retain their self-respect, and also would not interfere with our Military Establishment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, does the Senator recall the comments made by the Senator from Georgia with respect to the Wagner bill and the Cutting bill, both of which I favor? Does he recall that the money is to be used for feeding and housing, and for exactly the same purpose in my amendment? Does the Senator favor those measures?

Mr. SMITH. I think they would be an improvement over this suggestion, because it would leave the matter to the States. They would not concentrate the boys in our Military Establishment, and would leave some manner of discretion to those who administer the funds to take care of that precious element known as the self-respect of the individual.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask the Senator whether he contends that the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico to set up camps such as there are in California, and one in Georgia and one in Florida, with an appropriation of $15,000,000, would tend to maintain the self-respect of the young men more than putting them in the Army?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President; nor have I spoken in favor of it.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask the Senator whether he would be in favor of that.

Mr. SMITH. I think not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Michigan has indicated a great familiarity with the testimony taken by the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures, and he knows that it is replete with information from the persons who are most familiar with the types of men and boys, transients, who are now on the road. He knows, further, that almost without exception the witnesses testified to the fact that the largest percentage of these young men and boys, and the older men, too, for that matter, are traveling because they are seeking work. Many of the witnesses pointed out that it was the more enterprising, the more self-respecting, the more ambitious, who were on the road.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator must have overlooked that I read all of that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wanted to direct the Senator's attention, in refutation of the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, to the statement of Mr. Black, who is in charge of the California camps for transients in the forests, as it appears on page 4 of the hearings. I could not be present during all the time the Senator was speaking, and I do not know whether he read what Mr. Black said in response to the question of Senator CUTTING, "What do you find out about the character and general type of transients?" Did the Senator read the answer to that?

Mr. COUZENS. I did not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It seems to me it would come in very appropriately following the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. COUZENS. At the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will read the reply of Mr. Black to Senator CUTTING'S question, as follows:

> We found them just as good as you find a man in the daily walks of life. The men in camp were, for the most part, of the highest types in the ranks of the unemployed. They were recruited through various charitable relief agencies in the cities. Only volunteers were accepted in the camps, but after reaching camp each man was required to work or leave. As a matter of fact, I would say that it is a boys' paradise. Many of them were laborers, but there were also business men and tradesmen. There were many professional men and many high-school and college graduates. In one camp we had 18 college graduates and 33 high-school graduates, which is a very high percentage. We have graduates of some of the largest colleges in the United States. As I say, we have quite a number of small tradesmen and business men who have gone broke. We have had men who held fairly responsible jobs as engineers, occasionally a doctor and a dentist. The occupations of the men are listed in this pamphlet which I shall be glad to leave with the committee. We have men who had been bankers and brokers. They listed themselves as clerks and after that they came in to get a job, many of them giving a false name, as a matter of pride.

From the standpoint of the men the program was most successful.

I think that covers the part relating to the character and type of men.

Mr. President, I submit that, whatever program is carried out, as provided in the proposal made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] it will take some considerable time. In other words, they will have to organize to set up these camps, which, I submit, will take some time, and whether I am quite correct about that I do not know, because I have not studied the bill of the Senator from New Mexico.

I am unable to see what there is so sacred about the Army. Just why would taking care of these 88,000 boys disrupt the Army? Certainly when we went to war, and the boys were wanted for the protection of our country, these camps and these facilities were readily available.

Mr. President, we are now at war with depression, we are now at war with need, and the facilities are in the same condition in which they were when we went to war in 1917. There was no complaint then about disorganizing the Army. There was no complaint about taking the youngsters in from 16 to 21. There was no complaint that they would disorganize the Army. But now, when we are in a fight against depression, in an effort to protect the flower of the country, we are confronted with the contention that it would disrupt the Army.

Mr. President, not even the War Department, in the reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania, indicated that it would disrupt the Army. The letter of the Secretary of War was, in my judgment, a fair statement of the facts. He did not say one word about disrupting the Army.

Not only that but I am advised that only to-day one of the admirals of the Navy, being called on the telephone in an effort to get his influence against this proposal, said that the Navy would be glad to take care of 15,000 of these boys.

Mr. President, if it should eventuate that I can not succeed in having this proposal put on the Army appropriation bill I will revise it to include both the Army and the Navy and present it as an amendment to the Navy appropriation bill, and I will continue to offer it to every appropriation bill for the remainder of the session, because it is not my intention, from false pride about the Army, to stand by and neglect 88,000 boys who could be taken care of under the provisions of my proposed amendment.

Mr. President, before I was interrupted to permit the taking up of some other matters, I was in the midst of continuing a brief recital contained in a memorandum issued by the Department of Labor, the Children's Bureau, last year. I started to read the discussion of the types of boys, and this is particularly apropos in view of the statement of the Senator from South Carolina that these boys were made up of a large percentage of loafers, boys unwilling to work. I read from the pamphlet:

> There is much testimony to the effect that these boys come from substantial American families. A study of 5,438 transient men and boys served by the Salvation Army in Atlanta during four winter months showed that 194 had been in college and 1,641 had attended high school. The Salvation Army in Washington, D. C., registered 7,512 transients during the first quarter of this year. Among them were 258 who were college trained, 2,060 who had been in high school, and 1,866 who had an eighth-grade education.
> Social workers, police, and railroad men, who are in constant touch with these boys, assert their belief that the overwhelming majority of them are young men and boys who would normally be in school or at work, but that they are on the road because there is nothing else to do, sometimes because sheer pride will not permit them to sit idly at home, sometimes because the whole support of the family came from relief agencies, wholly inadequate properly to feed the younger children; that they are on the whole not the habitual hobo criminal type.

I think that effectually refutes the charges that these young boys are a lot of hoboes and unwilling to work.

Now, I want to draw the attention of the Senate to some of the hazards and hardships with which these boys have to contend. The point I make is that these things are unnecessary. There is no necessity for these boys having to stand the hardships and take the hazardous risks that they do when the Federal Government has facilities to prevent it. I have no sympathy with keeping boys and men in idleness. I have no sympathy with laziness. I have no sympathy with indolence. But I refuse to be diverted from this plan simply because some Senators say that these boys do not want to work or that it is approaching the project from the wrong direction.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think we ought to have a quorum to hear the Senator from Michigan. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. COUZENS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Couzens | Kendrick | Robinson, Ark. |
| Bailey | Cutting | Keyes | Robinson, Ind. |
| Bankhead | Davis | King | Russell |
| Barkley | Fess | La Follette | Schall |
| Bingham | Fletcher | Lewis | Schuyler |
| Black | Frazier | McKellar | Sheppard |
| Blaine | George | McNary | Shortridge |
| Borah | Gore | Moses | Smith |
| Bratton | Grammer | Neely | Smoot |
| Brookhart | Hale | Norbeck | Steiwer |
| Bulow | Harrison | Norris | Tydings |
| Byrnes | Hastings | Nye | Vandenberg |
| Capper | Hatfield | Oddie | Wagner |
| Caraway | Hebert | Pittman | Walsh, Mass. |
| Connally | Johnson | Reed | White |
| Coolidge | Kean | Reynolds | |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

(At this point Mr. NORBECK submitted a motion relative to H. J. Res. 533, which appears on page 3855.)

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, before the quorum call I was about to discuss some of the hazards and hardships with which these young men have to contend. I hardly think it is necessary to emphasize the fact that the value of the youth to the country is recognized by all, and I do not think I shall take the time of the Senate to read from numerous documents I have here concerning the value of the youth of the country, notwithstanding the disparagement placed upon them by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I do wish, however, to quote from a memorandum prepared by the Childrens' Bureau of the Department of Labor, as follows:

> Boys accustomed to decent standards of living find themselves going for days at a time without taking off their clothes to sleep at night, becoming dirty, unkempt, a host of vermin. They may go for days with nothing to eat but coffee, bread, and beans. In winter they suffer from exposure. Last winter in one western city 35 young men and boys were removed from box cars seriously ill, some in advanced stages of pneumonia.

Yet, Mr. President, for the maintenance of the aristocracy of the Army these boys must not annoy them.

Continuing to quote:

> Freight yards are policed. Hence trains must be boarded outside the yard limits while the train is in motion. One railroad alone reported more than 50 young men and boys killed and more than 100 crippled in this way last winter. It is no longer possible to pick up odd jobs here and there.

And yet, Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Arkansas say that we are not reaching the ills of the situation. Why this constant opposition to doing something that will relieve distress while we are attempting to find a mythical way of expanding currency and doing other things to get at the fundamentals? Every time some one approaches a problem of this kind the protestants get up and talk about not attacking "fundamentals." Well, Mr. President, I have heard the words "fundamentals" and "sound policies" and "economy," and so on, until I am sick and tired, and the whole United States ought to be sick and tired of the constant repetition of the words "fundamentals," "economy," "sound money," and all that sort of crazy talk while millions and millions of our people are in distress.

We must not, Mr. President, do anything that will disturb "rugged individualism"! We must not do anything that in any manner, shape, or form will affect the dignity of the youth of the land. We must enable them to retain their self-respect; we must not offer them something for nothing; we must stand here and see them traveling in the slough of despond, in misery, in distress, and sickness, afflicted with venereal and other diseases, and at the same time stand by and preach "fundamentals" and "economy," and we must do this in spite of the fact that on one railroad alone 50 young men were killed and 100 crippled while traveling across the country in search of jobs, which the Senator from South Carolina says they should have, instead of receiving some assistance from their Government. Thousands more are being killed and crippled while the Senator from South Carolina says we are not dealing with "fundamentals." We must hold up measures of this kind and see these youths demoralized, while the Senator from South Carolina deals with "fundamentals," while he talks hazily about some method for providing new currency and some kind of credit expansion. We must first get all those questions settled while in the meantime the youths of the Nation are going through an experience to which no human being should be subjected.

Continuing to read from the memorandum of the Department of Labor:

It is no longer possible to pick up odd jobs here and there. Communities jealously reserve even the occasional short-time job for local residents. Therefore the unwelcome nonresident boys—

I emphasize the word "unwelcome." Can Senators who have sons and grandsons sit here and realize with complacency that there are 300,000 boys traveling over this country who are "unwelcome"? The nonresident boy is told everywhere he goes "Move on; move on; we will give you some coffee and beans to-night and a shack to live in, but to-morrow move on, move on." And yet we stand here and appropriate millions of dollars to maintain credit. To none of the measures making such appropriations have I expressed any opposition, and all I ask is that the same consideration and cooperation be given to these homeless boys by the beneficiaries under previous acts of Congress.

Therefore the unwelcome nonresident boy must either depend on the bread line or soup kitchen, or he must beg or steal. In the box cars, in the "jungles," as the camping sites adjacent to the railroad yards are called, or even in the municipal shelters, he will meet men whose entire influence is destructive—criminals, fugitives from justice planning new "jobs"— and looking for clever new recruits—degenerates and perverts eager to initiate new boys into evil habits and teach them how they can pick up a few odd dollars in any big city. Such men are in the great minority, but one or two can do an incalculable amount of damage. Worst of all, perhaps, because it is so contagious, is the workless philosophy, the "getting by" attitude everywhere encountered and very easily acquired on the open road. To this species of demoralization the "keep them moving" policy universally in vogue not only offers no opposition but in fact contributes.

Referring to criminal "jobs"—

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from South Carolina say we must not have the sacred Army of the United States demoralized by requesting them to take care of 88,000 destitute, vigorous, energetic boys who are unable to get work. What method of reasoning do these gentlemen employ? What is the philosophy of those who take this position?

Mr. President, not one-tenth of the energy has been devoted by Congress to the care of the human side as has been devoted to taking care of the financial side. Call that demagoguery, if you desire; but if it be demagoguery, I am willing to accept the challenge.

I recognize the desirability and the advantages of keeping commerce as free as possible through the maintenance of the ordinary channels of business; I recognize that we must do everything that is proper to permit depositors in banks to withdraw their money so as to enable them to pay their help, to pay their bills, and to live. I am and have been willing to do that up to date, but I am now in doubt how much further we can go. I have been willing that the taxpayers' credit should be used to maintain the railroads' inordinate capitalization, because there are some 60,000,000 life policyholders in the United States whose equity in their policies I was unwilling to destroy. I have stood by and seen hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated for the aid and maintenance of the farmers, and have cheerfully contributed to support such measures, but now, Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Arkansas and some others from the South—a section which has been the greatest beneficiary under the appropriations of Congress to ameliorate flood and drought conditions, and to provide seed for farmers—stand up here and say that was perfectly all right because we got back 87 per cent in gold. Mr. President, I submit that what we will get back if we shall adequately take care of these youths will be worth more than 87 per cent in gold.

During the nearly 11 years that I have been a Member of the Senate I have seen almost every kind of legislation go through in the interest of business. I have not opposed those measures; I am not against the railroads or other business; I want to see their integrity maintained; but, Mr. President, I also want to see maintained the integrity of the youth of the land and I want to see them preserved. I am unable to understand men with sons and with grandchildren standing here and saying, "This scheme is impracticable because it will disturb the Army." What is there sacred about the Army or the Navy that they can not contribute their assistance to relieve a condition which everyone admits is intolerable and should not be permitted to continue?

The Senator from Pennsylvania was kind enough to have his clerk submit to me a memorandum of the reasons for the adverse report made on this bill by the Committee on Military Affairs. The first is—

While the Army has neither barracks nor tentage which could house as many as 100,000 men, Senator COUZENS estimates the number of applicants at about 300,000. Many members of the committee felt that the number would be far greater than this.

I do not criticize the committee for making that statement, for there was admittedly nothing in the bill which limited the number, but I had no information as to the capacity of the Army facilities. I did expect, however, that the Committee on Military Affairs would be sympathetic enough with the principle involved to go into the matter and rewrite the bill or insert amendments which would have shown some interest on their part and have taken care of the number of youths who could have been taken care of by the War Department without extending its facilities beyond their existing capacity.

Their second reason is:

The Army has no supply of clothing which could be issued to these young men.

The War Department in their letter to the Senator from Pennsylvania did not make any such statement as that. They said that whatever equipment or clothing was used for this purpose would have to be replenished. Of course I understand that and I understand appropriations will have to be made for replenishing the clothing which the Army will have to use in order to clothe these young boys.

3. The Army appropriation for subsistence is barely sufficient to feed the present Regular Army of 118,750 enlisted men. To feed 300,000 additional men would require a further appropriation of two and a half times as much as our present appropriation for this purpose.

I expected that the Military Affairs Committee, to which this bill was referred and which later referred it to a subcommittee, would amend the bill introduced to take care of the situation. But they never changed a word in the bill, Mr. President. They made no recommendations. The chairman of the subcommittee was the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], with whom I spoke about holding hearings. They not only did not hold any hearings, they not only did not ask me to come before the committee and discuss the matter with them, but they just cold-bloodedly referred the matter to the Committee on Military Affairs without a hearing, without any consideration from persons who had familiarity with the subject, and referred it to the full Committee on Military Affairs, who, in turn, cold-bloodedly kicked it out on the calendar with an adverse report.

4. Discipline of this group of young men would be next to impossible, since they would not be enlisted and would be beyond the Army's authority to punish for infractions of rules. They could not even be required to keep their own quarters clean, and the Army has no funds with which it could employ civilian labor for this purpose.

Mr. President, I submit that with the intelligence of the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, with his familiarity with War Department affairs, with the attention of the whole committee devoted to military affairs, the committee could have amended the bill so that these boys would have been required to keep their own quarters clean. They could have inserted in the bill a provision giving absolute authority to the commanders to discipline or dismiss boys who were taken in under their jurisdiction; but not one word did they change, Mr. President. Not one thing did they do. In other words, the whole proposal was received in a most unsympathetic manner and referred back with an adverse report.

Mr. President, days and days, weeks, and months have been given at this session of Congress by the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and other committees to devising ways and means to protect the credit structure of the country, to protect the railroads, to protect industry. Hours have been devoted to amending bills that were submitted. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has spent hours of his brilliant, intellectual mind on laws to devise ways and means for taking people out of bankruptcy; but, Mr. President, the Military Affairs Committee never spent one minute to take out of moral bankruptcy these boys who are in it.

Why this great distinction between taking care of human beings and taking care of dollars? Why are dollars so much more precious than 100,000 boys tramping the country, looking for jobs? Why is that more important?

Oh, Mr. President, this is "demagoguery." This, perhaps, is what Sergeant at Arms Barry meant when he said there was demagoguery in the Senate. That is what is always alleged when anyone gets up here to defend the underprivileged boys, girls, and men of this country. To fight for them, to do anything to save them from the ills of the economic depression, is demagoguery. To get up here and plead for billions to maintain the credit structure, and the income from bonds, is statesmanship.

Mr. President, I have no desire to be called a statesman. I am glad to be called a demagogue if standing up here for hours in defense of these 300,000 boys is demagoguery.

The fifth objection submitted is as follows:

The presence of a body of unenlisted boarders of indefinite number at each military post would greatly impede the performance of the regular duties of the Army.

Mr. President, that is the weakest of them all! There was some foundation for the other excuses offered by the committee, but that is the weakest of all. "Unenlisted boarders"! One hundred thousand or 88,000 of the best of the youth of the Nation designated as "unenlisted "boarders." "Unenlisted boarders"! Taken in because of economic conditions which they played no part in bringing about, they are called "unenlisted boarders"; and they, forsooth, Mr. President, would "greatly impede the performance of the regular duties of the Army"!

Pray, Mr. President, what are those "regular duties" which are so much more important than looking after 88,000 of the best flower of the country?

Oh, it is true that they are not the sons of any Members of this body. They do not belong to any fathers here, nor do they belong to the fathers who are Members of the House of Representatives. They belong to other fathers, who are just as fond of them as we in this body are fond of our children; and they are only "unenlisted boarders"!

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, my able colleague, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], has referred to the possibility that he may have earned classification as a demagogue because of his implacable insistence upon this humane legislation. He spoke sarcastically. But I want to address a preliminary word to this suggestion submitted by my colleague.

I presume he would be the last man who would sanction the thing I am now about to say. Nevertheless, I intend to say it, Mr. President. I intend to say that the interest which he displays in underprivileged boys is no new conception responding to the fleeting fancy of a vagrant moment. On the contrary, we of Michigan have grateful reason to know that not only his efforts and his sympathies, but his resources, with an amazing and almost unparalleled generosity, have been dedicated to underprivileged children for many fruitful years. Therefore, in the attitude which he takes to-day in this Chamber he is but pursuing the noble dedications of a lifetime; and the proposition that he lays upon the bar of the Senate this afternoon is but the lengthened shadow of a practical philosophy to which he has subscribed his own effort and resource for many blessed years. Uncounted children of Michigan are the beneficiaries of his sympathies in these respects. He is a veteran of many wars in their behalf.

No, Mr. President; there is no demagogy in the attitude of my colleague upon this proposition. There is simply consistency in dedication to underprivileged children and to their fair chance in life.

Mr. President, I support the plea which my colleague has so eloquently and so earnestly submitted. I support the plea for many different reasons. May I say that among other reasons is the fact that I am a firm believer in the theory and philosophy of citizens' military training camps and reserve officers' training camps, and the inevitable advantage in terms of citizenship that comes from any contact with well-directed and intelligent military supervision.

It is true that under the terms of the pending amendment it is not proposed to induct these boys into active military commitments. Nevertheless, it is equally true, under the literal language of the amendment, that any of these boys admitted to these posts under these circumstances shall, so far as practicable—and I read from the amendment—"be subject to the customary discipline maintained at such posts, and shall participate in all forms of beneficial and healthful exercise." Furthermore, the Secretary of War is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Very well. Even though there be no enlistment, even though there be no military commitment, Mr. President, it seems to me that if these otherwise itinerant boys are gathered together under these military auspices, and if the direction of the adventure proceeds with any imagination at all, the net result must be to produce better citizens, and to produce them in very much the same sort of a patriotic reaction for which we appropriate many millions of dollars to create citizens' military training camps.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. REED. Let us take a practical case for illustration. Suppose that at Fort Myer we had a thousand or 2,000 of these young men, half white, half colored—doubtless they would be that—on a day like to-day. Just what would the Senator's own imagination provide for them to do? Military training is out of the question. That is not contemplated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why is it out of the question?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Michigan has stated that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan has stated that there is no commitment, no enlistment; but he has not stated, nor do I believe that he contemplates, that there is to be a complete divorcement from the many activities that enter into the creation of sound bodies and sound minds under military auspices in these training camps.

Mr. REED. I understand that gymnasium work would be permitted, if there is a gymnasium, but that military training, drill, instruction in military subjects, is not contemplated. That is what I gathered as a result of the argument this morning. If military training is expected, certainly that ought to be stated; but if military training is not resorted to, just what type of healthful and beneficial exercise does the imagination of the Senator suggest for a day like to-day?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, what would the Regular Army do?

Mr. REED. The Regular Army goes through with its drills. It has a lot of work to do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I were in charge of the experiment involving these thousand young men at Fort Myer to whom the Senator refers, I would contemplate, on a day like this, a type of drill which would in no sense necessarily be a commitment to the regulations, and yet which could well involve the discipline and the character-building which is contemplated within the latitude of this amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to his colleague?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do.

Mr. COUZENS. I am unable to know what the Senator from Pennsylvania refers to, because I see nothing in the amendment which prohibits military training.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator this morning to say that military training was not contemplated, and the bill says nothing about it.

Mr. COUZENS. I say I did not contemplate it, because I am not a military man; but the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee is a military man. Why did not he put that in when the bill was before him, if he thought that was a good thing?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this colloquy between the senior Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Pennsylvania illustrates the point I am trying to make. There is no prohibition whatever in this bill against the use of the military brains with which the Army is commanded to create a ritual which will be of service not only to these temporary wards of the Government but to the Government itself in the reactions which, as I see the situation, can be built.

I am not a military man myself. I would not undertake to say what the specific possibilities are.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. In just a moment. I would undertake to say, however, that if the Senator from Pennsylvania with his military experience were in charge of those thousand boys at Fort Myer, or if the Senator from Maryland, who now rises to his feet and who also is a splendid soldier, were in charge of those thousand boys at Fort Myer, they would have a busy, useful, healthful day.

I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I think we ought to have a larger attendance here while arguments for and against this proposition are being made. Would the Senator object to yielding for the purpose of a quorum call?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Inasmuch as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] has entered a motion to reconsider, which may be counted as business, the call for a quorum is in order, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Caraway | Grammer | Keyes |
| Bailey | Connally | Hale | King |
| Bankhead | Coolidge | Harrison | La Follette |
| Bingham | Couzens | Hastings | Lewis |
| Black | Dale | Hayden | McKellar |
| Blaine | Fess | Hebert | McNary |
| Borah | Fletcher | Hull | Moses |
| Brookhart | Frazier | Johnson | Neely |
| Bulow | George | Kean | Norris |
| Capper | Gore | Kendrick | Nye |
| Reed | Schall | Smith | Wagner |
| Reynolds | Schuyler | Smoot | Walsh, Mass. |
| Robinson, Ark. | Sheppard | Tydings | Walsh, Mont. |
| Russell | Shortridge | Vandenberg | |

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to propose a unanimous-consent agreement, that beginning on Monday at 12 o'clock no Senator shall speak longer than 15 minutes or more than once on the pending bill or amendments that are pending thereto and which may be offered to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair state in connection with that that there is already a unanimous-consent agreement to take a recess whenever the day's work may be finished?

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, would not the Senator from Oregon broaden the request so as to provide that no Senator should speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any motion connected with the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I suppose that is contemplated. I certainly would include it. It is quite proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that, beginning at 12 o'clock on Monday, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes in connection with the pending bill, or any amendment thereto, or any motion in connection therewith. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that if this is agreed to, we will go no farther to-night.

Mr. McNARY. That is the understanding.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have an amendment I wish to offer, and I want to talk on the bill. While I could divide my remarks up, I would not like to be limited to 15 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator would have 15 minutes on the bill, 15 minutes on any amendment he desired to offer, and 15 minutes on any motion in connection with the bill. Therefore, the Senator might have 45 minutes, if he chose to demand his rights.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

THE GRAIN FUTURES ACT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, although the price of wheat in the United States is to-day and for some time past has been ridiculously low, it is and has been substantially above an export parity. It is by far the highest priced wheat of any exporting nation in the world. Moreover, the speculative element of the grain trade apparently feel that the price of wheat is entirely too high; that to "help" the distressed farmer the below-the-cost-of-production price he is now receiving should be driven to still lower levels. In support of that statement I will quote from an editorial appearing in the Grain and Live Stock Herald (successor to the LaSalle Street Herald) of December 22, 1932, a financial and commercial journal published in Chicago. I quote:

> The Grain Futures Administration, in its annual report to the Secretary of Agriculture, confirms the belief that we have long held, namely, that it was fear of Government interference with the trade and of drawing down the wrath of the bureaucrats on their heads that kept the short-sellers from driving and driving hard toward an export basis during the past four years at a time when they might have had some chance of success.
> It was our belief, and has been, that one prime reason why we have not gotten on an export basis and did not fight to that level when prices were at a decent level was because the big speculators were afraid to act. They were afraid that if they sold heavily in Chicago against purchases in Winnipeg the Grain Futures Administration would see the report of their heavy volume of sales, call them on the carpet, and either force them to close their contracts or would force the exchange to close. This is borne out in large part by the fact that the instant the Secretary of Agriculture withdrew the requirement that trades of 500,000 bushels or more must be reported, the market here at Chicago immediately broke sharply * * *.

Mr. President, the statement that the large professional speculators, the self-styled "friends of the farmer," have been overwhelmingly on the short side of the wheat market during the past two crop years—July 1, 1930, to June 30, 1932, is amply supported by the records of the Grain Futures Administration. These official records disclose that during these two years the large speculators in the Chicago wheat market were net short on 521 days out of 598—87 per cent of the time—or nearly 9 days out of every 10. Moreover, the records further show that the largest net long position ever attained by the large speculators during the very brief time that they were net long was but 3,660,000 bushels contrasted with their maximum net short position of 13,700,000 bushels. It is a well-recognized fact that after these large speculators have entered the market on the short side their sole interest is in seeing prices decline to lower levels.

I can not subscribe to the doctrine of the "philanthropic speculators" who hope to "aid" the farmer by operating on the short side of the wheat market, and thus drive down the price of his product to still lower levels. On the other hand, I am convinced of the need of additional legislation to strengthen and reenforce the present grain futures act along the lines of the bill which I introduced at the beginning of the present Congress (S. 96).

Doctor Duvel, Chief of the Grain Futures Administration, has recently issued a statement explaining briefly just what the grain futures act is and what it is not, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate his statement in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

THE GRAIN FUTURES ACT—WHAT IS IT?

(Statement by Dr. J. W. T. Duvel, Chief of Grain Futures Administration, United States Department of Agriculture)

In view of what appears to be a deliberate and rather well-planned campaign to create a false impression among farmers and others concerning the purpose and effect of the grain futures act and to confuse it with the tariff act of 1922, the agricultural marketing act of 1929, and the revenue act of 1932, it seems desirable at this time to restate in simple terms what the grain futures act is, how it came to be enacted, and what it does and does not do.

The grain futures act was passed in 1922. It was the result of 40 years of legislative effort to obtain some measure of control over the type of business known as dealings in grain futures on boards of trade. Constantly recurring corners and market manipulations had made Federal regulation necessary.

It was recognized that the boards of trade themselves had the power to prevent manipulation and to prevent the spreading of false rumors by members to influence prices. The problem was to force them to exercise their power and control over such matters against the selfish desires of the powerful speculative interests who by well-distributed patronage were able to dominate board-of-trade affairs. It is only fair to say that the majority of board-of-trade members were more or less disgusted with the conditions that existed, but fear of reprisals and ruin of their own business rendered them helpless to do anything.

The grain futures act is not to be regarded as farm-relief legislation, although it was passed in response to a widespread demand among farmers for market supervision. It does not fix prices or affect prices, except by freeing them from manipulative control. It aims merely to safeguard the price-making machinery. It does not prohibit short selling. It imposes no taxes of any kind. It places no limitation upon the amount of grain that may be bought or sold for future delivery by any person or interest. There is no limit upon the amount that a person may be either long or short, although amendments have been proposed from time to time to authorize such limitations.

Contrary to representations which have been made recently by those who know better, the Grain Futures Administration has never required any person, either speculator or grain dealer, to sell out any part of his holdings. The act contains no authority for such action. The Chicago Board of Trade, through its business conduct committee, some years ago established the principle that individual speculative lines in excess of 5,000,000 bushels were a dangerous market hazard. The Grain Futures Administration, while believing that a 5,000,000-bushel limit is too large for the safety of a stable market, has cooperated with the business conduct committee to the extent of informing the committee of situations where single accounts approached or were above 5,000,000 bushels. The business conduct committee has warned individual speculators against increasing dangerous speculative lines, but has not, to the knowledge of the Grain Futures Administration, ever ordered them to close their trades or even to reduce their lines.

So much for the "restrictions" which the big speculator so vigorously opposes. In this connection, it is interesting to note that his opposition is heard always in the plea that except for the supervision imposed by the grain futures act which he chooses to call "restrictions," he would be in the market as a buyer supporting prices to help the farmer. During the past two and one-half years, however, when the Government itself for a time was undertaking to support prices for the benefit of farmers, the large speculators in Chicago wheat futures—those having accounts long or short at any one time in excess of 500,000 bushels in one future—were in the market practically all of the time, but, as a group, were pursuing the selling side. The group as a whole was net short most of this period. To be exact, from April 1, 1930, to June 30, 1932, out of a total of 675 trading days the group was short on 593 days, long on 81 days, and even 1 day.

The load of this short selling, as well as the hedging load occasioned by the large stocks of wheat in store during this period, was carried by the thousands of small speculators throughout the country, aided by the support given the futures market for a time by the Government through the Grain Stabilization Corporation. The small speculators, composing the so-called general trading public and the hedgers, are the ones who make maintenance of the futures market possible. Without them there would be no futures market.

The grain futures act since its inception has been strenuously opposed by the speculative element on the exchanges. At the outset it was carried to the United States Supreme Court in an attack upon its constitutionality. In spite of the fact that it was fully sustained in a sweeping decision announced by Chief Justice Taft, it is still being contested in the courts from every possible new angle of attack. At this moment a case is pending in the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit to enjoin the Secretary of Agriculture from exercising his power to require reports and to inspect the records of board of trade members.

What is there in the grain futures act so objectionable to the grain exchanges and the large speculators in the futures market?

Briefly stated, the principal provisions of the grain futures act are as follows:

1. Any board of trade desiring to maintain a market for dealing in grain for future delivery must be designated a "contract market" by the Secretary of Agriculture.

2. In order to be designated a contract market, a board of trade must meet the following requirements: (a) It must undertake to prevent manipulation of prices and the cornering of grain by members. (b) It must prevent its members from disseminating false and misleading crop and market information to influence prices. (c) It must not discriminate against cooperative associations in the matter of membership rights and trading privileges. (d) It must make certain reports to the Secretary of Agriculture and must require members to keep certain records open to inspection by properly authorized agents of the Government.

Has the Government been unreasonable or exercised unnecessary power by way of requiring reports or in the matter of inspecting books and records of board of trade members? In the suit brought to enjoin the Secretary from exercising his powers in this respect, which suit is pending on appeal to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, Judge Wilkerson of the United States district court at Chicago on February 12, 1932, expressed the opinion of the court as follows:

"The court finds that the Secretary has not transcended the limits of what is essential to the intelligent performance of the broad duties imposed upon him by the statute. To limit his right to inspect books to cases in which he has already obtained information justifying a formal complaint against somebody defeats the purpose of the act. Regulation of boards of trade as contract markets necessarily requires, as the basis for the exercise of the regulatory authority, information concerning the business, in the transaction of which the board is used as an instrument."

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1933.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial on Muscle Shoals written by the Hon. Josephus Daniels.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTRUCTIVE CONSERVATION—A BACKWARD GLANCE

The suggested development of the Tennessee Basin by President-elect Roosevelt is the most constructive and far-reaching conservation project in our history. It recalls the early conservation fight made by Theodore Roosevelt and Gifford Pinchot against the dissipation of our natural resources. The difference is this: Franklin Roosevelt's plan for the development of Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee Basin is proposed as a means of decentralization of industry and greater reforestation. Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the Power Authority of the State of New York, a high authority on power and kindred questions, says that President-elect Roosevelt's Muscle Shoals project will have "even more profound results throughout the Nation than did the building of the Panama Canal." Mr. Walsh adds that Mr. Roosevelt "has worked out a plan under which the project when completed will be self-sustaining. We now have high assurance that one of the greatest natural resources of our country will be fully developed, to endure for all time as a monument to those who have had the vision and the courage to preserve it and statesmanship to devote it to the service of the American people."

President-elect Roosevelt's plan of development recalls an editorial on conservation which appeared in the News and Observer in its issue of February 10, 1910. It is furnished to this paper by J. S. Holmes, State forester, who writes that "in going over some old papers which I brought from Chapel Hill eight years ago" he found the copy of the paper which, he says, "emphasizes the fact to which I have often referred of your continued and unswerving support of conservation." He adds: "I can not help seeing a close connection between your attitude and the forward-looking policy which has so frequently been initiated by the President elect since you and he worked together for the protection of the oil supply of the United States."

The editorial in the News and Observer of February 10, 1910, is applicable this February, for present conditions emphasize the need of conservation at this time. It is as follows:

"CONSERVATION NEEDED SOUTH

"Aside from the direct issue of graft and public rights handed out for private exploitation raised by Gifford Pinchot in his manly fight for the Alaskan coal fields, in which the Ballinger handling of affairs has been vigorously attacked, there is even a more important reflex effect upon the entire country, which has been given a sharp notice to be on guard to protect other of its natural resources.

"In this problem of the conservation of natural resources the South has perhaps more at stake than has any other section of the country, and in the opening of the eyes of the Nation to its immense economic needs the South will be benefited if it will be taught the lessons that are plainly brought out in the sensational developments of the Pinchot-Ballinger controversy. The vast coal fields of Alaska are of great importance, and these ought not to be permitted to be gobbled up by private corporations working for greed, to the injury of the entire people, the few to reap at the expense of the many. In a still greater degree the South must look to the conservation of its water powers and of its forests.

"There are by a rough estimate some 200,000,000 acres of forest lands in the South, and these acres form about two-fifths of the entire timber acreage of the United States. In these forests of the South there are to be found the most valuable species of trees, all the longleaf pine, and all the cypress, in these broad acres being the source of naval stores and a great part of the supply of the hardwoods that are so valuable. These forests are not alone of immense value as to the money worth of the gift of nature in them, but there is an enormous added value in their relation to soil betterment and to water supply, agriculture and health, both being great debtors to the trees of this section.

"A matter that presses for quick attention is the conservation of these natural timber resources, for the indiscriminate inroads into the forests of the South means that in from 15 to 25 years cutting, at the present rate, the timber area will be desolate, a fact which is so patent that intelligent care for the forest area is a matter which presses upon the South in a far greater manner than the Alaskan coal fields upon the Nation.

"Fourteen thousand sawmills in the South are busily at work making inroads into the forests, these being about 45 per cent of all the sawmills in the United States, and with the evident fact that as the timber decreases the more vigorous will be the assaults upon the forests to secure what is left, the prospect is not an encouraging one. In this exploitation of southern forest area there is much capital from the North and East at work, these foreign interests caring nothing for the future, being only concerned in the profit taking of to-day.

"That the South should conserve its foreign interests is a matter of great importance and this can be done without placing any obstacles in the way of legitimate business enterprises. It is recognized that the lumber industry of the South is among its most important assets and there should be no legislation that would harass it. Yet despite everything that can be said there should be regulation of some kind that would tend to perpetuate our forests, to so arrange that as these are cut away new forests would arise, and that the vast areas be made to again provide for the call for timber.

"The South has need of the conservation spirit in not allowing its vast timber wealth to be treasure of to-day only, and it should take steps to regulate matters to the end that its forests be protected, each of the Southern States to have forestry commissions that would give intelligent study to conditions as they exist and plan on large scale to see that these vast natural resources are not foolishly wasted, but are cared for and nourished so that we may not rob the future for the mere gain of the present, that we conserve these great interests in a manner that will be of lasting value, giving to the generations yet to come that which is their due."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, strong to save, incline Thine heart and hear our prayer. Allow no unworthy thought or desire to come with us into the presence of the Most High. Thou hast said the servant is not above his master, or the disciple above his Lord. Let the light of the first century be the light for the twentieth century. We beseech Thee to let Thy word be most thought compelling, most zeal inspiring, and country-wide transforming. We pray that it may bear the world onward to the goal of God's benevolent purposes. The Lord give us the power of might to respond with sweeping conviction to the appeals of our neighbors, our comrades, our fellow citizens, and even the stranger within our gates. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on February 10, 1933, present to the President, for his approval, a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 14228. An act to change the name of "Roosevelt Island" to "Theodore Roosevelt Island"; and

H. J. Res. 565. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1933.

APPROPRIATION FOR DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED COTTON TO THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 597) to provide appropriations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to authorize the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved February 8, 1933, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the resolution for the information of the House.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Federal Farm Board to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the distribution of Government-owned cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved February 8, 1933, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,100,000: Provided, That in addition to the purposes for which an appropriation was made by Public Resolution No. 43 of the Seventy-second Congress, approved July 22, 1932, for carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat and cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress," approved July 5, 1932, any balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, now or hereafter existing in such appropriation is hereby made available to enable the Federal Farm Board to carry into effect the provisions of such act of February 8, 1933: Provided further, That the unexpended balance, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the appropriation under Public Resolution No. 43 of the Seventy-second Congress, approved July 22, 1932, shall be transferred in such amounts from time to time as may be requested by the Federal Farm Board to the appropriation herein made for the purposes of such act of February 8, 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Texas prefer to answer some questions now or later? I do not intend to object to consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does not matter to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. We wish to have an opportunity to discuss this matter, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas one or two questions. I thought perhaps the gentleman wanted to explain the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution making appropriations to carry into effect a resolution heretofore passed by the Congress authorizing the Farm Board to turn over to the Red Cross not exceeding 350,000 bales of cotton. As a matter of fact, there are only 344,000 bales on hand. Therefore it is 344,000 bales. This is cotton that now belongs to the Government, in the hands of the Stabilization Corporation, and is mortgaged, as security, to intermediate credit banks and other private enterprises, and is burdened to the extent of $10,400,000 plus. This resolution will make available to pay upon that secured debt $4,100,000 from the Treasury and $4,590,000 of the unexpended balance remaining in the appropriation of $40,000,000 made last July to pay for like securities in wheat and cotton, given in that time to the National Red Cross for charitable purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. When this matter was originally presented to the House I gave it a little attention, and I was under the impression at that time that this cotton belonged to the Federal Farm Board and that it was not necessary to make any appropriation from the Treasury in order to carry out this gift to the Red Cross. I consulted with some members of the Committee on Agriculture, although I do not remember exactly who they were, but I understood from the committee at that time that this would not entail any new appropriation from the Treasury, but that we owned the cotton and were simply turning it over to the Red Cross.

Mr. BUCHANAN. At the time of the first gift of wheat to the Red Cross, no provision was made to pay off the outstanding mortgages against the wheat. Therefore the Farm Board had to pay off those outstanding mortgages from its revolving fund, which amounted to about $21,000,000 or $22,000,000. Then last July the question came up again and you gave another forty or fifty million bushels of wheat and 500,000 bales of cotton, and the Congress made an appropriation of $40,000,000 from the Treasury to pay off the outstanding loans. It would take $35,000,000 plus, of that money to pay off the outstanding loans in order that that cotton may be turned over to the Red Cross, free of any liens.

Mr. JONES. That involved cotton and wheat, too.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That involved cotton and wheat.

Mr. SNELL. As I understood, I asked the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the question when we were considering this matter before, and I may not have understood him at the time, but I understood that this was cotton that we owned, and it did not entail any new appropriation from the Treasury.

Mr. JONES. It was made very clear that it followed the line of the old appropriation. Upon a question by the gentleman from Wisconsin it was clearly stated there were commercial liens against this cotton which would have to be paid off by an appropriation. If the gentleman will read the discussion at that time he will see that was clearly stated.

Mr. SNELL. I may not have had it clearly in my mind, but I know many others had the same impression that I had.

Mr. JONES. The very resolution itself provided for that, and that is what precipitated the discussion here. It was very clearly stated, and if the gentleman will refer to the RECORD he will find that. It was clearly stated in the bill. It was clearly stated in the report. It was brought out fully in the discussion in the House. It was again stated in the conference report. It is difficult to understand how the gentleman overlooked it.

Mr. SNELL. I did not understand from the testimony adduced before the Committee on Agriculture that it was going to take money to buy this cotton that we owned. I understood that we had a surplus and were simply turning over to the Red Cross the surplus cotton.

Mr. JONES. It was surplus, but there were outstanding commercial liens against it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Was not assurance given to our committee, and was not the testimony such as to indicate, that it was a question of getting the cotton into the hands of those who were to manufacture the commodity, and that it was not going to involve any expense as far as the Government itself was concerned?

Mr. JONES. That was for the disposition of the cotton after it was turned over to the Red Cross. It was made very clear. If the gentleman will permit, it was stated in the resolution that an appropriation was necessary to take care of the commercial liens against the cotton. Of course, the Red Cross had nothing to do with that. The cotton is turned over to that organization free of all liens and obligations.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I am not talking about the resolution; I am talking about the testimony before our committee and the assurances given our committee that there was going to be practically no additional appropriation or expense involved on the part of the Government.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no, no; that applied to the disposition of the cotton after it was turned over to the Red Cross. That, of course, has to do with the actual disposition of the cotton after it is turned over to the Red Cross, and as handled by them takes care of unemployment and relieves distress.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. How has it been handled without expense if we are faced here with the necessity of making an appropriation of $4,000,000.

Mr. JONES. That is an entirely different matter. As the gentleman knows, if he reads the resolution, it states in its terms that an appropriation is authorized to pay these commercial liens on the cotton.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I am not talking about the resolution; I am talking about the testimony upon which we based the resolution. That assurance was given by the Red Cross itself.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] was asking about the resolution itself, the terms of which are manifest. The Red Cross representative dealt only with the question of the distribution of the cotton.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know how much money the Farm Board now has in its revolving fund?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not.

Mr. JONES. I can tell the gentleman. There is some $33,000,000, of which commitments have been made as to $31,000,000 plus. So they have about $1,900,000 of unallocated funds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know how the $31,000,000 is committed?

Mr. JONES. It is committed in different ways to various local organizations and cooperative groups in commitments for loans and the handling of commodities. I have been furnished this information but do not have the figures before me.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But they are not paying anything further in the way of expense for the holding of either wheat or cotton.

Mr. JONES. No. There is no wheat held; we have given that away. Of course, the carrying charges on this cotton will have to be paid up until the time of actual delivery or transfer to the Red Cross.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is all the wheat gone?

Mr. JONES. Yes; all the stabilization wheat is gone.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And we are disposing of the balance of the stabilization cotton right now.

Mr. JONES. Yes. Of course, the board has outstanding loans on considerable cooperative cotton, but this cotton was never taken over by the Stabilization Corporation, and the legal title is still in the cooperative groups.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that the chairman of the Farm Board stated before our subcommittee a few weeks ago that they had about $200,000,000 of assets. I am wondering if the repayments that are coming in from the loans they have made would take care of this without an outright appropriation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. No repayments are being made during this period.

Mr. JONES. That is true of a lot of other institutions besides this one.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is the gentleman in a position to say that of the amount appropriated to pay off commercial liens a certain percentage will not be held back to pay the salaries of employees receiving $30,000 and $35,000 a year?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not one cent will be paid for any purpose except to discharge the liens on the cotton and carrying charges.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will further yield, would it not have been cheaper for us to have gone out and bought this cotton on the open market? Could we not have bought it at a cheaper price than that represented by the appropriation called for in this resolution?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If we did that we would still have this cotton on hand.

Mr. JONES. Besides, it would cost us more, and in addition we would still be paying carrying charges on this cotton.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Was this wheat and cotton taken over at the cost price to the Stabilization Corporation or the Farm Board? Was it taken over for the amount of the liens against it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Liens amounting to $10,490,000 against this cotton, which were due to private interprise, or intermediate banks, and the purpose of this appropriation is to pay off those liens and carrying charges so the Red Cross can get possession of the cotton.

Mr. McFADDEN. What did it cost the Stabilization Corporation to acquire it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know.

Mr. McFADDEN. In other words, are they taking a loss?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are taking a loss on everything they had—cotton, wheat, and everything else.

Mr. McFADDEN. What fund does that come out of?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It comes out of the revolving fund of the Federal Farm Board.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, on a resolution of this kind the gentleman has one hour.

The SPEAKER. No; the resolution is being considered under the 5-minute rule in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. What is the difference in whether we buy these commodities to-day and pay for them in the open market or advance this money to take this Farm Board material?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The cotton will be a little cheaper by paying off these liens and we will also get rid of the cotton.

Mr. MICHENER. But when we get right down to it, this bill really refinances some of these institutions, does it not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is paying off some liens, if we may call that refinancing.

Mr. MICHENER. It has the double purpose of refinancing institutions and at the same time using the material.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. If it were not for the refinancing of certain institutions, as a matter of fact, we could go on the open market and buy the material and be money ahead without all this fussing about it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I think not.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will permit, I can not see anything else for the gentleman to do but present this resolution at this time and we have to appropriate the money, because it has been authorized; but I do feel we ought to be a little more careful before we distribute any more goods that the average person thinks belong to a board or some department of government. We ought to go into such matters more carefully at the time of passing the original legislation.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The lien amounts to how much per pound?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman can figure it out. There are 344,000 bales of cotton and the amount is $10,490,000.

Mr. JONES. The amount covered by the resolution is less than that, because we are only paying the commercial liens. The accumulated carrying charges, interest, and storage are to be paid by the Farm Board out of the revolving fund.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the price of cotton now per bale?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Cotton is a little over 6 cents per pound.

Mr. THOMASON. Thirty dollars a bale.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, in the time I have remaining let me say to those who say Congress has not been charitably inclined that the appropriations to the Red Cross involving cotton and wheat amount, in round numbers, to $89,000,000, representing 844,000 bales of cotton and 85,000,000 bushels of wheat; and I may say now, after hearing the Red Cross testimony, that never in my life have I seen or heard of a charitable appropriation where the beneficiaries have received more benefit from any appropriation than they have from these appropriations.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it not true we could go out in the open market to-day and buy more cotton for $4,000,000 than we can secure in this way?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; it is not.

Mr. HASTINGS. This cotton would be worth about $10,500,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Red Cross distributed over 59,000,000 yards of cloth through its 375 chapters. This cloth was taken by these chapters and made into garments. The chapter furnished the thread and the buttons and made the garments, without a cent of cost and distributed to the needy.

There were other garments that they had to have manufactured and they got them manufactured by 365 cotton manufacturers at actual cost and without any profit whatever to the manufacturers.

So, as a result, the Red Cross distributed food and clothing to over 4,000,000 families in this country, and I hope the House will pass this resolution to-day, because with the country locked fast in the coldest and most inclement weather we have had in recent years, there was never a more fitting or more appropriate time to put such a resolution through the House and through the Senate.

If you pass this resolution they can start immediate distribution, because they can go to the manufacturers who have on hand not only clothing but blankets and comforters and trade this cotton for the manufactured articles and immediately distribute them to the suffering people who have not sufficient clothing to shield them from the weather.

Mrs. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS. Is it not true that some mills which have been idle will be started to work at once and give much employment and this will mean money in the pockets of all classes of the people and money in the banks and money in the stores and help every community?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have been informed that mills would immediately go to work, and some of their representatives were here asking that the resolution be passed as soon as possible so they could start their mills at work.

I hope the House will pass the resolution promptly.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVALUATING GOLD

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech recently delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, as I had occasion to say Monday night in New York City, inflation is the chief topic in Washington, as, indeed, it is throughout the country. It bids fair to be the big political issue in the next four years, to determine the next congressional election, and to decide the Presidency in 1936, as it did in 1896.

At the outset the discussion is badly muddled by the vague use of the word "currency." We shall have no clear thinking if it is not understood that two kinds of money are involved, assuming that "money" is what does the work of money. First, there is cash, with which about one-tenth of the money work of the country is done. Secondly, there is credit, in the form of checks and drafts, which does nine-tenths of the money work.

There is now no general dispute about the desirability of expanding credit, as, for example, the Federal Reserve Board has been trying to do. The only real quarrel, certainly the only one to which the mass of the people will give any attention, is that over expanding the volume of cash.

The proposal that to-day most interests the public at large is made by Father Coughlin, a Detroit priest, who by use of the radio has reached with it a vast number of the people. The radio can do great good. Unfortunately, it can also work great mischief. What it has already done in this matter may be gathered from an averment I find in a newspaper letter:

> Father Coughlin is advocating a plan so simple that every citizen understands it completely. His convincing words have by now reached every home in the United States; his plans for the immediate return to a sane and durable prosperity are discussed and approved by millions of persons.

All of this is exaggerated, but there is foundation for what it says about the extent to which the argument has been carried by the radio. To this the printing press has added. Eight of the discourses have been put in pamphlet form, and their circulation bids fair to rival that of Coin Harvey's Financial School, a book said to have been read by more persons than any other since Uncle Tom's Cabin and to have been the most powerful factor in the Bryan free-silver campaign.

Father Coughlin opened his third discourse by saying that he had received more than 100,000 letters. There pass over my desk nearly 100 letters a week from constituents urging me to support the Coughlin proposal.

What is it?

The good father proposes that we take our gold coins, say, for example, the $20 pieces, remint them, and stamp them $40 instead of $20. Such a coin to-day weighs a little more than an ounce. Thereafter a $20 coin would weigh about half an ounce. The bullion value of gold is pretty nearly the same the world over, is kept nearly level by shipments to and fro, and that level will not be appreciably changed by whatever we do. So the gold as gold will buy no more and no less than before. But by putting a new stamp on it we can make it in this country pay more debts, twice as many if the scheme works as planned.

So this is a proposal to cut in two the debts of the country, somewhere between $150,000,000,000 and $200,000,000,000 in amount. That means also cutting in two the buying power of all life-insurance policies, of which there are about 120,000,000 in the United States, nearly three-quarters of them industrial policies, carried mostly by wage earners. It means reducing by one-half the buying power of all the thrift deposits in the banks, with their 50,000,000 passbooks, of all pensions, of all allowances to veterans, of every fixed income. All along the line it means hitting everybody who has saved a dollar or to whom a dollar is owed.

Money is worth what money will buy. Halving its value, its buying power, means halving every dollar in your purse, your pocketbook, your cash drawer, your safe. At the beginning of this year the cash in circulation in this country amounted to $5,674,941,484, being $45.33 for every inhabitant (which, by the way, was almost a third more apiece than in the middle of 1914, just before the outbreak of the World War). Each family has now, on the average, about $200 in cash with which to do its trade or hold in reserve for later use. Could the Coughlin plan have instant and full effect it would cut the worth of that $200 by a half. Also, to the same extent it would cut the buying power of your salary or wage. Months, years later there might be readjustment, but the immediate effect of the Coughlin plan would be to your serious loss.

It would be the equivalent of our going off the gold standard. In England since September of 1931 that has resulted in cutting the pound sterling by about a third. Father Coughlin would go farther with cutting the dollar by a half. In England in these 15 months and more the result has been that prices have been raised but a trifle, foreign trade both export and import has fallen off, wages have been reduced, unemployment has increased. Last year the aggregate full-time wages of 2,275,000 working people whose rates of pay were listed fell about $1,200,000 a week. The number of idle workers registered in Great Britain and North Ireland was 220,000 more at the end of December than at the beginning of the year.

One reason for this result is that there has been in England no such inflation of cash as Father Coughlin's plan would bring about here.

Suppose his scheme to inflate cash should, as he hopes, raise prices to the benefit of the farmers who produce and the employers who manufacture. That might happen if after we had changed the inscription on a gold disk it proved necessary in order to do the cash work of the country for us to have 40 $1 bills instead of 20 as now to do the work of an ounce or so of gold. This would mean doubling the paper money of the country. We did that sort of thing in the Civil War period. It lifted the price level from 100 to 216.8 in five years, but it lifted money wages only from 100 to 143.1. Just as every time cash inflation has been tried, the wage earner suffered most.

This tinkering with the gold content of coins is an old device to transfer value from some persons to other persons. The ancients began it by covering cheap metal with a gold or silver veneer. "Core money" it is called. Herodotus tells us that when Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, had to make a big payment to the Lacedæmonians, he cheated them by giving them coins of lead covered with gold. A Macedonian king stuck coins of copper covered with silver when he was short of funds with which to pay his army in the war with the Chalcidians. At Athens in the very crisis of the Peloponnesian War the coinage was debased by core money, not a mere change of alloy.

In Rome the first use of this kind of depreciated currency—and, mind you, the effect is just the same however it is done—was the result of military disaster at the time of the war with Hannibal, after the Battle of Lake Trasimene. The Roman generals followed the example in the war against Hannibal in southern Italy. Under the Republic the Senate resorted to the swindle from time to time, issuing veneered coins. As a result of the great confusion this worked, one Gratidianus stopped the forced circulation of the core money and obliged the treasury to redeem the bad with good coins. This so delighted the public that they erected statues to him. Then along came Sulla, who said this was a dangerous act of democracy against the right of the State to alter money. So he caused the statues to be pulled down and Gratidianus to be put to death.

The situation became so bad that Cicero said no person could know what he actually possessed. Under the emperors it grew worse. The most extensive frauds were perpetrated. They continued until what was supposed to be good money had been so debased by alloys that the costly handiwork of veneering became not worth while. In our day Lenin is said to have declared that the best way to destroy the capitalist system is to debauch the currency. He may have recalled that debauching the currency went along with the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, and if not one of the causes was surely one of the symptoms.

Lowering the actual while keeping the nominal value by increasing the alloys was a recourse of European monarchs in the Middle Ages, when they were hard pressed for funds. In England a notable instance was the fraud of the last years of Henry VIII and the first of his successors.

Changing the content in the vain hope of balancing gold and silver coinage was a common practice. It is said that in France there were 150 such changes in one century. That sort of thing, however, was not necessarily such a cheat as is the debasing of coin, whether by veneers or by alloys.

Now we find deliberately proposed and strongly urged what is virtually the same idea, for stamping different numerals on a coin accomplishes the same result, if not in the same way. The purpose of the thing is to get cheap money, not worth what it purports to be worth, in order that some men may gain at the expense of others.

I am as anxious as anybody else that the terrible burden of debt brought about in three years by the rise in the buying power of gold, that is to say, by low prices, shall be lessened, indeed removed if it can be honorably done. But this is not the right way to do it, not the wise way, to say nothing of its being a dishonest way. It would throw the work of the country, its production, its distribution, in short, the business of the whole land, into confusion worse confounded. It would delay recovery by years. It would work harm in countless ways. All would suffer. None would make righteous gain.

To this, as to every other form of cash inflation, the voice of the people should give a stern "No." If there is to be any lawmaking at all, it should be with increasing not the volume of cash, but the volume and particularly the use of credit. If that can be done, it will be without swelling the tide of fear that now almost drowns us. Loss of confidence by all of us is the real source of our troubles. Let nothing be done to increase our fears, to make a bad matter worse. Let us not jump out of the frying pan into the fire.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 14643, Rept. No. 2001) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLADAY reserved all points of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14643, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and, pending that, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if we can not agree upon time for general debate?

Mr. HOLADAY. I suggest that the debate continue throughout the afternoon, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue through the afternoon, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Illinois and myself.

Mr. SNELL. I do not object, but I thought the understanding yesterday was that we would run along this afternoon, finish general debate, then read the first section of the bill, and adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate run through the day, to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. PRALL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to enter into a discussion of the details of this bill. I want to discuss some general phases of District affairs and insert in the RECORD some statements that I may not take the time of the House to read.

The terms of the present Commissioners of the District are drawing to a close. They will have served the District at the close of their terms for four years. I take this opportunity to express my appreciation of their services and my belief that the District of Columbia has profited by their services.

They have not been hampered by any outside influences, they have devoted their entire time to their official duties, and I believe that there has been progressively year by year during their terms improvement in the conduct of business affairs in the District.

I think it is also proper that I should mention Colonel Donovan, the auditor of the District, who has served the District for 42 years. He is intimately acquainted with the financial affairs of the District and has conducted them with the best methods of accounting, a model that might profitably be followed by a great many cities of the United States.

About a year ago there was a general reorganization of certain divisions of District affairs, and four new departments were created, the first of which was the division of highways under the control of Captain Whitehurst. He has been connected with the District for several years. Improvements that he has effected have resulted in the District's receiving, I believe, lower bids than any other city in the United States has been able to receive for the same class of work.

At the head of the division of sanitary engineering is Major Gordon, who has served in that capacity for some years and who has been carrying on the work of that division satisfactorily, and in addition has been planning for the future of Washington, I may say that one improvement of major importance, and one that will be of considerable expense and yet necessary, is the improvement and remodeling of the sewer system of the city. We have mains that were installed before the Civil War, and with the great increase in the size of the city the time is rapidly approaching when there must be an entire revamping of the sewer system of Washington, which necessarily will be an expensive proposition.

The third division created under this reorganization plan was that of inspection. All phases of inspection work are grouped in one department under Captain Oram and as a result of that regrouping and the efficient service of Captain Oram there has been an improvement in that service.

The fourth division of the reorganization was the division of construction. A new man, Harold Baker, was brought in from an outside city about a year ago. He was confronted with a very difficult situation. As long as I have been a member of the District subcommittee, the office of the municipal architect has not functioned satisfactorily. It has been the purpose of Mr. Baker to bring about an improvement in this office. I believe that he is improving the service, but there yet remains improvement which should be made.

About $10,000,000 is annually going into the public schools of the District of Columbia. I think there has also been an improvement in the school situation. A great many useless teachers, in the opinion of the committee at least, who were performing certain special duties have been assigned to the general teaching force, and while the number of teachers has increased and will continue to increase with the increasing population, I believe that we are having a more economical administration of school affairs. The building program has been going along satisfactorily, but we will need in the years to come not only additional buildings to take care of the natural increase in pupils but to replace buildings that should have been replaced some years ago.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. The gentleman mentions the building program. Does not the gentleman think that until the condition of the Treasury would warrant, it would be advisable to stop the building program in the District, provided we would not be penalizing some contract?

Mr. HOLADAY. That is a question of general policy, but I can not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I introduced such a bill yesterday, which would give to the President the authority to stop all building programs until this billion-dollar deficit in the Treasury could be wiped out; that is, leaving it to his discretion, so that the Government would not be penalized in any way.

Mr. HOLADAY. In this bill the reconstruction building items were cut $1,000,000, and at the same time we are proposing a half million dollars to feed the needy. It seems to me it would be a better business proposition to spend $1,000,000 for construction and give these men work than to spend half of that amount in the relief of the unemployed.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I notice an item in this bill that calls for an appropriation of a million dollars for the Planning Commission, if I remember correctly. If we have more public buildings under construction than we are able to pay for, and we do not have in mind the laying out of any additional plans, why could you not take this million dollars as provided in this legislation——

Mr. HOLADAY. If the gentleman will permit the interruption, I think the gentleman is wrong about that. I know of no such item. What the gentleman probably refers to is the million dollars which under the Cramton law is being paid back by the District as an annual payment on the $10,000,000 loan made by the United States Government to the District some three years ago.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. What I had in mind is found on page 72, for reimbursing the United States, and so forth, under the title of the Planning Commission, $1,000,000.

Mr. HOLADAY. That represents the third annual installment that the District is repaying to the Government on the $10,000,000 which it received from the Government under the Cramton law passed three years ago.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. In other words, we appropriated the money to the District, and then the District turns it back into the Treasury?

Mr. HOLADAY. We appropriated $10,000,000. That money has been spent, and under the terms of the Cramton Act the District pays it back at the rate of $1,000,000 a year. That is the payment of a debt.

Mr. Chairman, the police force of Washington, as well as the police force of every other city, is always a more or less troublesome item. When General Crosby became a member of this Board of Commissioners, he found a very unsatisfactory condition existing. He is gradually improving that condition, and in my opinion there is no city in the United States that has a police force that is more free of cliques or dishonesty than the Metropolitan police force of the city of Washington. I believe it is in better shape than it has been for a great many years.

In my opinion the future usefulness of the police force will not depend so much upon an increase of personnel, as it will upon the better training and the better equipment of about the same force that we have at the present time. Those remarks may also be applied to the fire department.

I now come to a subject I want to discuss in a little more detail, and that is the welfare department of the District and the emergency relief proposition. Last year for the first time in the history of District affairs we appropriated $350,000 for emergency relief. This year we were confronted with a request for a million and a quarter dollars, one-half of which has already been appropriated in the deficiency appropriation bill and the balance is carried in this bill. To develop this subject I want to go back a little bit into the general situation in Washington.

For some years we have had in this city a community chest, which operates along the same lines as community chests of other cities. In 1932 the Washington community chest collected $2,207,265.11. The community chest is the organization which collects this money. They then divide the money among 65 organizations in the city. The community chest of itself does not do any relief work. It simply collects the money and turns it over to the various relief organizations. It cost the community chest in 1932, in overhead expenses and administration, $124,879.39, or 5½ per cent of all the money that was collected in 1932. The community chest has 36 annual, year-round employees. One of these men draws $9,000 a year, another draws $5,400 a year, another $3,420, another $2,808, and the balance of the 32 draw lower salaries.

This money is collected by the community chest at a cost of 5½ per cent. Then it is turned over to the 65 agencies. The community chest divides those agencies into six different classifications. Those classified under "A" are those organizations that are, in large part, administering direct and material relief; that is, handing out food, clothing, providing housing, fuel, and so forth. The organization that receives a larger donation than any other of those "A" institutions from the community chest is the Associated Charities. In 1932 the Associated Charities dispensed $476,104 at a salary cost of $85,284. Their total operating expense was $101,060, or 21 per cent of the amount they received from the community chest. So that of the one-half million dollars spent by the Associated Charities, 21 per cent, plus 5½ per cent taken out by the community chest, went for overhead expenses. The Associated Charities has 61 employees with a top salary of $5,670.

Another organization classed as "A" is the Bureau of Rehabilitation. It cost them to operate 69 per cent of all the money they received from the community chest. They have three employees with a top salary of $3,600.

The Travelers Aid Society is another in "A" classification. They have 14 employees with a top salary of $4,000. They spent for salaries and administration 51 per cent of all the money they received from the community chest.

Another class "A" organization is the American Legion. They spent 16 per cent of their funds for salaries. That is, for salaries, and as near as I could ascertain, about 3 per cent additional should be charged up for administration purposes, outside of salaries.

The Catholic Charities operated at a 20 per cent salary cost.

The Disabled American Veterans operated at a 55 per cent salary cost.

The committee on unemployment at a 12½ per cent salary cost.

Then we come to some other organizations. The reason I am taking your time to call these facts to your attention is because the people operating these various private agencies say that their salaries are not equal to the salaries paid for like services in other cities. In other words, they are not using as much of the money for salaries and administration as is used in other cities. If their statements are correct, then it is a matter of general interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] has expired.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

There is an organization known as the Washington Institute for Mental Hygiene. They are paying out 90 per cent of all the money they receive for salaries. It has one employee at $9,000 a year, one at $3,300, two at $2,700.

From the literature of this society its main work seems to be a study of the problems of childhood, such as eating, thumb sucking, temper tantrums, bed wetting, pulling ears, night terrors, overactivity, lack of confidence, running away from home, an unhealthy attitude toward school, and other undesirable childhood traits.

This organization reports that for a salary expenditure of $23,520 they studied, in 1932, 381 children. Whatever number of those 381 children studied in 1932 may have been afflicted with the thumb-sucking habit, it is probable most of that number will have outgrown the habit by the end of the present calendar year. If the $9,000 man can invent a preventive for the age-old habit of babies sucking their thumbs, he will have contributed in no small degree to the peace of mind of the future American motherhood.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I wonder if the gentleman has given any consideration to the expenditure made in the Interior Department with reference to finding out which can jump the farthest and the highest, the flea or the bullfrog? I notice there has been considerable in the press recently with reference to that investigation.

Mr. HOLADAY. There are very many important investigations going on, not only in the District of Columbia but throughout all the Government organizations, and it may be the one the gentleman refers to is an important one.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman will remember noting in the press a few days ago that the Secretary of the Interior had a letter from a constituent in California who desired this information, and after several days' investigation by experts, they finally decided that the bullfrog could jump 3 feet on marshy land, but if he had good solid backing he could jump 6 feet.

Mr. HOLADAY. Well, that is interesting, whether it is profitable or not, or whether it is true.

Now, there are some more of these organizations that are classified as character building.

For all I know they may be the best organizations of the kind in the country; I do not know anything about that. The thing I am pointing out is the amount of money paid out for salaries. Following this I want to develop the effect it has on the pending bill.

There is a neighborhood house that expends 62 per cent of its appropriations for salaries, and the following organizations spend for salaries the amounts indicated:

The Girl Scouts, 50 per cent.

Northeast Boys' Club, 100 per cent.

Boy Scouts, 56 per cent.

Boys' Club, 63 per cent.

All through these we find top salaries of $2,700; $4,950; $3,217, and so forth.

Here is the Social Hygiene Society: They spend 100 per cent of their funds for salaries. While I do not have the exact information, as near as I can ascertain the facts, the secretary of this organization is drawing $6,000 a year.

The Washington Animal Rescue League: With an appropriation from the community chest of $4,599.89 they are spending $4,549 for salaries. Their purpose is to locate the owners of lost dogs and try to provide good homes which are carefully investigated for animals that are suitable for placing in homes.

Here is the Washington Council of Social Research, doing no material aid, but aiding by research, spend 78 per cent of its funds for salaries, and in addition to that has to pay for office rent and general overhead. This is what they say in their literature:

> The function of the council is to study the social needs of the community and to provide for the fulfillment of those needs through intelligent social planning. Our total budget, therefore, is 78 per cent salaries, as we give no relief and our work is only of an administrative character.

Now I come to the last one I shall mention, the Social Service Division. They are expending 76 per cent of their appropriation for salaries.

Remember, all these percentages are in addition to the 5½ per cent taken out by the community chest proper.

Here is the statement of the Social Service Division, the statement of their own secretary in reporting to the organization what it had been doing:

> It was this committee that initiated the request last summer for the sum of $600,000 for public relief and worked for its enactment; also worked for the more recent appropriation of $1,250,000. The secretary organizes groups to appear before Congress in favor of social legislation.

For that they are spending 76 per cent of all the money they collect.

What is the future to be?

Up until last year there was no particular trouble here in the city of Washington. Government business was running along. There had been no reductions in pay and but few people had been cut off the pay roll, so the community chest was able to collect enough funds to spread out to these bodies and enable them to maintain their organizations. When times became harder and there was a demand and need for more funds, these people who were drawing salaries of $9,000, $6,000, $5,000, $4,000, and on down were the ones who came before the committee and demanded that public funds be expended to take care of the needy and hungry.

If this condition exists throughout the United States, as these high-priced professional charity workers claim it does, then it is a matter to which the Members should give serious thought. One of two things must happen: Either public funds must be appropriated or these high-priced workers must have their salaries reduced. Naturally they say, "We must have public funds."

I think the people of the District of Columbia who donate to these organizations are entitled to know just how the money is being spent. It is private funds. If it is satisfactory to them, it is satisfactory to me; and, again, I say that so far as I know all these organizations are spending the money for the general purposes for which it is supposed to be expended except a large percentage is being expended for high-priced salaries.

I have a statement with reference to the Municipal Center.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

THE MUNICIPAL CENTER

It is a matter of knowledge, of course, that the District government is being required to vacate the present District Building because of the Federal building program in the so-called Triangle. The commissioners were notified a few years ago that this development would take in the District Building, and they thereupon started to take such action as they deemed necessary for the purpose of protecting the municipal government's interests, particularly with respect to the finding of some other site on which buildings could be erected to house the municipal organizations.

Originally, the commissioners asked that they be permitted to continue in the present District Building and to acquire the square immediately to the south to provide additional office space. Such an arrangement was in conflict with the Federal building program, and the commissioners, therefore, had to drop it. The commissioners then endeavored to obtain authority to acquire the property owned by the Southern Railway, immediately east of the District Building. That arrangement was also found to be in conflict with the Federal building program, so that the commissioners were compelled to find some other site in some other part of the city where new buildings for the municipal government could be erected.

The commissioners finally decided that the two blocks, squares 490 and 533, bounded by Third Street on the east, Sixth Street on the west, C Street on the north, would provide sufficient ground on which to erect the new buildings. The commissioners thereupon prepared a bill and submitted it to the Budget Bureau proposing the acquisition of these two blocks. It was provided by this legislative bill that the two squares should be acquired and that the cost of acquiring the land and the cost of constructing the buildings should be paid 50 per cent by the government of the District of Columbia and 50 per cent by the United States. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget notified the commissioners that the proposed legislation would not be in conflict with the financial program of the President if section 2 of the bill were amended so as to eliminate the provision of the 50 per cent payment by the United States and the District, and a new section 2 substituted therefor under which the cost of acquiring the land and erecting the buildings would be paid by the District of Columbia in like manner as other appropriations, without any direct participation by the United States other than that represented by the lump-sum contribution of $9,000,000.

The commissioners, in submitting their report to the Budget Bureau on the bill referred to, and later in reporting on the bill (which had been introduced in Congress) to the House and Senate legislative committees on the District of Columbia, stated that the assessed value of the property was $1,603,363, and that the estimated cost of acquiring the land, on the basis of 50 per cent over the assessed valuation, was $2,405,045.

The commissioners further stated that when these two squares should be acquired they proposed to erect a building on square 490, west of John Marshall Place and fronting on Louisiana Avenue, to house the recorder of deeds, the police court, the juvenile court, and the municipal court, the building for this purpose to contain approximately 460,000 square feet and to cost $4,700,000. On square 533, east of John Marshall Place and fronting on Indiana Avenue, the commissioners proposed to construct a general administration building for the District Government to contain approximately 485,000 square feet at an estimated cost of $5,000,000.

Therefore under the plan and according to the draft of the bill prepared by the commissioners and approved by the Budget Bureau, and transmitted to and introduced in Congress, it was contemplated that only the two squares in question should be acquired as a site for the municipal center, and that the total cost on this basis would have been slightly over $12,000,000. The District could very easily have financed a new municipal center on this plan practically without using any of the current revenues. In other words, the District's accumulation of surplus revenues, amounting to $6,500,000 plus approximately $5,000,000 as the purchase price to be paid by the United States for the present District Building, making a total of $11,500,000, would be applied toward the cost of the municipal center as proposed by the commissioners, namely, $12,105,000, leaving only about $600,000 to be taken from current revenues.

The arrangement proposed by the commissioners, however, was not satisfactory to Congress, and Congress assumed the responsibility of modifying the bill submitted by the commissioners so as to require the District to purchase the four blocks between Third and Sixth Streets and Pennsylvania Avenue and the courthouse as a site for the municipal center, the commissioners to erect thereon buildings of a monumental character that would conform architecturally with the Federal development on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue. The scheme required to be followed by the commissioners, as the result of congressional action imposed upon the District, a far more expensive project than the one the commissioners had recommended. As against the commissioners' project, estimated to cost $12,000,000, the project required as the result of legislation by Congress will cost about $22,000,000.

By joint resolution approved June 15, 1929, $3,000,000 was appropriated toward the purchase of this site. The 1931 District of Columbia appropriation act appropriated a further sum of $3,000,000 for the similar purpose. The additional amount required to complete the purchase of the site was carried in the 1933 District appropriation bill. The entire site has been purchased with the exception of some small parcels costing less than $100,000. The money to complete the purchase of the entire site has been appropriated and is now available.

The construction of the first unit of the municipal center contemplated the use by the District of Columbia of approximately $5,000,000 to be paid to the District by the United States for the present District Building at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue NW. It was believed that the Secretary of the Treasury, under existing law, had ample authority and that funds were available to effectuate the transfer of title to the United States for the District Building. It develops, however, as a result of conferences of the commissioners with Treasury officials, that certain matters relating to the purchase by the United States of the District Building must be settled by Congress before the transfer of the property can take place. One of these matters has to do with the question of whether the District of Columbia shall be entitled to receive and use for its own purposes the entire value of the District Building. The view of the Treasury officials is that the United States, by reason of participation in appropriations for the purchase of the site and the erection of the present District Building to the extent of 50 per cent of the cost, might be entitled to an equity of that amount in the purchase of the District Building, leaving only about $2,500,000 that the District would actually receive from the United States. In addition to this, there also arises the question as to whether the District would be permitted, should the United States purchase the District Building, to continue in occupancy thereof until such time as quarters were available in the municipal center without the payment of rental.

It must be clear that the District is unable, without grave injury to other District needs, to carry on the municipal center project out of current revenues. The first unit could be completed without difficulty, provided the District could obtain the purchase price of about $5,000,000 for the present District Building. As the matter now stands, the second unit and the several other items would have to be financed entirely out of current revenues. It has been stated that the Secretary of the Treasury will not purchase the present District Building and place the money to the credit of the District until further legislation is obtained from Congress, which would authorize the District to have the benefit of the entire purchase price of the building and to continue to use the present District Building without rental until such time as the new building in the municipal center would be available for occupation. There appears to be no question as to the legal right of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the District Building, but there is doubt as to whether the District should receive any greater amount than one-half of the purchase price of the building, and also doubt as to the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the District to occupy the District Building without payment of rent.

In order to carry out the general beautification plan of the Capital, Congress has, by authorizing the purchase of additional land and the expansion of the building plans, made necessary total appropriations for the municipal center, that are approximately double the amount necessary to provide a municipal center entirely adequate to supply the needs of the municipal government. This additional expenditure is entirely the creature of Congress and was authorized by Congress in spite of the recommendation of the District Commissioners to the contrary.

I believe necessary legislation should be promptly enacted to authorize the purchase by the Government of the present District Building, at a price of approximately $5,000,000, and that the District government should be permitted to occupy this building rent free until the new municipal building is ready for occupancy.

Mr. HOLADAY. It will be remembered that a year or so ago an investigation was made by the committee with reference to the number of hours that the judges of the various courts were putting in holding court. At that time it was found that the dockets were very much behind. Perhaps as a result of that investigation the judges changed the system to some extent and devoted more time to the hearing of cases, and the condition of the dockets of our courts are in much better shape. The criminal docket is current and some of the other dockets that were 2 or 3 years behind are now only about 18 months behind, and year by year improvement is being made.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish again to refer to this subject of appropriation of public funds for the relief of the needy. The same organization that takes credit for the passage of the $350,000 last year and the $1,250,000 this year are now backing a proposition to give the District the authority to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They are the ones who are appearing before the committee. From a moral standpoint I believe the District of Columbia should have the same right to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as has any State; but from the standpoint of the taxpayers of the District I do not believe it is wise that they have that right, because if it is granted, these same lobbyists and every other organization or person that has some particular thing in mind for which public funds are wanted, will be exerting pressure on the District Commissioners, whoever they may be, to take advantage of the right and borrow the money. It must be remembered that when the money is borrowed, it must, ere long, be paid back, and that the money for the repayment of these loans will be collected through taxes levied on the residents of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the privilege of general debate, I wish to call the attention of the House to a governmental practice which I think should be stopped. It is one of those practices, altogether too numerous, which seems on the surface to conform to public uses but which in their major bearing serve private and group interests at a heavy cost to the American taxpayers.

I refer to a practice which has grown up and has now attained indefensible proportions whereby various bureaus and agencies of the Government republish in varied forms to serve special groups and interests the statistics of the United States census which have already been collected and published at enormous cost to the American taxpayers by the Census Bureau.

Every one of these bureau publications which is based on the United States census reports contains statistical information that already has been published by one branch of government, namely, the Census Bureau. The subsequent publications by other bureaus than the Census Bureau present the census figures in more convenient compilations, in more handy form to serve special groups and interests.

My contention, which I believe is a perfectly righteous one, is that these groups and interests should make their own compilations and their own deductions from the United States census reports, which are always open and available to them, and should not expect these extra tables and deductions to be prepared for them by Government-paid employees and delivered to them on a silver platter, as it were, in handy volumes from the presses of the Government Printing Office, all at the expense of the taxpayers of this country.

This practice, it seems to me, illustrates as aptly and pertinently as any similar practice I can recall how far our Federal Government has gone astray in trying to be ultrapaternalistic and to put itself in the position of George in the famous phrase, "Let George do it." Of course, if private associations and interests can induce Uncle Sam to prepare interpretative publications and statistical compilations for their special benefit and save them that expense they would hardly be human if they did not accept his kind offices.

But all of these interests, associations, combinations, and groups have access to the common reservoir of information, namely, the reports of the United States Census Bureau, and if they want special tables, special arrangements of statistics, special analyses and deductions to suit their special purposes, they should pay for these themselves and not expect the taxpayers to pay for them.

The 1930 census of the United States cost the taxpayers the enormous sum of $39,407,580. It is embraced in 40 large volumes, which are accessible in many places, including nearly every library of any size in the country. To superimpose upon this cost the extra and duplicated cost of printing at public expense statistical volumes containing census information in rearranged form to suit groups that ask for it and thus relieve them of the expense of making such publications is to my mind unthinkable.

I do not like to criticize. I would much rather praise. Least of all do I like to criticize the head of a bureau who is full of zeal in the discharge of his office and who has many fine, worth-while achievements to his credit, but as an example of the duplicated publications to which I refer, I can not refrain from drawing attention to a book of 1,070 pages called Manufacturing Market Statistics, issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce furnishes an illuminating illustration of typical bureaucratic growth. That bureau is hardly 20 years old. It had the usual small and humble start. In 1914 its total appropriation was only $174,860. For the fiscal year 1932 Congress gave that bureau $5,334,122, or more than thirty times the amount appropriated for its activities 19 years ago. It is just one more instance showing how the rolling snowball grows.

That bureau recently took the census reports and made up a volume entitled "Manufacturing Market Statistics," of which 2,943 copies have been printed at public expense at a cost of $16,057.19. This was done, of course, in the utmost good faith and in order to be of service to certain manufacturers.

Away somewhere in the background is a theory that enough copies of this book will be sold to reimburse the Government for its cost, but how many do you suppose have been sold? Exactly 771. Curious to know how the sale was progressing, I inquired of the Public Printer, and I have his reply, which follows:

MY DEAR MR. LUDLOW: Receipt is acknowledged of your inquiry of January 23, 1933, addressed to the Superintendent of Documents, regarding the publication entitled "Manufacturing Market Statistics," issued by the Department of Commerce. The information you ask is as follows:

| | Copies | Cost |
|---|---|---|
| Department of Commerce | 1,000 | $14,898.66 |
| International exchanges | 70 | 37.10 |
| Superintendent of Documents: | | |
| For sale | 1,481 | 925.37 |
| For depository libraries | 392 | 196.06 |
| Total | 2,943 | 16,057.19 |

The sales copies ordered by the Superintendent of Documents were delivered to him about 30 days ago at a cost of $0.624 a copy, and to date he has sold 771 copies at $1 a copy, a total revenue of $771.

Respectfully,

GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer.

If one wishes to be facetious he might say that the sales leave the Government to pay only $15,286.19 of this bill of $16,057.19. The unpaid balance may be reduced a bit by dribbling future sales.

While I know that publication was issued with the best of intentions and with a genuine desire to be helpful, I do not think it should have been issued. I think this Congress should establish the policy, if the bureaus do not, that whenever special groups or committees representing particular industries want this sort of specialized information compiled from the census reports and published they should compile and publish it at their own expense.

When William M. Steuart, the Director of the Census, was before Judge OLIVER'S subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, the one dealing with appropriations for the Department of Commerce, on December 8 last, he was asked by Mr. OLIVER:

Does not this publication—Manufacturing Market Statistics—represent a duplicate publication of the same facts by you?

His reply was:

Yes; the statistics of manufactures are those that have been reported, compiled, and published by the Bureau of the Census, and I imagine the same is true of a great deal of the statistical information contained in this volume; that is true of a great many Government publications.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has broad enough a field for its useful activities and for the exercise of the talents of its splendid chief without issuing publications revamping census statistics and thus duplicating costs. The same may be said of bureaus of the Department of Agriculture which are constantly reproducing census statistics in various publications.

I can not close these remarks without paying a compliment to Mr. Steuart, Director of the Census, for the firmness he has displayed in resisting the pressure of special interests which are constantly seeking to inveigle him into promises to print at Government expense census publications for their special uses. It is a common custom for the heads of industries to survey the census possibilities and to decide that if the Director of the Census could be induced to compile from the census schedules certain information in pamphlet form it would be greatly to their benefit. Usually a committee is appointed to wait on the Director of the Census and present the suggestion to him and represent it to him in the light of a public duty. His reply usually is that his public duty is exactly the opposite, namely, to refrain from doing what is asked, but when he puts thumbs down on the proposal he does so with the courteous invitation to the committee to make the publication at their own expense, which invariably causes the committee to retire in confusion.

Not long ago a company that does outdoor advertising had the rare nerve to ask Director Steuart to prepare and have printed as a Government publication a volume embracing information about every city and county in the United States, the information desired being of a kind that would help that company in its advertising activities. The veteran director stiffened up until he looked like old Andy Jackson must have looked in his sternest moments.

"If you want that kind of a publication, get it out yourself," he said.

Up to date it has not appeared in print.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, there is going to be a determined effort on Monday to bring before the House legislation dealing with the subject of depreciating currency and the effect that imports from countries with depreciated currency are having on our domestic markets at the present time.

As far as I am concerned, in regard to this individual piece of legislation, known as the Crowther bill, from the consideration of which the Ways and Means Committee is sought to be discharged, I am not especially interested. I am interested in getting the subject before the House of Representatives for consideration, and the only way we can reach it is to discharge the committee and bring it up, and then it will be considered under the general rules of the House, each Member having the right to express his views and to discuss and amend the bill as he may see fit.

To me there is nothing partisan in this matter. The whole question is simply whether we are going to make effective the laws that are on the statute books at the present time, whether we are going to continue to adhere to the policies to which we have always adhered, the right of our people to make their own domestic policies; and at this time this matter pertains particularly to the question of protection and also to our immigration policy.

If we continue to go along under present conditions and the various nations of the world continue to depreciate their currency even more than it is depreciated at the present time, the practical result is that the average import is paying very little to come into this market and receive the benefits of this market, and instead of our making our own domestic policy at the present time it is being made by countries with depreciated currencies, and will continue to be made by them as long as we remain silent and inactive.

You will remember that when the nations of the world began going off the gold standard the few remaining nations, outside of the United States, that were on the gold standard immediately, by executive order, put into effect an executive proclamation that absolutely met the question of depreciated currencies in the countries from which imports came, and thereby maintained and made effective such tariff laws as they had at that time.

We are the only country that has not met that issue up to the present time, and the people of the country as a whole, in my judgment, are beginning to appreciate the fact that something has happened to our home markets and are calling upon Congress to do something to make our present protection policy effective.

If you remember, during the debate last winter on the tariff, when some one interrogated the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] as to why he had not suggested legislation to reduce particular tariff rates in the Hawley-Smoot bill, Mr. RAINEY replied that they had not brought anything out along this line because he knew the Republicans would not pass it, and the Democrats did not dare pass it. He said also that they did not want, under present conditions, to have our markets further flooded with cheaply made foreign goods. The Republicans of the House are seeking now to legislate to make that statement actually effective.

As I look at the situation, if we continue to allow these countries with their depreciated currencies to bring these goods into this country without any action on our part, we are going against the statement made by the distinguished majority leader and against the prevailing opinion that has existed in this country for a long time that we did want, especially under present conditions in the United States, some reasonable protection which we are not getting under present conditions.

I appreciate that there are certain men in this House that do not care to go as far along this line as I do; but the policy of protection, I believe, is firmly fixed in this country, and I do not believe we ought to have it wiped out entirely by the action of foreign countries in continually depreciating their currency, and I maintain they are doing it deliberately for this purpose. As definite proof of this I refer to a statement reputed to have been made at the time by the Chancellor of England, when he said, "Now that we have depreciated our currency we can successfully compete in the foreign markets of the world."

The facts are clear: This Congress, by the tariff act of 1930, regulated commerce in imports and determined the conditions of their admission to the American market in an endeavor to secure necessary revenue and protect the employment opportunities and living standards of American wage earners. Since then 60 nations have depreciated their currency. These represent countries conducting 45 per cent by value of the international trade of the world. They are substantially the source of 60 per cent by value of the imports of the United States during 1932. It is authoritatively reported that at least 232 commodities came into this country in increased quantities in 1932 over 1931, and of these at least 157 were substantially competitive. Now, ad valorem duties are predicated upon the currency of the country of export. If a customs duty of 10 per cent were assessed against a commodity valued at a pound, it was in contemplation of a value of $4.86 for that article. If predicated on a yen, it had in mind a yen worth $0.4985. But the pound is quoted to-day at $3.42⅝ and the yen at $0.2125. One has depreciated 30 per cent and the latter nearly 60 per cent.

We, therefore, suffer a loss of revenue equal to the difference between the standard and depreciated value of all currencies, of which the two to which I have referred are merely an illustration. This result is not our act, but that of the countries of depreciation. The effect is that by accident or design such countries determine for us the amount of customs duties we shall collect and the price of admission to this market. They substitute their regulation of commerce for ours.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. From what date?

Mr. SNELL. During the year 1932. These are figures of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. A number of countries had depreciated their currency prior to 1932.

Mr. SNELL. That is true, but these figures just referred to include all countries with depreciated currencies for the year 1932.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman does not attempt to set out what countries depreciated their currencies in 1930, 1931, and so on?

Mr. SNELL. No; these are the actual imports coming to this country in 1932.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman in some part of his remarks refer to the fact that imports of cream have increased 200 per cent?

Mr. SNELL. I shall come to that later, because that affects my own district and I am very much interested in it.

If a customs duty of 10 per cent were assessed against a commodity valued against the pound, it was contemplated at that time that the pound was $4.86; and if the pound has been reduced to $3.345, which is the last quotation, and the same thing with regard to the yen, which was practically 50 cents and has been reduced to its present value of about 20 cents, real, definite protection from these countries is practically wiped out.

To show to what extent some countries are going, I have here facsimile copies of the Trans-Pacific. The one I have before me is dated Tokyo, Thursday, December 1, 1932. In large type on the first page it is stated:

> Japanese export trade entering biggest boom since hysterical days of the World War activity. Decline of yen, coupled with failure of domestic purchasing power to increase prices and wages at home responsible for expanding markets in overseas countries. In almost any line now we are able to compete.

In the first paragraph it is said:

> Japan's export trade is booming as never since the World War. The full force of the decline of the yen is commencing to be felt. Importers in foreign lands are becoming convinced of the advantage of carrying Japanese lines and are rushing to get Japanese connections. This is the golden age of the Japanese exporter and the golden age of importers who deal with them.

In an open letter to the world's importers carried in this paper of the same date, the first paragraph reads as follows:

> GENTLEMEN: Since December of 1931, when circumstances forced the Japanese Empire to suspend operations of the gold standard, the yen has fallen from its par of $0.4987 to its present level. At the same time prices at home have risen comparatively little. Between November 15, 1931, and November 15, 1932, the retail-price index number rose but 8.76 per cent, because the purchasing power of the yen at home has been kept high by the failure of domestic competition to raise Japanese prices in the export market remain low.

As I said before, this is the oldest foreign-language weekly, and the only English-language export journal published in Japan.

This goes to show that our competitors there are taking extreme advantage of the fact that their currency at the present time has depreciated about 60 per cent, and the whole question seems to me to be whether we are going to allow them to continue to take this advantage and export their commodities to this country and undersell our own people, and take away a market that rightfully belongs to our home people.

We want to correct that situation, and it can be done by meeting the situation that has arisen by reason of the great depreciation of their currency.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is it not a fact that at the present time or during the last year our exports to Japan have exceeded our imports from Japan?

Mr. SNELL. Not according to the statement I had from the Department of Commerce, and regardless of that fact it does not affect the situation I am aiming to correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The latest statistics I have, which I think are reliable, show there is a balance of trade in our favor.

Mr. SNELL. I would be pleased to have the gentleman put those figures in the RECORD.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will be delighted to do so.

Mr. SNELL. As far as I can learn in regard to exports to any of the foreign countries, they buy of us such goods as they can buy more advantageously than they can from any other country, and no one will pay us one cent more than what they can buy for at other markets, regardless of what our domestic policy is.

The imports to the United States declined 16 per cent in 1932, but the volume of domestic production declined 21 per cent over the preceding year. Imports from the countries with depreciated currencies like Japan were less in value, but have increased in quantity. For example, the yen having declined nearly 60 per cent and the value of imports only 15 per cent, this would show there was an increasing number of articles coming in from Japan.

I am specially interested in this proposition from a local standpoint. The two real industries in northern New York are the dairy and the paper industry. These are really our meal ticket, and on account of depreciated currency the increased imports of these products has had a very disastrous effect.

When we passed the tariff act of 1930, increasing the tariff on all dairy products, we practically eliminated any competition from across the border in Canada, and the entire market was to remain for local producers, but on account of the 13 to 15 per cent depreciation this competition has again started up in very large quantities. And in discussing this subject, I wish to specially confine my remarks to the effect of this depreciation upon these industries of northern New York with which I am familiar. I will not dwell upon what you have already been told of the loss to the national revenue of $100,000,000 in a year from lowered customs receipts, due to the reduced values of merchandise imported from those nations which have abandoned the gold standard. Neither shall I dwell upon the statements that the number of American unemployed workmen totals over 1,000,000 persons, resulting from this foreign competition alone, or the amount of money that would be available to our people should this number of unemployed be permitted to earn an income, instead of being dependent on the charity of the more fortunate.

Northern New York is one of America's greatest dairy regions. Northern New York is one of America's most important paper and pulp producing sections. Both of these industries have been hard hit—brought face to face with utter ruin—by competition from nations whose depreciation of currency has made it possible for them to ship their dairy, pulp, and paper products into our markets at prices which we can not meet without violent reductions in wages of employees or bankruptcy of once prosperous companies.

Let us consider the dairy industry. New York is famous for its cheese, yet while our prices have dropped heavily the importation of one kind only of cheese from Finland has increased 136.3 per cent since so many European nations abandoned the gold standard for their currency. Despite the protective duty provided by the tariff act of 1930 on agricultural products, imports of cream from Canada have increased 200 per cent since Canada depreciated its currency. Imports of dried milk have increased 125 per cent. All of these increased importations have been at the expense of the northern New York dairy farmer, to say nothing of the same effect that has resulted upon the dairymen of the great western dairying States.

The protection given the dairy farmer by the tariff act of 1930 has been seriously reduced by the competition possible from countries whose depreciated currencies make it possible for them to pay the required duties, and yet undersell the American farmer.

I have referred to the importance of the paper industry to the part of New York State which I have the honor to represent. New York has been one of the most important of the pulp and paper producing States. Yet to-day in northern New York, where the pulp and paper mills are located within easy reach of the pulpwood forests, where many companies have been reforesting their own lands in order to provide wood as a raw material for their mills, we find pulp and paper mills buying imported pulp at lower prices than it costs to produce the pulp in their own mills, using pulpwood that they have spent years in protecting and growing. It is conservatively estimated that the value of New York State's forests has been reduced by over 60 per cent since the depreciation of foreign currency. This is reflected in tax delinquencies and in unemployment of forest workers.

Here is another phase of the farm problem: Our northern New York farmers, who in the past have augmented their farm-crop incomes by selling pulpwood or by woods work, are to-day crushed by the low pulpwood prices caused by depreciated currency competition. Pulpwood which sold for from $18 to $20 per cord in 1930 to-day brings but $8. This decrease must be in the returns to labor, for pulpwood cutting is practically all a labor proposition. Similar conditions have been reported to me from people in the South, the Lake States, and the West.

The depression of business has caused a reduction in the consumption of paper, yet while domestic production of unbleached sulphite pulp has decreased 19 per cent the imports of Scandinavian pulp has decreased only 12½ per cent. In other words, in these times of depression, when American mills wish to use American raw material, the foreign mills have taken over a part of the market which the domestic mills have lost. In bleached sulphite the situation is even more serious, for here the domestic mills produced for their own use 18.6 per cent less in 1932 than in 1931 and produced 39 per cent less for sale the imports of Scandinavian pulp of this grade have increased 32.7 per cent, and this, be it remembered, at a time when domestic paper mills, with reduced markets, have been using less pulp than in normal times.

The situation as to sulphate pulp, usually known as kraft, is essentially the same. While domestic production has declined over 10 per cent, the imports of kraft pulp in 1932 were actually greater than ever before in the past.

If this tendency continues, as it will unless measures are taken to stop this seizure of the American market, all of the American industry will be at the mercy of the foreigners. With our plants abandoned, the foreigners can fix their own prices for what is to the paper industry its essential raw material.

That this is not an idle theory is shown by the fact that European cartels are already formed and operating, and they have curtailed European production of some grades of pulps 30 per cent in order to keep prices up, but at the same time below the cost of American production. Our own antitrust laws prevent business operations of this kind, but our paper mills are at the mercy of trusts which no American laws can control.

The effect of the depreciation of foreign currency upon the paper industry demands the studious attention of all who wish to prevent disaster to an industry which has produced paper to a value of a billion dollars a year.

Book paper from Finland of a grade which formerly sold, under the gold standard at $3.75 per hundred pounds, is now quoted at about $2, this being due to the heavy depreciation of the Finnish currency. This paper is the equivalent in quality of American paper sold at $3.75. With the present duty this Finnish paper can be delivered duty paid at Atlantic coast ports at less than $2.75. In other words, this grade of paper, instead of having protection against the foreign product, is actually being sold only in the face of a premium, instead of a duty, on the imported paper.

Wrapping paper offers a similar picture. Here we have Finnish paper sold delivered, duty paid, in the United States at $53 per ton, and this, remember, includes freights and the importer's profit. Domestic paper of this grade can not be produced for less than $74, and to meet the foreign prices means the operation of the American mills at a heavy loss with the sole alternative the radical reduction of wages to American workmen. When we consider this difference in prices—due entirely to the depreciation of the foreign currency—and remember that a reduction of $5 per ton in such paper would be considered spectacular, you can appreciate what a $21 cut in price by foreign mills means to a branch of the American industry whose product has been valued at $1,000,000 per year for this single grade alone.

A condensed picture of the situation is shown by the following table, which shows how prices of paper from the various countries have fallen since they abandoned the gold standard:

| | Price per pound | | Percentage of decrease |
|---|---|---|---|
| | 1931 | 1932 | |
| | Cents | Cents | |
| Finland: | | | |
| Book paper | 2.5 | 2.3 | 8.0 |
| Tissue, lightweight | 67.8 | 44.3 | 34.7 |
| Tissue, heavy | 37.4 | 30.6 | 18.2 |
| Pulpboard | 2.2 | 1.3 | 40.9 |
| Newsprint | 2.2 | 1.8 | 18.2 |
| Sweden: | | | |
| Sulphite wrapping | 4.0 | 2.5 | 37.5 |
| Newsprint | 2.3 | 2.0 | 13.1 |
| Norway: Newsprint | 3.0 | 1.9 | 36.7 |
| Japan: Tissue, light | 92.5 | 56.4 | 39.0 |
| United Kingdom: | | | |
| Tissue, light | 52.5 | 39.6 | 24.6 |
| Tissue, heavy | 49.9 | 37.1 | 25.7 |
| Canada: | | | |
| Pulpboard | 2.2 | 1.7 | 22.7 |
| Newsprint (average January to August) | 2.8 | 2.5 | 10.7 |

I could go through the entire paper industry, with its scores of grades of paper giving similar instances of the effect of foreign competition upon each from each of the foreign paper-making countries which have abandoned the gold standard. These, however, are merely typical examples.

To-day, when certain paper is supposed to be protected by duties, supposed to be adequate to give the American manufacturer an equal chance with the foreigner in his own American market, the foreigners are shipping paper under conditions where they receive a premium over their home prices, instead of being hampered by adverse duties. Finnish wrapping paper is dutiable at 30 per cent, its currency is off, roughly, 40 per cent, so the Finnish mill has a premium of approximately 10 per cent, even after paying duty, over the American mill. In book paper his premium is about 20 per cent. In fact, to-day we have no tariff protection on paper.

Some months ago it was the theory that with the depreciation of currency foreign prices would rise, and thus automatically balance the situation. This has not proved a fact, but the reverse has actually occurred in some industries.

With such conditions, the American paper mills must be given relief against the competition of the depreciated currency countries, whether they produce pulp or paper, if you want to continue the industry in this country.

I do not overlook the fact that other industries, especially the iron industry, are suffering from the same conditions, and many of them in even a greater degree, but in discussing the necessity of action to save American industry from this daily mounting injury I have to a large degree confined my remarks to the two industries with which I am familiar, whose preservation is vital to the prosperity of the northern counties of my own State.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. KNUTSON. During the first eight months of 1932, imports of fish in airtight containers from Canada increased 4,700 per cent, according to the figures of the department.

Mr. DOUGHTON. How large were the total imports? Perhaps, the gentleman is like the man who talked about the population of his town having increased 500 per cent, stating that 12 months ago they had a population of 5, but at the end of the year they had a population of 25, or an increase of 500 per cent.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the old problem of the man putting one penny on the first checker square and two on the second checker square and so on, and when you get to the sixty-fourth square there would not be enough money to cover it.

Mr. HART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. HART. If the depreciation of the yen in Japan has not disturbed their domestic situation and has enabled them to seize the export trade of the world, does not the gentleman conclude that we had better depreciate our currency, if this will permit us to do the same thing?

Mr. SNELL. I can not agree with the gentleman on that proposition; that is too complicated to consider in this discussion. I am not in favor of trying to beat Japan by depreciating our currency to the same extent that they have done. We have always been a sound-money country and propose to keep it so.

Mr. RAGON. The statement of the gentleman from Minnesota touched a vital point. I suggest to my friend that that was one of the very points suggested by the chairman of the Tariff Commission, Mr. O'Brien, and he is one of the greatest protectionists in this country.

Mr. SNELL. I should doubt that; at the present time I can not agree to it.

Mr. RAGON. There is one thing I can say, that he has that reputation and he belongs to the gentleman's party.

Mr. SNELL. In the light of his present statements I would put a question mark after that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAGON. If he had not had the respect of your President he would not have appointed him chairman.

Mr. SNELL. I agree to that.

Mr. RAGON. His statement was that if it is a good thing for Japan to go off the gold standard and for England, it is a good thing for us.

Mr. SNELL. I am not in accord with any statement that the chairman of the Tariff Commission made along that line and I do not believe the Treasury or the people connected with the executive departments of the Government agree with him or are in accord with that statement.

Let me say in regard to that statement that the only thing I want him to have the power to do is exactly what he has been doing so far in connection with the imports from Japan. He has gone the limit allowed under the law. In addition to that, the President has gone a little farther than was allowed until the last tariff act.

I want him to have the same power to do what he has done with reference to a few imports from Japan, to all the imports from Japan, and to imports from all countries with depreciated currencies.

Mr. RAGON. The gentleman refers to the rubber footwear?

Mr. SNELL. That is one thing.

Mr. RAGON. I suggest to the gentleman that that applied just as much to the volume of imports that came from Czechoslovakia, and Czechoslovakia is not a country with depreciated currency.

Mr. SNELL. The larger part came from Japan, and it is so stated by the Commerce Department.

Mr. RAGON. I can not agree that the Commerce Department knows more about the tariff——

Mr. SNELL. They know something about the statistics.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. There is an international advantage through imports and exports. What happens between the United States and Japan is not a demonstration of the internal conditions in Japan.

Mr. SNELL. Not necessarily.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The Crowther bill, H. R. 8557, fixes the date at which the standard value of currency in depreciated countries shall be proclaimed as of October 1, 1931.

Mr. SNELL. I said that I was not specially interested in that individual bill, but I wanted to get the general subject before the House for discussion.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I understand, but of course this is the bill that will be under discussion.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to change a lot of things in the bill myself and I am not going to get into an argument about the details of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The standard value of the currency, according to the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to yield on that at this time.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman realize that the nations who depreciated their currency prior to the date fixed, whether it be October 1, 1931, or some date in 1932, will have an advantage over those countries that have depreciated their currency subsequent to the date fixed in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. I want to use them all alike, I want to use them exactly the same. I want to see to it, in other words, that imports coming from those countries at the present time shall come in under what is practically American valuation.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What date would the gentleman fix?

Mr. SNELL. I am not going to fix any date at the present time.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. If the Democratic Party votes solidly against the bill on Monday, will it not be a notice to the American people that after the 4th of March the Democratic Party is not going to support a high-tariff policy in the interest of the American people?

Mr. SNELL. In the statement that I have made heretofore, I tried to make it appear that there was not anything partisan about it, and I do not care to go into the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to Democratic policy, although I may think the same as he does.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman says that the motion to discharge the committee will be the first thing on Monday's calendar.

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. Will that motion be subject to debate by the Members?

Mr. SNELL. It is subject to only 10 minutes' debate on a side.

Mr. GARBER. And if the motion is defeated, there will be no opportunity to debate the merits of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. There will be no opportunity to bring that matter before Congress during this session, unless the majority has a change of heart and decides it wants to do it. In closing, I want to say that I am very much interested because I believe it is vital to this country at this time that we do something along this line. I think this present situation is helping to prolong the depression. I firmly believe there is no one thing that can be done that will go further toward relieving unemployment—and that is the great question before us—than to do something along the line of legislation that will meet depreciated-currency conditions and stop the inflow of imports from those countries under present conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to speak on this subject at this time. I did, however, have it in mind to submit some observations on this very important subject at some future date, but after listening to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], I feel that perhaps it would be appropriate that I make some remarks at this time. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I agree with one statement of the distinguished gentleman from New York, and that is, that a matter that so vitally affects the welfare of all the people of America should be considered separate and apart from partisan politics, especially at a time when there is so much distress, so much suffering, so much bankruptcy, and as many people in trouble as there are to-day, I feel that every patriotic American citizen should, so far as he can, divest himself of partisanship and look at this matter in an unselfish and patriotic manner.

I had the honor of being named the chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means to conduct hearings upon the subject of depreciated currencies. There was referred to our committee the Hill bill, the Crowther bill, I believe, and the Hawley bill. We held hearings for about 10 days, and every person who desired to be heard was given a hearing, and every phase of this matter was gone into. When the hearings began I approached the subject with an open mind. There had been so much propaganda, I had seen so much in the newspapers, I had received so many communications from different sections of the country, especially in the far West and on the Pacific slope, that I had the impression that probably some emergency legislation on this subject was necessary.

After the hearings were concluded, after listening to all the witnesses, and especially three members of the Tariff Commission and representatives from the Treasury Department, all of whom should be specialists on this subject, I was fully convinced that this legislation was not only unnecessary but unwise, unworkable, and impracticable.

Of course, everyone knows we could not enact legislation of this kind at this session. Legislation as far-reaching as this, although it may be advocated in good conscience and in good faith, with conditions as they are in the other body this late in the session, would be impossible of consummation during the remaining days of this Congress. But, aside from that, I became convinced that on its merits the bill was unsound. I became convinced there was a hysteria in this country as the result of propaganda and misrepresentation, but that there was no justification for it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Does the gentleman go so far as to say there is no need of additional protection for American industry and American labor at this time?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; I would not say that. But, in my judgment, this legislation is more likely to injure than benefit American industry and American labor. I am not a free trader. I never have been, and I am not now a fanatic on the tariff question in either direction, if I understand myself. I have always believed in reasonable or adequate protection to American industry. I believe in that policy now; but, Mr. Chairman, this is a question which, with all of its relations, can not be properly considered at this time. I am of the opinion that some consideration of this question is necessary, but that it should be taken up in the early part of the next Congress and be considered in connection with the entire tariff subject.

The chairman of the Tariff Commission, Mr. O'Brien, testified before our subcommittee at length and said this legislation was not only unnecessary but it was dangerous; that instead of correcting existing difficulties it would, in all probability, accentuate them. It was testified that world conditions now, as far as we are concerned, are very unsatisfactory; that in the last two or three years, and especially since the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, there had been a race between our Nation and other nations in erecting embargoes and tariff breastworks and imposing countervailing duties, by which our export trade has seriously suffered. We seem to have lost sight of two phases of this question. One is that class of American industry and American labor that produces goods for export, and the other is the great mass of American consumers. They all must be taken into consideration, not only those who manufacture the goods in competition with imports, but those who manufacture goods for export, and the great American consumers are all entitled to consideration. As long as our exports exceed our imports, thereby giving employment to American labor and capital, we had better have a care; we had better be cautious before we further irritate and further aggravate and further offend the nations of the earth with which we must do business and with which we must have business intercourse. That seems to have been entirely lost sight of. As Mr. O'Brien said, this proposed legislation means an embargo, especially against those nations which have depreciated currencies.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON] truly said the other day, in discussing this matter, that, while there has been a falling off of imports from all the nations with which we have business relations, the drop has been greater from those countries with depreciated currencies than with those nations which are on the gold standard.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Now, that matter has been disputed, and I have a definite statement from the Department of Commerce that the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas is not a fact.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, if I make any statement that the records do not corroborate or support, I shall be glad to modify it. I shall put those statistics in my revised remarks.

Mr. SNELL. What I had in mind was not what the gentleman was stating but the statement made by the chairman of the Tariff Commission. I understand from a statement put out by the Department of Commerce day before yesterday that he was entirely wrong in that statement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I find that a great many of us can find statistics to support our position, but if we can not rely upon the statistics of the Government, the Treasury Department, the Tariff Commission, and the Department of Commerce, upon whom can we rely?

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. In the testimony of Doctor Durand, chief economist of the Tariff Commission, he will find the statement that he made a while ago is verified.

I would like to suggest to the gentleman that at these hearings we had men from the Department of Commerce. I do not recall that any who were there testified except one. We had men from the Treasury Department. We had three tariff commissioners. We had the chief economist of the Tariff Commission. Certainly, if the Department of Commerce had those figures, with those men there, whose chief business it is to know these things—if those men had made an error, why would not the Department of Commerce get up there and correct it? If I may intrude a little further on the gentleman's statement, when the testimony of Mr. O'Brien seemed for a moment to put our Secretary of the Treasury on the spot as to his attitude, this subcommittee gave an opportunity to Mr. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, to come in there and make a statement concerning his attitude on this legislation. We went into all of those things, and if we had thought the Secretary of Commerce had known anything about this that was worth while to the Members of Congress, he would have been a man that would have been called before the committee, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. When the Secretary of the Treasury was invited to appear before the committee, word came to the committee that he declined?

Mr. RAGON. He did not decline to send a man up there.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. At first; but at the end of the hearing, the last day of the hearing, invitation was extended to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the printed record shows that the Secretary of the Treasury declined to appear. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina if that is not correct?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is.

Mr. RAGON. If the gentleman will permit one further intrusion, I want to know whom we would go to for information regarding a tariff matter if not to the very witnesses who came up here.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is just what I remarked.

Mr. RAGON. And I will ask the gentleman in all his experience does he know of the committee's calling on the Department of Commerce for information on a tariff matter? And I will ask him furthermore if we have a statement from any of the State departments indorsing these bills?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman, Mr. Hopkins, representing the Treasury Department, said that everything sought to be accomplished in these bills, indorsing none of them, could be accomplished now by the Tariff Commission, but that possibly it might be helpful to make some minor amendment of paragraph 336 of the present tariff laws. All who testified said that this legislation was unworkable, that it was unnecessary, and that the Tariff Commission is now doing the very thing sought to be accomplished by this legislation.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Washington. The tariff commissioners all said it would be unworkable, because section 3 based it upon the commodity price indexes of the countries having depreciated currency. The witnesses from the Department of Commerce stated at the hearing that about 35 of the principal foreign countries have these general commodity price indexes upon which this calculation might be based. This is a typical comparison of the testimony of those who are interested in killing the bill with the testimony of those who are supplying information from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will ask my good friend the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] what interest these men could have in killing the bill? They were not lobbyists, they were not employed attorneys, they were here as representatives of the American people, and the positions they hold should qualify them to speak with authority upon this subject.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Will the gentleman permit me to answer his question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am pleased to.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I can give the gentleman my opinion.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I think the gentleman will agree with me. The Secretary of the Treasury, as the gentleman from North Carolina knows, represents the big banking interests of the country, and they are not for protection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will let the gentleman debate that matter with my good friend from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. The Tariff Commission are after more power. That commission, of course, wanted the bill that would give them more power than even the Hawley bill proposed.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Every man who is intelligent knows that the Secretary of the Treasury must be right sometimes. This is one of the times when he was right. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I would like the gentleman from North Carolina to know that this gentleman from New York is speaking from a protective standpoint because he is a protectionist.

I do not presume to speak for Mr. Mills, or anyone else, but I do understand that the last Hawley bill that was introduced, while giving that power to the Tariff Commission, was drawn down to the Treasury Department, or at least had the approval of that department.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I understood they cooperated upon request. It was not originated there. They went to the Treasury Department for help in drafting the bill, but the proponents of this legislation are not agreed among themselves—some want the Hill bill, some the Crowther bill, and some the Hawley bill. But the Treasury department and the Tariff Commission want none of them, and the American people will desire none of them when they understand the disastrous effect of such legislation.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman from New York indicate that Mr. Mills indorsed either of these bills or the new Hawley bill?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know, but I take it this last Hawley bill has been approved by the Treasury Department and I suppose it represents their views.

Mr. RAGON. I will ask the gentleman from New York if we asked Ogden Mills to come before the committee and state whether he indorsed the bill?

Mr. SNELL. I can not state whether he indorsed the bill Mr. Hawley brought up, but I took it that it met his approval.

Mr. RAGON. Which one of the Hawley bills?

Mr. SNELL. The last one.

Mr. RAGON. We asked him to come, but he did not come; he sent up this young man by the name of Hopkins. Is it not a fact we asked him to come to that meeting and still he did not come?

Mr. SNELL. That I can not answer.

Mr. RAGON. I can; that is what I am now saying.

Mr. SNELL. I am stating my own views in regard to this tariff proposition, and I think my statement presents the almost unanimous sentiment of this side of the House.

Mr. RAGON. The point I am making is that no official from the present administration came in there and indorsed any one of these bills.

Mr. SNELL. Did not the gentleman, Mr. Hopkins, indorse it; and was not he the representative of Mr. Mills?

Mr. DOUGHTON. He did not.

Mr. RAGON. Why, of course not. I do not believe the gentleman from New York ever heard of the Crowther bill until this caucus of the Republicans was held to put the Democrats on the spot.

Mr. SNELL. Unfortunately, I have heard of it; I have read it. Personally, I do not agree with everything in it.

Mr. RAGON. Now, the gentleman is not fair. He led the Republican caucus to indorse it, yet he now states he is not for that bill.

Mr. SNELL. I led a Republican conference to indorse the principle which that bill represents. The only thing we want to do is to bring the subject matter before the House for discussion, and Members on your side do not dare to let it come up here in an open meeting and meet us in a fair discussion on the merits of the legislation.

Mr. RAGON. But you did petition out a bill that your men had never heard of.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, we had heard of it, and we had to petition out some bill in order to get the matter before the House. The last Hawley bill had not been there long enough to petition out.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for just a short statement?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will always yield to my friend from Washington.

Mr. HILL of Washington. There is not any question about the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury and the three tariff commissioners as to this proposed legislation. The Secretary of the Treasury sent a personal representative to the subcommittee conducting hearings on this matter and presented a plan to correct the evils of this situation with respect to depreciated currency, and that plan was embodied in a bill introduced by the gentleman from Oregon and known as the Hawley bill, H. R. 14428. The three tariff commissioners indorsed this bill and they are all against my bill and they are all against the Crowther bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. RAGON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, too.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Page, of the Tariff Commission, said they were all bad, and it was only a question of which was worse.

Mr. RAGON. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will my friend state when he first heard there was a Crowther bill before the committee?

Mr. DOUGHTON. After we had been conducting hearings for some days, it was laid before the subcommittee.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman any recollection of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] ever advising the other members of the committee that he had introduced his bill or was seeking a hearing before the committee?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I did not know anything about it. I did not know the bill was before the committee until we began our hearing, but I understood there was a conference about it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] expressed the hope, or stated the view, that this subject should be considered separate and apart from politics, and there has been some criticism of the action of the Democrats in making it a party matter. I do not know whether I am correct or not, but it did go out in the press, and the report was circulated around the Capitol that the Republicans had held a caucus or a conference on this subject; and if that is true, and if such action is an offense, evidently you Republicans were the first offenders. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The Republicans had a conference on this matter, but the Republicans have never tried to bind the individual Members and lead them by a halter up to the trough the way the Democrats always do.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, perhaps the men on the gentleman's side are more susceptible to the party lash than ours. It may be that just a hint or a nod or a gesture from the gentleman from New York is sufficient.

Mr. SNELL. Previous history does not show that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I would rather defend the Members on the gentleman's side of the House, but I think he rather intimates that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman explain to the House just how a Democratic caucus operates? Is it binding on everybody?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; a Member can excuse himself if he states that he has made pledges to his constituents in opposition to the action proposed by the caucus. But the House is not interested in that; but if the gentleman will come over to my office to-night at 12.30 o'clock, I shall be delighted to tell him all about it.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think it should be explained at the midnight hour, because it would not stand the scrutiny of daylight.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Then that should just suit the gentleman, as the deeds of his party are always evil.

Reference has been made to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I have profound respect for the ability and the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury, although I do not always agree with his views on public matters. However, in Mr. O'Brien's statement before the committee he referred to a speech the Secretary of the Treasury had made in New York in which he had almost come out for free trade, as reported by the papers. He referred to the secretary in support of his statement that this legislation was undesirable, unnecessary, unwise, and fraught with danger.

When we were ready to conclude the hearings, Mr. CROWTHER suggested to the committee that inasmuch as the name of the Secretary of the Treasury had been brought into the hearings, the Secretary should be given an opportunity to come before the committee and state his position in order to clear up the matter. We sent him word through Doctor CROWTHER, one of the Republican members, and through the clerk of the committee, that in view of the fact that his name had been used in connection with the hearings, if he cared to be heard, we would be pleased to hear him. He was as silent as the tomb and sent word he did not care to come and testify at all.

We took it from this fact that we were justified in coming to the conclusion that he agreed with members of the Tariff Commission and that he was not in harmony with this bill or with the class of legislation.

In the past the Tariff Commission has been considered good authority on tariff subjects; in fact, with the Republicans the Tariff Commission has almost been an obsession. They have always wanted tariff questions settled upon facts and information procured by the Tariff Commission; but when the Tariff Commission condemns their position, or when they come out and flatly, not only refuse to indorse this kind of legislation but say it is fraught with great danger, then they back away and seek to discredit the Tariff Commission.

Mr. O'Brien, in talking about this bill and other similar legislation, said, "Experience such as that, it seems to me, should warn us against blanket legislation like this against all the countries that are off the gold standard. I can not think of anything that would be worse." This is his statement. In the wildest stretch of his imagination he can not think of anything that would be worse than this proposed legislation.

But, my friends, when we must export more than half of our cotton, when we must export a large percentage of our tobacco, large quantities of meat products, both processed and otherwise, large quantities of wheat, and hundreds of millions of dollars worth of goods manufactured by the industries of America, when we must have an export market for our surplus products and commodities, it is a dangerous time to raise the tariff so high that it will amount to an embargo. Mr. O'Brien said this proposed legislation would amount to an embargo.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one minute more that I may ask him a question.

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. KERR. In the gentleman's long experience as a Member of Congress, and an active Member, has he ever known the Republican Party of this Nation to offer a panacea for any economic trouble except to raise the tariff?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not recollect of any. It would seem that after the experience we have had with an ultra-protective tariff policy for the past three years, and after the verdict of the American people in the last election, our Republican friends would learn something. But it is a regrettable fact that they have not.

The plain, unvarnished truth about this whole matter, as shown by the hearings of our subcommittee, and by those high officials of the Government in position to have all the facts, is that this excitement about our country's being overrun or flooded with imports from countries with depreciated currencies is a huge distortion of facts.

Imports from those countries with depreciated currencies were $500,000,000 less in 1932 than they were in 1931. In 1931 they were $1,301,581,000 and in 1932 they were only $801,278,000, or a decrease for 1932 over 1931 of 38 per cent. Imports from countries still on the gold standard for 1931 were $616,544,000 and for 1932 $414,096,000, or a decrease of 32 per cent.

So it is shown by the cold statistics that the decrease in imports from countries with depreciated currencies was 6 per cent greater than from those countries on the gold standard.

I insert as a part of my remarks the following figures furnished by the Tariff Commission, giving exports and imports from countries both on and off the gold standard:

In 1932 our exports to all countries exceeded our imports $289,561,000, and for countries with depreciated currencies in 1932 our exports exceeded our imports $195,428,000.

So this shows how ridiculous and preposterous it is to claim that we are being run over or flooded with goods from countries with depreciated currencies.

Mr. Chairman, these figures demonstrate beyond the shadow of any doubt that it is not depreciated currencies of other countries that is causing so much distress to American labor, American industry, and American agriculture, but this catastrophe has been caused by the disastrous effects of the ruinous policies of the depreciated Republican Party. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I will go as far as any man in this House in an effort to reorganize the Government on a basis to secure the highest possible efficiency at the lowest possible cost.

I am also willing to give to the President of the United States all the power and all the authority that we can constitutionally give to an Executive, but I am not willing to delegate to the President powers that are clearly legislative in character, that can not be constitutionally delegated.

Title 4 of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, H. R. 13520, which was sent to conference yesterday, grants to the President the most sweeping powers in the matter of reorganization of the executive departments of any measure that has up to this time been given consideration by the Congress. It is a bald attempt to confer legislative authority upon the executive branch of the Government. It seeks to authorize the President to carry out functions by Executive order which are clearly legislative in character and which are conferred upon Congress alone by the Constitution. It has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court of the United States that Congress may not lawfully abdicate or shirk responsibility by transferring its legislative duties to some other branch of the Government. Can anyone doubt that Congress alone has authority to determine what activities the Government shall engage in, their character, and the extent of their functions? It alone having the authority, how can it be delegated? Having created numerous bureaus and independent establishments by law, how can the Congress, in general terms, without giving any hint as to what bureaus and establishments are intended to be affected, constitutionally delegate to the Executive the power to destroy the laws by which they were created by abolishing them? The principle that legislative power can not be delegated by the Congress is well settled.

Cooley, in his sixth edition of Constitutional Limitations, at page 137, lays down the following as settled constitutional law:

> One of the settled maxims in constitutional law is that the power conferred upon the legislature to make laws can not be delegated by that department to any other body or authority. Where the sovereign power of the State has located the authority there it must remain; and by the constitutional agency alone the laws must be made until the Constitution itself is changed. The power to whose judgment, wisdom, and patriotism this high prerogative has been intrusted can not relieve itself of the responsibility by choosing other agencies upon which the power shall be devolved, nor can it substitute the judgment, wisdom, and patriotism of any other body for those to which alone the people have seen fit to confide this sovereign trust.

In the case of the St. Louis Merchants Bridge Terminal Railway Co. v. United States (188 Fed. 195), which involved the constitutionality of certain quarantine regulations of the Department of Agriculture, the court said:

> But it (Congress) can not delegate its legislative power, its power to exercise the indispensable discretion to make, to add to, to take from, or to modify the law.

A leading case dealing with the subject is Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649, 692–694), in which Justice Harlan states the law to be:

> That Congress can not delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. * * * "The true distinction," as Judge Hanney, speaking for the Supreme Court of Ohio, has well said, "is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made." * * *
> The legislature can not delegate the power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action to depend.

To abolish a department established by an act of Congress is in effect a repeal of the law creating it. Such a power can not be delegated to the President.

Directly in point is the case of Boston v. Chelsea (212 Mass. 127; 98 N. E. 620), in which the court says:

> Power the exercise of which would affect the repeal of existing provisions of the general law may not be delegated. * * * Manifestly the determination of the functions of counties and the distribution of governmental authority among them is purely legislative in its nature. * * * Moreover, the effect of the report (of the commissioners) when confirmed by the court would be to repeal statutes now in force, which would of itself be a legislative rather than a judicial act.

Some years ago the Legislature of South Dakota authorized the State bank examiner to require State banks to keep their reserves on deposit within the State and to establish within the State "reserve cities." This law was attacked as being unconstitutional and in disposing of the case the supreme court of the State, in a well-considered decision, said, among other things:

> The legislature has no power to delegate to an executive or ministerial officer authority to require reserves of any bank to be kept within the State, since such delegation would be in contravention of the State constitution which vests all legislative power in the legislature or retains it in the people through the initiative. * * *

The banking act does not provide that when the public examiner shall find and declare certain facts and conditions to exist, the whole or some portion of the reserves of State banks shall be kept within the State. Neither does it attempt to confer upon the public examiner authority to ascertain and declare facts or conditions as to cities within the State, whereupon certain cities shall become "reserve cities," and banks within such cities shall become "reserve banks." (St. Charles State Bank v. Wingfield (S. Dak.), 155 N. W. 776.)

But it is said that authorizing the President to abolish statutory bureaus and establishments is not equivalent to a repeal of the law creating them. If this position be correct, which I deny, does it follow that Congress can constitutionally authorize the Executive to nullify the laws by abolishing their creatures? It seems to me that the answer must be in the negative. The Constitution requires that the President "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." Congress can not excuse him from doing so and he can not evade their execution without violating the Constitution and his oath of office. Either horn of the dilemma is untenable. [Applause.]

Congress can not evade its constitutional duty or escape responsibility by subterfuge in the use of general language that does not disclose the legislative will. Even a casual examination of the language carried in section 403 of title 4 will disclose an utter lack of anything that would give any hint as to what Congress has in mind with respect to what it intends to accomplish by the sweeping powers given to the Executive. The section provides:

SEC. 403. Whenever the President, after investigation, shall find and so declare that any regrouping, consolidation, transfer, or abolition of any executive agency or agencies and/or the functions thereof is necessary to accomplish the purpose provided in section 401 of this title, he may by Executive order—

(a) Transfer the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency;

(b) Consolidate the functions vested in any executive agency; or

(c) Abolish the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof; and

(d) Designate and fix the name and functions of any consolidated activity or executive agency and the title, powers, and duties of its executive head; except that the President shall not have authority under this title to abolish or transfer an executive department and/or all the functions thereof.

It will be observed that the President may do certain things if upon investigation he finds that they will "accomplish the purpose provided in section 401." The only purpose disclosed in section 401 is "to reduce drastically all governmental expenditures." But certainly it can not be deduced from that language that Congress intends, for illustration, that the President should abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Bureau of the Budget, the Federal Farm Board, the Bureau of Public Roads, or the Veterans' Administration. Yet it is clear that all of these things could be done under the language carried in section 403. Section 401 of the present law, approved June 30, 1932, provides:

SEC. 401. In order to further reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in government, it is declared to be the policy of Congress—

(a) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purpose;

(b) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head;

(c) To eliminate overlapping and duplications of effort; and

(d) To segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character.

Here the purposes of Congress are clearly set out as a guide which the President is directed to follow in reorganizing the Government.

In the proposed amendment carried in the bill now in conference no policy whatever is declared by the Congress as a guide for the President. Instead of doing that it provides in section 401:

Accordingly, in order to reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in government, the President shall investigate the present organization of all executive and administrative agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary—

(a) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

(b) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and by abolishing such agencies and/or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government;

(c) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and

(d) To segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character.

There is nothing in title 4 to indicate what the legislative will is with respect to what departments, bureaus, divisions, or activities shall be transferred, abolished, or consolidated. It lays down no principle or guide for the President to follow. It prescribes no facts, circumstances, or conditions to be ascertained by him upon the finding of which the statute shall become operative. On the contrary, it delegates to him unlimited authority to disregard all laws with respect to the establishment of existing executive agencies, all of which he is authorized to transfer, consolidate, or abolish. In other words, it gives him absolute and arbitrary power with respect to the set-up of the Government and the right to determine of what activities it shall consist except only that he can not abolish or transfer all of the activities of the executive departments. One is led to wonder why even this exception was inserted. Under the authority granted he could abolish and transfer all the activities of the Post Office Department except the sale of stamps, if he so elected.

But even if by any stretch of judicial reasoning and interpretation what is attempted here can be said to be constitutional, it is setting a precedent so damaging, so inimical to popular government, so dangerous to our liberties, so contrary to the genius of our institutions, and so subversive of our concept of a republican form of government that it is intolerable to anyone who has some knowledge and reverence for our fundamental law and the principle underlying our form of government. [Applause.] The issue is too important for blind partisanship. If such a law may be passed in a time of peace—and I do not admit that it might constitutionally be done in times of war—what is there to prevent Congress from subverting our form of government by delegating dictatorial and arbitrary powers to the Executive? I am not unmindful of the fact that it is sought to pass the law on a basis of a declared emergency, but our courts have repeatedly held that the declaration of an emergency by a legislative body does not create one and where, pray, is the emergency to justify the abdication of Congress? It was said here yesterday by a distinguished member [Mr. WOODRUM] of the Appropriations Committee that even if we abolished all the independent establishments we could only save $56,000,000. Is it coming to this that the saving of a few million dollars shall be held to be such an emergency as to cause Congress to jeopardize the liberty of a whole people by authorizing the President to say what their Government shall consist of? I can not believe it. The economies desired can all be accomplished without delegating unconstitutional power to the President. Liberty has been bought at too great a price; it has been won by the sacrifice of much treasure and the shedding of rivers of blood. Shall we at this late date evade our responsibilities as Representatives of the people? Are the people to be denied a voice as to what their Government shall be? Are their rights to be sacrificed and their future liberty to be put in jeopardy by cowardly evasion? Is there not sufficient intelligence in Congress and sufficient courage to reform the Government upon a sound and economical basis? If not, we have, indeed, sunk to a level which no longer justifies our existence. Let it be remembered also that an emergency, even if it did exist as declared in the preamble of title 4, would not create a power that does not exist. An emergency may be the reason for exercising a power but can not become the instrument for the exercise of an unauthorized power by the Congress or the President. The functions of the Congress can not be frittered away upon any pretext or plea of national or political necessity. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wal. 2; Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 348.)

Congress holds the purse. It alone serves the people in a representative capacity. Only through it can the people speak. If it fails them, their voice is not heard. The voters have not demanded a dictatorship and do not want it. They have a right to expect us to carry out their wishes and not to pawn off our responsibility to an Executive that they can not reach.

The existing law is permanent legislation and gives all the authority that Congress can constitutionally delegate to the President. He can not, of course, abolish activities and establishments that are created by law, but he can consolidate and merge their functions so as to greatly reduce personnel and expenditures. Under it President Hoover sent to Congress the most complete plan of reorganization that has ever been worked out by the Executive of the Nation. Had it been permitted to stand it would have put our Government structure upon a much sounder basis and would have saved tens of millions annually, but unfortunately for the country the President's Executive orders were vacated and set aside by a resolution of this Chamber. To permit one branch of Congress to set aside what has been sanctioned by law is wrong in principle. The law should be so modified as to require the concurrence of both Chambers to abrogate transfers and consolidations effected by the President under the act. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] 10 minutes.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, public approval of Democratic Party principles and policies at the late November election imposed a tremendous responsibility upon the party. The promises made impressed the people. They were accepted in good faith. They should be kept in good faith. If this is not done it will be disastrous to the country and a discredit to the party.

That verdict of the people was definite and certain. It was emphatic and enthusiastic—almost unanimous. What an inspiration to heroic endeavor on the part of the successful party to meet and solve the grave problems so essential to the brighter and better day. The pathway back to prosperity will not be a rosy one. Many dangers will be encountered, and yet the party must move on to the fulfillment of the promises made to the people.

The people are not in the frame of mind to tolerate further delay. They are insistent on action which will produce a situation the opposite of what we now have. The Democratic Party promised much. Therefore the people have a right to expect much. The full significance of the verdict of the people last November does not dawn upon one until he recalls that 42 of the 48 States participated in that verdict. It was an expression of public opinion that should impress itself upon the victorious party and challenge the best thought and action of party leaders to serve the needs of the people.

There can be no excuse or justification for failure. The party, after March 4, will be in control of both the executive and legislative branches of Government. Then will come the acid test as to its capabilities to measure up to its responsibilities. Let us hope it may do so, not alone for the good of the party but chiefly the welfare of the whole people.

I have full faith that the party will meet its responsibilities in the end, and yet I know and you know that there are always besetting dangers which threaten and would destroy if given the opportunity. These are the things that we must guard against. The most dangerous are inefficient leadership and party disloyalty. One is just about as bad as the other, with this difference: That inefficient leadership soon becomes apparent, while the traitor is not discovered until after he has done his work. Another danger is the possibility of a lack of harmony between the Executive and the Congress, which is always a serious handicap, and particularly in times like these, when cooperation is so important in the general plan to promote the welfare of the country.

Let us hope that President-elect Roosevelt will appoint men to Cabinet positions who will command the respect and have the confidence of the people, and let us hope, too, that in the organization of the House men of the highest order of intelligence and known capabilities may be chosen to positions of leadership. They should be men of character, ripe in legislative experience, tactful, courageous, and able to meet and master any situation that may arise. Those are the qualities of leadership, and any shortage in the possession of these qualities will be embarrassing to the major party as the session progresses. The selection of men to these important positions of leadership, including the speakership, floor leadership, and chairmen of major committees is a duty which requires care, caution, and courage to guard against a possible mistake.

But more important than all the rest is the character of legislation that may be presented to solve the grave problems now claiming attention. The Republican Party failed absolutely to meet this situation, and, to my mind, that makes the task all the more difficult for the party now charged with that responsibility. This is a time that calls for the highest order of patriotism and the sacrifice of selfish, personal interests for the good of the whole people. Our duty to them is the one thing that is resting upon my mind, and the fulfillment of the promises made to relieve the present distressing conditions should be the one thing nearest your heart and mine.

We know in a general way what President-elect Roosevelt's legislative program is to be, but know nothing specific. The provisions written into measures constituting the program are the essential things. It is the provisions of measures that provoke discussion, cause discord, and defeat the plans and purposes to serve the needs of the people. This has been done many times before, and it may happen again. I do not want to be considered an alarmist, but reverting again to inefficient leadership, party disloyalty, and now adding the possibility of an inadequate program to meet the present situation, I feel impelled to sound the alarm and run up the danger signal, that these things may be averted.

A grave responsibility rests upon the President. It is the duty of Congress to lighten his burden by aiding him. My sympathy goes out to Mr. Roosevelt even before he has started. Elected as I was upon the Democratic Party platform, and with no protest against any of its declarations, I feel it my duty to give his plans and purposes my earnest, active support. However, I think it permissible to make a few suggestions which should be incorporated into any legislative program to cure present ills. I have given the subject of this depression and its cure much thought. I am persuaded that the remedies suggested in the program herewith submitted will not only relieve conditions, but balance the Budget without any increase in taxation. If the President elect should see anything in this program, he is at perfect liberty to appropriate it without explanation or apology. Here it is:

First. Monetary legislation that will give silver its proper place in our monetary system and yet preserve the integrity of the gold standard, avoiding thereby unsound inflationary proposals.

Second. Reduce public expenditures by restoring the Federal Government to the functions contemplated in the Constitution and abolishing all others.

Third. Increase revenues by putting the Post Office Department and Panama Canal on a self-sustaining basis.

Fourth. Place all forms of transportation—rail, highway, water, and air—under an equality of opportunity and regulation and repeal such impossible laws as the recapture clause of the interstate commerce act.

Fifth. Balance the Budget without levying additional taxes by compelling busses and trucks to pay for their use of the highways, and inland waterway traffic to pay for maintenance, return on investment, overhead, and other proper charges against such waterways.

Sixth. Limit any increase in the public debt to relief purposes only.

Seventh. Declare a policy of no cancellation of war debts, unless the United States gets something in value in return in the way of trade concessions, or by restoring the normal purchasing power of gold, so as to reflect a commodity price level that will be fair to our consumers, producers, debtors, and creditors.

Eighth. Adoption of a plan for refunding of farm and home mortgages.

Ninth. Repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Tenth. Modify the Volstead law so as to legalize the manufacture and sale of wine and beer.

Legislation along the lines indicated would, in my opinion, restore confidence and insure the return of prosperity. Nothing would more speedily aid economic recovery than legislation to broaden the monetary base and the adding of silver as a monetary reserve. The immediate effect of such legislation would be to increase commodity prices and open up 80 per cent of the markets of the world to American products from factory and farm. It would enable the countries on a silver basis to buy our goods. One of the things we need is more business and plenty of it, to give employment to millions of stalwart Americans now idle. [Applause.]

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman mentions silver among other things. I am wondering if he has in mind the policy of a fixed ratio of silver to gold on the basis of, say, 16 to 1?

Mr. LAMNECK. I have not.

Mr. FIESINGER. I take it that the gentleman has given a great deal of thought to this subject. Is it his idea to put silver in our reserves at the gold price of silver, in order to expand the metallic base, and in expanding the metallic base give more leeway for fiduciary money; that is, credit money?

Mr. LAMNECK. That is exactly what I intend.

Mr. FIESINGER. Does the gentleman think that with putting that money in our reserves it would raise the price of silver?

Mr. LAMNECK. There is no question about that.

Mr. FIESINGER. And if it did, would not it greatly appreciate the buying power of the people of the Orient?

Mr. LAMNECK. It certainly would, because that is the only thing they have with which to buy. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, several weeks ago the people of the country were greatly pleased when the President elect, Mr. Roosevelt, went down to Muscle Shoals and made a personal inspection of that great project, thereby receiving first-hand information looking to the development of the Tennessee River and the Tennessee Valley. A few days after Mr. Roosevelt's visit to Muscle Shoals he announced plans for the project which stirred the imagination of the people. In connection with those plans I would like to call to the attention of the House a story in this morning's Washington Post, placed in a rather inconspicuous portion of the paper, but which as I read it seemed to me to be very significant. It comes by Associated Press from Providence, Ky., and is dated February 10. It reads:

PROVIDENCE, KY., DROPS TAX PAYMENT FOR YEAR

PROVIDENCE, KY., February 10.—No city taxes will be paid this year by the more than 5,000 residents of this community.

City council last night voted to suspend the taxes this year and operate the city government with earnings from the municipal light and water plants. Last year the city operated on a tax rate of 75 cents.

The bill which we have before us contains a provision carrying an appropriation of some $55,000 for the printing of a report on the power needs of the District of Columbia. This report is based on a careful survey made by competent engineers, and it is interesting to note that the report recommends that there be built in the District of Columbia a municipal power plant. When we read stories like the one from Providence, Ky., we realize that President-elect Roosevelt's plans for Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee River, as well as the plans for the Columbia River, the St. Lawrence, the Colorado, and the other great streams of the country are more than mere dreams.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman give us a general idea of what the plans of the President elect are upon that subject?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I have only a moment left of my time, but briefly let me say that the plans call for agricultural relief, reforestation, reduction of the cost of electric power to the consumer, flood control, navigation, unemployment relief, and industrial development.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested a few moments ago in the splendid address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK], in which he said that the Democratic Party coming into power on the 4th of March next should keep the various campaign pledges of that party. In this connection I call the attention of the House to two campaign pledges which were made by the Democratic and the Republican Parties in 1928, neither of which was ever kept. In fact, both the great parties in the conventions last year failed to repeat these campaign pledges. I refer to the campaign pledges of the Democratic Party and the Republican Party in 1928, which in effect promised to put agriculture on a parity with other businesses and enterprises in the country. It is a very easy thing for us to say that we intend to keep a party pledge, but it is more difficult to work out some real worth-while legislation which will carry into effect a pledge such as was made by both parties in 1928. I wish some law could be enacted which would put agriculture on a parity with the banking institutions of the country. I wish some law could be enacted and put into effect which would enable the farmers of the country to pay the obligations which they owe, but I can not see how this can be done unless we work out some plan to reduce the amount of the mortgages which those farmers gave 5, 10, or more years ago, or in some way increase the price of the farmer's products which are offered for sale from time to time.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman believe that the Roosevelt allotment plan to decrease farm acreage in production and the Roosevelt Tennessee Valley plan to increase farm acreage in production will solve the problem of farmers?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. In that connection let me say that I was not in favor of the allotment plan that was proposed in the House, and I voted against it. On previous occasions I have set forth in detail my objections to the allotment plan of farm relief and shall not now further discuss this plan. Let me further say I always have been, and now am, very much in favor of the development and use of Muscle Shoals along the lines now contemplated by President-elect Roosevelt.

Furthermore, I do not subscribe to the proposition that the allotment plan as it was brought up in the House is the Roosevelt plan any more than the Farm Board plan which was passed some four years ago was the Herbert Hoover plan. It is a very easy matter for people on both sides of the aisle to attempt to put onto the President a measure such as the Farm Board act and such as the allotment plan. Four years ago many of those who believed that the Farm Board act would prove a success were glad to call it the Herbert Hoover plan, because they wanted him to get credit for the enactment of that bill. Many of those who believed it would be a failure were also anxious for it to be termed the Hoover plan so that when it went down in ignominy and defeat President Hoover would get the blame for its failure. To-day there are those in Congress who are glad to call the allotment plan the Roosevelt plan, because they hope the allotment plan will work out well and he will get the credit for it, and there are those, like the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], who are glad to call the allotment plan the Roosevelt plan because in their hearts they expect it to prove a failure, and then they want to tie it onto President-elect Roosevelt so that he will get the blame because of its failure.

So I repeat, the allotment plan is no more the Roosevelt plan than the Farm Board plan, Mr. SCHAFER, was the Herbert Hoover plan. President Herbert Hoover came into the White House with that Farm Board plan already in the mind of the country, and he happened to be President when that plan was enacted into law. It was not his plan any more than the allotment plan is the plan of President-elect Roosevelt. Let us be fair about these matters.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is it not a fact that President-elect Roosevelt in his platform promises indicated he would support any farm legislation that the farm leaders could unite on which was constitutional, and if the farm leaders agreed on it, he must have been in favor of it?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. The gentleman and I are farm leaders and we have not agreed on it. I do not think the other farm leaders have agreed on it either. I understand many farm leaders in the House and Senate differ very much as to whether that is a good plan or not. Even if he made that kind of a promise he is not bound to agree to that plan, because the farm leaders have not at all yet agreed on it.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] opposed to granting farm relief by the allotment plan or any other plan?

Mr. SCHAFER. I am opposed to granting relief to the farmer by establishing a Frankenstein bureaucracy and levying a billion-dollar sales tax on the people who already do not have sufficient funds to buy the surplus of the farms.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. All of which goes to show that what I said in the beginning is absolutely true. It is easy enough to promise the farmers farm relief, but let me say to those on both sides of the aisle who will sit here and make laws after the 4th of March that when they come to work out a plan to help the farmers of the country they have a difficult task. For instance, my good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] believes the entire farm relief problem revolves around the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the legalizing of beer. [Laughter.] My friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] believes the entire farm relief program revolves around the high tariff. The words "farm relief" have come to mean everything and to mean absolutely nothing. Probably every man in this House who ran for Congress last time, regardless of whether he was defeated or elected, promised the farmers farm relief. It is my honest conviction that you can never bring back real relief to the farmers unless you put them on a parity with the bankers of the country. Let the farmers have the same rights as to the issuance of currency as are now enjoyed by the big banks.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. When industry manufactures too many shoes or too many textiles they stop production and throw hundreds of thousands of people entirely out of work. Will the gentleman spend some time suggesting some relief for those people who have already paid their share of the taxes, $500,000,000, when he is trying to get out a program for farm relief? Does not the gentleman have a little sympathy and does he not give a little action of his mind toward relieving that class of people who are thrown out of employment entirely?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I do, and the real trouble with the gentleman's proposition is this, that ever since this Government was created, the Government has given protection to manufacturing industries in the New England States by a high tariff, while the farmers have never enjoyed that and we have never yet been able to work out legislation which would give the farmers that kind of protection. I do not believe the allotment plan will do it. I believe the export debenture plan will come more nearly giving the farmers the same kind of relief that we have been giving to big manufacturing interests than any other bill proposed. Was the gentleman in favor of the export debenture plan?

Mr. GIFFORD. No. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] has expired.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, conflicting interest and conflicting views of those who favor some form of aid to our farmers complicate the situation and make it almost impossible to pass any real farm-relief legislation. It never has been passed and I fear it will not be passed in time to save the present generation of farmers. Much now done in the name of the farmers is not real farm-relief legislation and does the farmers little or no good. Many of the present farm-relief proposals are even most harmful.

Mr. Chairman, no plan can be evolved whereby the American people can be taxed out of the depression or the farmers can borrow themselves out of debt. A new loan may be temporarily helpful to the farmer, since it helps him carry his burden of debt a little longer. His debts get larger, though, with each new loan or extension. As I have repeatedly said, the farmers can never get out of their present financial difficulties without a readjustment of the present economic situation. Either by inflation of our currency, both in volume and amount, or by increase of the prices of farm products, or by a general readjustment of the entire debt situation of the country, or by some other means or device the farmer must be put on a parity with the banker and industry, and the price of his products put on a parity with the value of gold and the money in general use, before the farmer will ever be able to again breathe the air of economic freedom.

Something fundamental and far-reaching in its nature must be done. Nothing of a temporary nature will bring permanent prosperity. It is certainly true that additional taxes will not do the job. And yet there is a more determined effort than ever before to put taxes on the poor, in the form of sales taxes under one name or another and for one purpose or another. Almost invariably the hideousness of the sales tax is sought to be concealed by the laudable purposes for which the money thus sought to be raised is to be used. If there ever was a legislative proposal which should never be considered along with another, it is a tax provision or a provision for the appropriation of money. There certainly should be a division of the question every time it is sought to have these two considered at the same time as a part and parcel of the same measure or legislative act. Otherwise, in considering the apparently beneficent purpose of the expenditure of the money, Members of Congress, and the public, for that matter, are too prone to overlook entirely the hideous and awful features of the tax proposal.

A splendid illustration of this is to be found in the various kinds of proposed stamp money which I have seen fit to discuss rather fully during the past month or two. Of course, these plans are like the leaves of the forest—they are all alike in some respects and yet no two are exactly alike. Some are much more vicious than others as to their taxing features. Some do not impose a sales tax at all, but only put a tax on the medium of exchange each month or each week. As I have repeatedly pointed out, if this kind of money is to be used during this emergency, then the tax on the length of time the money is in use is decidedly better than the tax on the number of times the money is expended. One is a sales tax of the most vicious type and the other may be considered only a reasonable interest. For instance, 1 cent a month, indorsed by me as the best of these taxes, amounts to only 12 per cent per year. Most banks charge more than this for interest or for interest and curtailments of the principal, which this really amounts to, in the long run.

These plans are suggested for all kinds of purposes; some to pay the veterans of the World War, some to help the farmer, some to pay all Government expenses, and even one I heard of some time ago was to raise $10 for every man, woman, and child in the United States, rich and poor alike. This last one sounded good to the poor man with a large family, who figured that he and his wife and 10 children would get $120 in cash—all at one time. Quite naturally, the poor fellow is likely to overlook the very vicious tax provisions of this plan, which happened to contain the most vicious form of sales tax suggested in any of these plans. Only last night I saw in one of the Washington papers mention of another plan, which is much better than the sales-tax plan, to pay everybody only $10 each. For the purpose of identification I will call the plan mentioned in the paper the weekly plan, since it proposes a tax of 5 cents in the form of a stamp each week on each dollar of this new currency.

The tax under the weekly plan would be entirely too heavy, and in many instances, in so far as the tax burden is concerned, would be almost as bad as the proposal to require a sales tax of 2 per cent every time the money is used in a business transaction.

In making a brief comparison of these two plans, for purpose of identification of the plan to put a sales tax on the poor to raise money to donate to the rich, I will refer to it as the poor-man's tax, rich-man's money plan. In fact, this title may be very appropriately applied to all forms of sales tax.

But now let me tell you what the weekly plan provides. It is proposed that the United States Government issue a monthly allowance to every poor person to the amount of one paper dollar for each year of his age, and that a 5 per cent stamp be required on each dollar each week until the end of 20 weeks, at which time the money would be redeemed by nontaxable currency. This bounty would be paid each month forever, but the tax would only be required "until the Budget is balanced." It is pointed out by the proponent of this plan that this would be helpful to the poor, would put an abundance of money in circulation, and would help end the depression and keep all the people prosperous after the elimination of the present financial difficulties. This plan is not as burdensome as the poor-man's tax, rich-man's money plan and has the advantages of not taxing the money out of the poor for the rich, and on an average would furnish much more money to each family, not for only one time as mentioned and proposed in the poor-man's tax, rich-man's money plan, but each month as long as our Government stands, unless sooner repealed. Let us see just how much money each month this weekly plan would furnish to a family of father and mother and 10 children, with the father 55, the mother 50, and the children 18, 16, 14, 12, 11, 9, 7, 5, 3, and 1, respectively. Their ages total 201, so under this plan this family would get $201 each month forever, while under the poor-man's tax, rich-man's money plan, this same family would get only $120 once in a lifetime, and have return it at once by a most vicious sales-tax device.

Of course the former plan would put much more money in circulation, but would it be a good plan? And, is either it or the other plan a good plan? None of these plans that provide a sales tax are good. They are all vicious in the extreme. The best of these plans are only temporary expedients and if used at all should be used for just as short a period as possible with only a tax of 1 cent per month per dollar to be paid by stamps attached to the currency. Unless Congress votes at once to relieve the present financial depression and the big bankers are willing to cooperate and help save my country, rather than see the present suffering of the people continue I would vote and support to the limit, a measure to provide stamp money bearing 1 cent tax each month for the purpose of delivering to each poor person each month $1 for each year of his age, until the prices of farm products are on a parity with our currency, so as to enable our farmers and others to pay their debts as easily as they anticipated when they made them. I will support this kind of a measure in desperation and for the purpose of bringing back prosperity and saving my people. This kind of a course should not be necessary but if we must adopt it we should provide for enough relief to get results and be sure that the additional tax burden is made as light as possible.

Congress, if it will, can give our people sufficient currency, both in volume and velocity, to overcome, at once the present depression without resorting to the tactics I have just been discussing. Congress should do something that is reasonable and just to solve our present problems and failing in this, it may and will be eventually stampeded into doing things that are extreme in every sense of the word.

To my mind, there can be no permanent economic relief without Congress taking from the big bankers all control of the inflation and deflation of our currency and exercising these functions, with a broader and more elastic currency base.

There are numerous ways for the broadening of the base of our currency. I certainly do not want fiat money but our money can be inflated in volume and velocity so as to overcome our present economic ills without issuing a dollar with less base or security than is now behind our currency and our Government bonds.

I am throughly convinced that our Government bonds can be quickly retired, our farm loans refinanced on a most satisfactory basis at a tremendous saving to all our people and the Nation, our farmers placed on a parity with the bankers, and the depression permanently cured by the monetization of farm lands, farm products, and other equally safe property of our people. If proper currency laws are enacted, there will be no reason, whatever for emergency currency measures.

Mr. Chairman, I said a little while ago, it was most difficult to secure the passage of real, honest-to-goodness, farm-relief legislation because of the diversity of interest and conflicting views of Members of Congress. This is equally true of legislation to consolidate and eliminate unnecessary bureaus and Federal positions, or to bring about real economies in governmental expenditures. Everybody loudly and repeatedly proclaims that they are in favor of these things and yet each one favors his own kind of farm relief, his own idea of the elimination of bureaus, or the consolidation of governmental activities and each Member has his own friends that he would rather see retained in office. I do not say Members of Congress are dishonest about these matters. They are only human and honestly differ about these various proposals.

For these reasons and because of my illimitable faith in President-elect Roosevelt, I am very happy to help give him all the power he wishes in these matters and to provide that Congress can not tear down and destroy his work, except by a two-thirds majority veto. He will have a Herculean task, which can only be handled properly by some one with almost unlimited power. No individual Member of Congress, nor any groups of Members of Congress, nor the Congress as a whole have ever been able to even approach a proper solution of the problem of a real efficient economic, consolidation, elimination and readjustment of the bureaus and activities of the Federal Government. I am therefore most happy to help give President-elect Roosevelt the necessary authority and power to inaugurate this great and very essential economic program which can not be put into effect otherwise.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss for a while this afternoon the proposal to give the incoming President great powers in connection with the financial affairs of this Government.

In the begginning I wish to say that I fuly realize my views on this matter would be wholly untenable except it is my fear that this country is to-day in a greater crisis than it has ever been during its history, war not excepted. The one difficult thing in meeting this crisis is that there is no cooperation such as we would have if we were in war with a foreign enemy. There has never been a government that has gone down to failure except that at the moment of its failure its financial affairs were in bad shape.

The people will hesitate long before giving up any kind of government they may have except the tax burden become so excessive that government is no longer a benefit to them but a burden; and we have practically reached this situation in the United States to-day. The Government of the United States to-day is $21,000,000,000 in debt. The Federal debt was $27,000,000,000 at the end of the war, but this $21,000,000,000 which we now owe is a much greater burden upon the American people than the $27,000,000,000 was at the end of the war. At the end of the war everyone had work, agriculture was prosperous, industry was prosperous, mining was prosperous, the country was wealthy. To-day there are 12,000,000 unemployed in this country, and those who are employed are working part time; agriculture is bankrupt; yet, these are the people who must bear this burden of the Government debt.

In addition to that, the truth is the public debt of the United States is actually many billions of dollars more than it was at the end of the war. It is true that the Federal debt is some $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 less than it was at the end of the war, but in the meantime the States, counties, cities, and school districts have all bonded themselves for billions and billions of dollars—the amount I know not, but we all know that the public debt, Federal, State, and local, to-day is many billions of dollars more than it was at the end of the war in 1918; and it makes no difference whether that bonded debt is Federal or local, it is the same people who must pay it.

Now, let us come to the Federal Government. For three years we have gone into debt. The last fiscal year we went in debt 57 cents every time we spent a dollar, and for the fourth year we are going in debt. This Congress has a poorer record than any previous Congress. The last session of this Congress at least made an effort to bring in a revenue bill which would meet the expenditures, but this session of this Congress is making no effort. Now, we can not go on like this indefinitely, spending more than is taken in.

It is my fear that the democracy of the United States can not carry on this policy for five consecutive years without going down to defeat the same as preceding governments have gone down to defeat when they have followed a similar policy. This is the crisis I think is confronting our country.

The gentleman from Georgia just spoke about the private mortgage indebtedness. If this Government can not get its financial house in order, I can see no possible hope for the farmer, for industry, or for the individual in debt.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman inferred this Government should levy another drastic tax in order to balance the Budget. Does not the gentleman think that reducing the cost of government is another way of balancing the Budget?

Mr. McGUGIN. That is what I am coming to. Now, it appears that Congress will not reduce expenses and will not provide new revenues, but Congress has at least this defense to offer: In this country we have built up a system of minority blocs and factions whose interest in Government is what they can get out of the Treasury. I doubt if it is possible for any Congress to break down the power of these minority factions. If 435 Members come here and have the courage to hurl defiance into the teeth of these minority factions, probably they will be replaced by others who will give in to the minority factions.

I do not believe you can ever reach public expense except we have a President who has the courage to hurl defiance into the teeth of the minority blocs and say, "This country shall not perish; this country shall stand, minority blocs, or no minority blocs." We have the assurance that Mr. Roosevelt is willing to do this. We should give him the power to do it. If Congress can not or will not, then let us not sit here in Congress while the Government goes head on into greater debt and refuse to give the next President power to do this. Let us give him the chance. Then, there is another reason: The people of this country look to the President. They hold him responsible. The public generally fails to recognize the constitutional dividing line between the powers of the Congress and those of the President. They hold the President responsible. That is the frame of mind of the American people. We should give this power to Mr. Roosevelt and give him his opportunity.

Some say the veterans are opposed to this legislation proposing to give such power to the incoming President. I do not know. The veterans were opposed to Mr. Hoover. They voted against him very largely. Can it be said that the veterans have lost confidence in Mr. Roosevelt since last November when they contributed greatly to his election?

The time has come when the people of this country, Republicans and Democrats alike, veterans and nonveterans, the entire 122,000,000 people of this country, must place their trust and confidence in the man who is going to occupy the White House after March 4, not because he is a Democrat, but because he is the President of the United States in a great crisis. The hope of this country lies in his ability to meet a crisis which the people apparently are unable to meet and which the Congress apparently is unable to meet.

I know the Democrats denied similar power to Mr. Hoover. I know that when Mr. Hoover was given power to consolidate and did consolidate that the Democratic membership in this House a few weeks ago rejected his program. I think it made a mistake, but this is no time for a tug of war between Republicans and Democrats. It is no time for us Republicans to make the same mistake the Democrats did simply because they made it.

I think the time has come when we should give to the next President the power to do for the country that which must be done, if I view the matter correctly. When we come to giving him that power, I want to give him greater power than was requested for or given to Mr. Hoover. One reason is because I think the emergency is greater to-day than it was a year ago.

I think the emergency is greater to-day than it was a month ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. McGUGIN. With that in mind, I think it is imperative that he should have greater power, and I am in favor of giving the next President of the United States power to reorganize the Government of the United States; to abolish bureaus, if he wants to; even abolish Cabinet offices, which are not created by the Constitution, if he wants to; and to reduce, in whole or in part, any compensation on the public pay roll, if he wants to. I am not afraid to intrust to him this power. Why? Because I do not believe that any man who is President of the United States would abuse such power when that power be given to him to save our country from a crisis which we have been trying to climb out for three years, but have made no headway.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert therein a copy of a bill that I am introducing, and also to include certain excerpts closely related to the same.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, newspaper editorials or things of that character?

Mr. PATMAN. No, sir; I never put newspaper editorials in the RECORD.

Mr. MICHENER. You said excerpts from what?

Mr. PATMAN. Excerpts from my own remarks heretofore made, and other information; nothing in the way of a newspaper article, I assure the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, in regard to giving the President of the United States the power to consolidate bureaus and commissions, I have no objection to abolishing a large number of commissions that we have in Washington. I could name some that I should like to see abolished. We can reduce expenditures even in the Agriculture Department; I believe we could safely reduce its expenditures 50 per cent and not interfere with the good work that the department is doing for the farmers of this Nation.

NO DICTATOR

But I am not willing to make a dictator out of the President of the United States. I have the utmost confidence in President-elect Roosevelt. I know if this duty is given him he will perform it to the very best of his knowledge and ability. I have no doubt about that. But I also realize that he can not personally do this work. He must intrust it to other people. The question is, Who will do this work for him, and whom should we trust to do it? Shall we permit a few publicly unknown men, who hold no official position, responsible to the people in no way, to get together and advise the President? And would he do what they would recommend? He must take the advice of some one. Or should he take the advice of the Congress of the United States?

I believe that the Congress of the United States can do everything that we would ask a President to do under this proposal. I am going along and vote for the proposal just as far as I can, as long as I do not believe it is in violation of the Constitution of the United States; but I have in mind Article I, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States, which says that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Further, I have in mind a number of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States in which it is held:

It is within the power of Congress to vest in executive officers the power to make necessary rules and regulations to enforce the provisions of a law, but this is not deemed to extend to the making of rules to subvert the statute.

A number of cases can be cited.

CONGRESS CAN NOT DELEGATE ITS POWER

Another case that is well known, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, is the case which holds that Congress can not delegate its power to make laws to an executive department or to an administrative officer, nor does a power delegated to such department or officer carry with it the authority to repeal, extend, or modify an act of Congress.

So here is the Supreme Court of the United States as authority for the statement that we can not delegate the power to the President of the United States to repeal, extend, or modify an act of Congress. In other words, if appropriations are made by the Congress for a certain specific purpose, under the Constitution of the United States, could the President turn around and say, "I am going to nullify that act of Congress by refusing to permit it to go into operation"? If this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holds good, and it is supported by many subsequent decisions, I doubt that such authority would be constitutional.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does that decision go far enough to say that when the President makes such an order it becomes effective provided the Congress does not pass a joint resolution against it?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, that is changing the Constitution. The Constitution provides that whenever a bill is passed the President has the right to veto it, and if he vetoes the bill then Congress has the right to override his veto. The proposal under discussion is changing it around entirely by giving the Executive law-making power and permitting Congress to veto it, if two-thirds of the Representatives vote in favor of vetoing it. It is changing the constitutional set-up entirely.

Mr. McGUGIN. If that be true, then the bill we passed last spring, which let President Hoover consolidate activities, leaving it to either House to reject such consolidation, was unconstitutional.

Mr. PATMAN. I have not looked into that, but any delegation of power that permits the Executive to repeal, extend, or modify an act of Congress the Supreme Court says is unconstitutional.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Do not the present provisions of the tariff law permit the President to increase or lower tariff rates?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. He can under the Constitution make rules and regulations if the power is given to him by Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question on the constitutional matter?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to suggest that the mere fact that a law carries a provision authorizing either House to set aside an Executive order does not in any way make such a law constitutional. It can not operate to make such a power constitutional. It must be constitutional in the first instance.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I agree with the gentleman.

BUYING POWER IN HAND OF PEOPLE

I now want to talk to you about the matter of getting buying power into the hands of the people.

It is true that in this session of Congress the bill to pay the adjusted-service certificates will not be insisted upon. There was no reason why we should do a perfectly futile thing. It would be futile to pass the bill in the House of Representatives and send it to a Senate that is composed of the same Members that defeated the bill at the last session of Congress. So we decided we would not insist upon the bill at this session of the Congress, but we are working on a bill now for the special session, and have it just about completed. We expect to have it in the hands of the Members of the House and Senate before the end of next week and we will insist upon the passage of the bill at the coming special session of the Congress.

COUNTRY WILL BE BENEFITED

In asking for the passage of this legislation we are not seeking to benefit a particular group or class. If we can not show that the country will be benefited, and that it is necessary to make this payment to help the country, we are not entitled to win and we are not entitled to see the legislation enacted into law. But if we can show that this legislation can be used as a vehicle to start our country back on the road to prosperity and that it will be helpful along this line, it is certainly worthy of consideration by Congress. To-day the question of buying power is a question that we must deal with. It is not a matter of overproduction. We have underconsumption, and no informed person will claim we have overproduction. If the people of America and the world had the buying power to purchase what they actually need for the comforts and necessities of life, we would not have any overproduction of any commodity. The serious question that confronts us is lack of buying power, and anything that will get buying power into the hands of people who will use it to purchase is something that we should consider.

ACTUAL MONEY IN PROPORTION TO BANK DEPOSITS

To-day we have in the banks of the Nation about $45,000,000,000 in deposits. We have in actual money in all the vaults of the banks of the Nation about $700,000,000, or less than 2 per cent with which to pay these deposits. This does not mean that all the banks are insolvent. They are not insolvent. This means, however, that they have a very small amount of cash with which to pay the liabilities of their depositors.

MONEY AND CREDITS

On the other hand, one-tenth of our business is done with actual money and about nine-tenths of our business is done with credit or checks; but let it be remembered that a large number of our people do not have access to the banks. They have no connection with any banking institutions, have no checking account, and they are not receiving checks for their labor or for the products that they sell from their farms.

They have no standing with the banking institutions. The only way you can reach these people is by increasing the amount of currency now in circulation. It is true, if the credit is increased you will reach a certain class. We have plenty of credit available, but who can get it? The people do not have the security to get it. The banks will not loan the money. I do not criticize the banks for that. They owe a debt and obligation to their depositors to keep the banking institution in a safe condition.

There is no incentive to loan money on any security, because the one borrowing can not make a profit and can not pay the money back. Our credit facilities are broken down. The Congress can not force credit out. We can force money out. If we force money out into consumers' hands, we are going to increase the purchase of goods, and if goods are purchased, prices will go up. There will then be an incentive to purchase goods before they are too high.

HOW MUCH MONEY NECESSARY

I do not believe that $2,200,000,000 will bring the country back. Two years ago it might. But before this thing is over, it is likely that it will take $5,000,000,000 to start it back. We do not know how much it is going to take, but we should do everything in our power to relieve conditions.

NOT FIAT MONEY

A couple of years ago, when we were contending for the payment of the certificates by issuing currency, they called us radicals. Now, we are conservatives and reactionaries compared with the ones advocating propositions that are now being advocated by these conservatives. Then the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, condemned our proposition as a fiat-money scheme. We are not advocating the issuance of fiat money.

He came before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House a few days ago and advocated the enactment of the Glass-Steagall bill, and if there ever was a fiat money, or rubber-money scheme, the Glass-Steagall bill is that kind of a scheme.

It is all right, according to Mr. Mills, to issue currency and let the National City Bank and the Chase National Bank have it. That is fine; it is a good system; but if you issue it to let the people have it, there is something wrong, and it is unsound and rubber money.

WHERE IS MONEY?

In 1912 we had nearly $2,000,000,000 in the vaults of the banks of this Nation. That was way back in 1912. To-day we have just about one-third as much money—$700,000,000. Where has that money gone? It has been drained from the small banks, and that is why those small institutions have closed their doors. The money has gone into the large banks and the vaults of the Federal reserve banks.

If something is not done to put money back among the people and in these small banking institutions, you are going to see more of these small banks breaking than you have seen in the past. It is impossible for them to survive unless they have money to do business on. Ten thousand of them have failed during the last 12 years. We have only 18,800 banks in our country to-day and only one-third of them are in the Federal reserve system. Therefore, only one-third of them can get the benefit of the Federal reserve act and the other two-thirds are dependent upon money that the people place in the vaults of their institutions. Money has been drawn from them. There is only one way to correct it and that is to put money out in some way that will cause it to be placed in those small banking institutions all over this country.

SPEND MONEY AT HOME

In connection with the payment of the adjusted-service certificates a campaign should be carried on at the same time to encourage the people to spend their money at home. If you have a dollar to spend and you send it off to Chicago or New York, if you live in Texas, you not only deprive your neighbors and friends of the possibility of getting that dollar to use for themselves, but you deprive your local bank of an opportunity of using that dollar as a reserve on which it may loan your neighbors and friends 10 additional credit dollars to do business in that town. Our proposal will place money into every nook and corner of this Nation and into every small banking institution and with the small storekeepers. We should carry on a campaign in connection with the advocacy of our proposal to keep our money at home in order that everybody may get the benefit of it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. For a short question.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then I expect that on Monday the gentleman will support the Crowther bill to keep our money at home to purchase home products.

Mr. PATMAN. If I thought that would help, I should be glad to do it. I am very sorry, but I can not agree with the gentleman. Thirty-three countries have depreciated currrency. We can not raise the currency of those countries. There is no power on earth given to us to change the currency system of either of those countries. We will not be helping ourselves by levying an additional tariff. I do not think that is going to help, although people who have studied the question believe that it will, but I do not believe it will. There is one way to do the same thing, however, and that is to depreciate our own currency.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

EVILS OF DEFLATION

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Would not the gentleman rather say that instead of depreciating our own currency we should reduce it to its normal purchasing power?

Mr. PATMAN. I expect that the depreciation would last only to its normal purchasing power. I would not want to destroy the currency. You can talk about the evils of inflation. Think about the evils of deflation for a moment. When we have deflation, people lose their homes; they lose everything that they have on earth. Our country is being destroyed by deflation. Why do not you say something about it? Why talk about the evils of inflation all of the time? In Germany and in Russia, where they had inflation to the extent that their currency systems were destroyed, did anybody lose his home? No. Not one person in those countries lost his home. People saved their homes and paid their debts, although they did it with an almost worthless currency. So, as between the two, which are you going to take—extreme deflation or extreme inflation? I say take neither, but return the dollar to its normal purchasing power in order that the people may be permitted to pay their debts.

(At this point Mr. PATMAN's time expired, and he was yielded 10 minutes additional by Mr. CANNON.)

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. Did not the inflation policy in the countries mentioned liberate millions of debtors; the masses of the people?

THREE PER CENT INTEREST

Mr. PATMAN. It did. Inflation destroyed many of the creditors, but in our country what do we have? We have people losing their homes all over this Nation. There is no way to stop it unless we expand our currency. People can not pay the interest they are forced to pay with the cheap wages and cheap commodities they have. The only way that you can increase wages and price of commodities is by expanding the currency. People should not be required to pay the high rate of interest they are required to pay. I believe the time will come in this country when no one will be required to pay more than 3 per cent interest on any loan. Why should they? Take the banking interests. They have a monopoly; this monopoly should be exercised in the interest of the whole people. They can take one dollar that is placed there in a savings account, and can not only loan that one dollar, on which they are paying you 3 per cent interest, but they can loan thirty-three and a third dollars on that one dollar, and on the thirty-three and a third dollars get interest upon every one of them. If our banking system were operated in cooperation with the Government in the interest of the general welfare, the time would come when no one would have to pay more than 3 per cent interest.

SMALL BANKS OF NATION

The small bankers of the Nation have been criticized and censured. Many of them have been criticized in a way they are not entitled to be criticized. Banks have become insolvent and the directors were not responsible for it. They were doing everything in their power to serve their depositors and stockholders, but the cause has been the concentration of this money into the hands of a few large banking systems, and into the hands of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I just wanted to state that Senator WHEELER of Montana, in a statement before the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures the other day, showed, to his own satisfaction at least, and to the satisfaction of some of the Members, although I am not expressing my opinion, that the value of the dollar could be raised in foreign countries by this country. I should like to hear that statement answered.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, perhaps it can. After all, it is just deflating the purchasing power of our own dollar.

Now, in connection with this bill to pay adjusted-service certificates, I think it will include a provision that the law which now permits national banks to put up Government bonds with the Secretary of the Treasury and receive in return for those bonds new currency that is printed over at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will be repealed if there is danger of inflation after the money we propose to have issued is placed into circulation.

Under the present law the national banks of the Nation may put up $1,500,000,000 worth of Government bonds, drawing as much as 3⅜ per cent interest, and receive in return therefor the same amount in money. Of course, they keep as a reserve, in lawful money, not gold, 5 per cent to pay the money issued. At the same time the banks are getting the use of the money; they are getting the interest on the bonds they have on deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no reason why the Government of the United States should pay to a few large bankers a bonus, a subsidy, a premium to take the money of the people and loan it out to them at high interest.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield briefly to the gentleman.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. If the Government should issue the money directly, how much worse a condition will the country be in?

NO BETTER PLAN CAN BE OFFERED

Mr. PATMAN. Well, it will be in a better condition. Thomas Jefferson penned the words in the Constitution that Congress shall coin money and regulate its value. That privilege has been farmed out to a few banks. They are doing it, and they are not doing it in the interest of the general welfare, because they owe a duty to their stockholders and not to the general welfare. Therefore it is the duty of Congress to take that power away from a few and bring it back to this body, where the Constitution said it originally belonged. If the Congress will do that, that money can be issued in the interest of the general welfare.

Do you not think it is a ridiculous, idiotic system for our own Government to issue $100,000,000 worth of Government bonds, drawing 3⅜ per cent interest, and let the Chase National Bank buy those bonds and give the Government credit for the bonds, not be out one penny on earth, but just give the Government credit, and then the Chase National Bank take those identical bonds and deliver them back to Mr. Mills, the Secretary of the Treasury, and have Mr. Mills call up the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and tell the man in charge there to print $100,000,000 in new money for the Chase National Bank, and that money is printed and delivered to the Chase National Bank? At the same time the Chase National Bank has the use of that new money; it also clips the coupons on those bonds and gets the interest from the Government on the Government bonds. Can you conceive of a more idiotic system in any country on the earth than that very system which we have to-day? It can not be defended. There is only one way, to my mind, to correct it. If there is a better way, let us use it. This is no time to pass legislation just for veterans or just for anybody else unless it will promote the general welfare. If there is a way by which you can put this money into circulation, into every nook and corner of this Nation, that is a better way than the plan we have offered, let us have your plan and we will be in favor of it. But if you can not offer a better plan, let us provide for the payment of the certificates. Such payment will cause a bureau to be abolished and the country saved a million dollars a year. Further, we can repeal the law requiring an appropriation of $112,000,000 a year for the next 12 years to provide a sinking fund to retire the certificates in 1945.

POSTAL SAVINGS

Now, in order to show you that conditions in regard to banking need some attention, I invite your attention to the last Federal Reserve Bulletin. I hold a copy in my hand. On page 43 will be found a statement of the United States postal savings. I invite your attention to the fact that in July, 1930, there were in all the postal savings departments of the United States, $180,000,000. That amount has increased each month until last month it was $881,000,000. To-day it is more than $900,000,000. It has increased more than $700,000,000 in less than two years' time. What does that indicate to you? Does it not indicate that our banking system is falling down in some way, and that something must be done by the Congress to relieve that situation? Did you know that all the banks in the Nation to-day did not have enough money in their vaults to pay the postal-savings deposits? They do not. In all the vaults in all the banks of this Nation you will only find $700,000,000, whereas they owe the depositors in postal-savings banks more than $900,000,000 in addition to owing their other depositors $45,000,000,000. That should certainly be some indication to this Congress that something must be done to relieve the paralyzed banking and credit situation in our country. It must be done.

I hope that when this bill is printed in the RECORD you will give it close consideration with a view to helping the country. If we can not show it will start our country back on the road to prosperity, we are not entitled to favorable consideration.

YOU CAN NOT FATTEN THE HERD BY FEEDING THE BULL

You can not fatten the herd by feeding the bull; money must reach the people in some way. Helping Mellons and Morgans will not help the people.

Provide the American people with enough cash money for their daily hand to hand transactions.

Are we savages that we should sink to barter?

Expand the currency under safeguards to prevent inflation and an unreasonable rise in prices.

Charles E. Mitchell, chairman of the board of the National City Bank of New York, which uses the Government's credit free of charge, pays himself a salary of millions of dollars a year. His institution is permitted under existing law to deposit Government bonds due in 1945 or 1951 with the Secretary of the Treasury and receive new money in return therefor; and at the same time he uses the money, he will continue to clip the coupons on the bonds and collect the interest on them from the Government. Why should not the veterans who hold Government bonds payable in 1945 have the privilege of exchanging them for new money, a Government circulating obligation?

Abolish the useless commission that is costing the taxpayers a million dollars a year.

Save $112,000,000 every year for 12 years.

Wake up. Show the world we still have "the keys to the powder house."

STOP THE CURRENCY FAMINE

No more wooden money or paper scrip. The Constitution says that Congress shall issue money and regulate its value.

Michigan will get $85,407,400 and Maryland will get $31,145,831, which will save the banks. Small banks in other States also need help. Read what each State will get.

The plan is to pay the adjusted-service certificates to 3,555,058 veterans of the World War. The remainder due about $2,200,000,000.

The Government to issue United States notes—currency—in payment.

The currency to remain outstanding as a permanent addition to our circulating medium; no one will be paying interest on it.

CURRENCY PLANKS OF POLITICAL PLATFORMS

The plan will not violate the currency planks of either the Democratic or Republican platforms. The plan will not involve unsound or fiat money and will not jeopardize the gold standard.

Liquidate the sinking fund and repeal the adjusted compensation act, which will result in abolishing a section of the Veterans' Administration, which is costing almost a million dollars annually.

A GREAT SAVING

Eliminate from the appropriations made by Congress for the sinking fund the $112,000,000 annually for 12 years, or a saving of almost one and one-half billion dollars.

The adjusted-service certificates can be paid without a bond issue, without an increase in taxes, without increasing interest, without further unbalancing the Budget, and without increasing the national debt.

IDLE DOLLARS

More idle box cars placed on the railroad tracks will not increase car loadings, neither will more idle dollars placed in the large banks that are not functioning in the interest of producers or borrowers help the people. It is highly essential that money reach the pockets of the masses of the people in every city and community. They can not borrow money; they do not have the security to offer, and besides the banks are continuing to hoard and declining to make loans.

REDUCING GOLD CONTENT OF DOLLAR

Conditions are too serious to consider reducing the number of grains of gold in a dollar; there is a doubt about the constitutionality of such a plan; it would take years to settle the question in the courts. The same effect can be obtained by expanding on a gold base of present weight and fineness without delay and without doubt of constitutionality.

EVERY ARGUMENT ANSWERED IN NEW BILL

During the year 1932 I crossed the boundary lines of 45 States in the United States while making speeches for a "new deal." I spoke to mass meetings, civic clubs, real-estate organizations, bankers, chambers of commerce, veterans' organizations, and to audiences representing many other organizations and groups. I engaged in joint debate in different sections of the Nation on the question of paying the adjusted-service certificates in cash with United States notes. I believe that I am familiar with every argument that is made against the proposal, and I believe that I can answer all such arguments to the satisfaction of any unbiased and unprejudiced person.

The bill that is now being presented is air tight. No logical argument can be made against it. It merely allows the veterans to use the Government credit without cost to the Government in the same way and manner that the bankers are now using the Government credit and getting paid for using it. The general welfare will be promoted because buying power will be placed in the hands of the people.

H. R. 1, FOR SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

I have prepared, with the assistance of other Members of the House of Representatives and citizens throughout the United States, a bill, which has already been filed with the Clerk of the House for introduction at the special session of Congress, providing for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates in cash in United States notes. It is the first bill filed with the Clerk for the next session and will doubtless be H. R. 1 in the Seventy-third Congress.

The object of the bill is stated as follows:

To provide for controlled expansion of the currency and the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates.

The first section of the bill is identical with H. R. 1 and H. R. 7726, introduced and passed by the House of Representatives in the Seventy-second Congress. It merely provides for the payment and the details necessary to administer the act.

The remainder of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Payment of the face value of adjusted-service certificates under section 509 or 510 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, shall be made in United States notes not bearing interest. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue such notes in such amount as may be required to make such payment, and of the same wording, form, size, and denominations as United States notes issued under existing law, except that the wording thereon shall conform to the provisions of this act. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed jointly to prescribe rules and regulations for the delivery of such notes in payment under section 509 or 510 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended.

(b) United States notes issued pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be lawful money of the United States and shall be maintained at a parity of value with the standard unit of value fixed by law. Such notes shall be legal tender in payment of all debts and dues, public and private, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received shall be reissued. Such notes, when held by any national banking association or Federal reserve bank, may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve. The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 14, 1900, as amended (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 314 and 408), and section 26 of the Federal reserve act, as amended (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 409), are hereby made applicable to such notes in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply to United States notes.

SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the index number of the wholesale or commodity prices rises above the index number of such prices for the years 1921 to 1929, as computed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the following methods for contracting the issues of currency in the United States shall be in force and effect in the manner and to the extent prescribed in subsection (b) of this section:

(1) Abolishment of the circulation privilege extended to certain bonds of the United States under the provisions of section 29 of the Federal home loan bank act and retirement of such bonds as security for circulating notes as rapidly as practicable.

(2) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of national bank circulating notes and the retirement of such notes from circulation as rapidly as practicable.

(3) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of Federal reserve notes secured by direct obligations of the United States.

(4) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of Federal reserve notes secured only by gold or gold certificates.

(5) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of Federal reserve notes secured by notes, drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, or bankers' acceptances which are not issued in direct benefit of commerce, industry, or agriculture.

(b) Any such method of contracting currency issues shall be applicable when the Secretary of the Treasury finds that its application is necessary in order to maintain the index number of wholesale all commodity prices at the approximate level of the index number of such prices for the years 1921 to 1929 and issues an order setting forth such finding. Each such order shall prescribe such rules and regulations as are necessary and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this section with respect to the method of contraction made applicable in the order. The secretary shall make such methods applicable only in the order in which they are set forth in subsection (a) of this section, but he shall make such methods applicable as rapidly as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. When any such order is issued with respect to Federal reserve notes, the Federal Reserve Board shall take such action as may be necessary to facilitate the enforcement of the order.

SEC. 4. Section 505 (authorizing annual appropriations ending with the year 1946 for the payment of adjusted-service certificates) of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, except the first sentence thereof, is hereby repealed. Amounts in the "adjusted-service certificate fund" are hereby authorized to be made available for the expenses of printing and engraving United States notes issued under this act, for paying fractional parts of a dollar which can not be paid in United States notes issued under the provisions of this act, and for paying the principal and interest on or in respect of loans pursuant to the provisions of subsection (c) of section 509 of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended.

SEC. 5. This act may be cited as the "controlled expansion act, 1933."

CONTROLLED EXPANSION

Remember, while the country is being helped by the addition of this new money into the channels of trade, the veterans will only be receiving the same privileges that are granted to national banks.

It is a controlled-expansion measure.

The bill provides that if a need for contraction of the currency should subsequently arise, the following steps are to be taken to provide for such contraction in an orderly manner:

(1) Individual national banks are permitted by the Glass-Borah rider on the home loan bank bill to deposit United States Government bonds with the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Treasury is required to issue national bank notes—new money—to them in return. This privilege is permitted to the extent of about $1,000,000,000. The Government bonds which are deposited to secure this currency continue to pay interest to national banks. The national banks in question thus derive a double income from the bonds. They receive interest on the bonds and they have the use of the money issued to them on the security of the bonds. This gives a bonus to these bankers. If the Glass-Borah rider is used to its full extent, they will receive about $33,000,000 a year in interest on the bonds, and the billion dollars in new money issued to them will be worth another $60,000,000 to them each year. Our bill provides that contraction of the currency, if contraction should subsequently be found necessary, shall be effected in the first instance by progressive limitations on the operation of the Glass-Borah law to the point of doing away with the privilege altogether.

(2) National banks, under the old law, have deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury about $700,000,000 in United States Government bonds and have received on these bonds $700,000,000 in currency. They are deriving a double income from these 2 per cent bonds. After our bill is passed, if it should be found that the currency is overexpanded and that the progressive limitations on the privilege extended to national banks under the Glass-Borah rider do not sufficiently contract it, then the Secretary of the Treasury is to call upon the national banks to redeem the 2 per cent bonds, and he must then retire the currency issued on them.

(3) The 12 Federal reserve banks, under the Glass-Steagall Act, are permitted to offer United States Government securities to the 12 Federal reserve agents as collateral security for new issues of Federal reserve currency—new money. After the passage of our bill, if it is considered necessary to contract the currency, this privilege in the Glass-Steagall Act is to be abolished.

(4) Any Federal reserve bank may now obtain Federal reserve currency by offering gold to its Federal reserve agent. After the passage of our bill, if contraction of the currency is considered necessary, and if the remedies provided in the preceding paragraphs have been applied and have not sufficiently contracted it, then the provision in the Federal reserve act as amended providing for the issuance of Federal reserve currency on the collateral security of gold shall be abolished and Federal reserve currency so issued shall be immediately retired.

(5) The Federal reserve banks were not expected to furnish United States currency to foreign commercial banks and corporations on the security of the debt paper of the customers of those foreign commercial banks and corporations. Irrespective of all other considerations, they should be prohibited from continuing the advancement of Federal reserve currency to foreigners. After the passage of our bill, if contraction of the currency is considered necessary, the Federal reserve banks shall be prohibited from obtaining new Federal reserve currency on the collateral security of the debts of foreigners and all other paper purchased in the open discount market. It is better to honor the debt of our Government on the unimpeachable collateral security of the certificates the Government issued to the veterans than to create, issue, and advance new currency to foreigners for the benefit of foreigners to be used by them in competition with American citizens in every productive industry of our national life.

The normal increase in our population, in national wealth and national income, and our accumulation of monetary gold covering the period of the past 50 years justify the conviction that the increase in our circulation medium provided by this bill would be required permanently without invoking any of the means provided for contracting the currency.

WHAT EACH STATE WILL RECEIVE

If the bill providing for the payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates is enacted into law, the holders of these certificates will receive the following amounts, after deducting prior loans and interest to October 1, 1931. Counties receiving more than $1,000,000 are listed. The amount received by any other county may be determined by taking the 1930 census and multiplying the per capita figure for the State by the population. My speech made in the House of Representatives February 18, 1932, discloses amount each county in the United States will receive.

INFLATION

Inflation means an unjustified expansion. We are not proposing inflation; we are proposing expanding the currency because of a great national exigency. The expansion is controlled by automatic contraction so that it can not go too far.

There is not the least danger of this bill causing inflation. The contraction feature is added to answer the arguments of our opponents. It is a complete answer.

SOUND MONEY

The Democratic platform stands for sound money. We are in complete accord with that principle. We all believe in an honest, sound dollar, but the present dollar is not a sound dollar. It will purchase from two to ten times as much in cotton, wheat, and certain securities as it would have purchased when most of our debts were created. As ex-Senator Robert L. Owen suggested:

> It is a thief stealing the property of the debtor under the color and protection of law; it is stealing the savings of a lifetime from innocent people who are the victims of a national financial mismanagement or worse.

INCREASED PRICES

With rising value of commodities, of stocks, bonds, lands, and property, the courage and optimism of the people will be stimulated and the spirit of the depression will pass away. With the rise of commodity values merchants will more readily buy and factories produce, and those who have been waiting for a reaction of the stock market will soon begin buying stocks, and you will find that stocks which are now far below their book value will steadily rise.

As the value of commodities rises and as the value of property rises, the people will be stimulated to consume more and to gratify their needs and desires by buying, because they will realize and anticipate the increasing value of their property. With increased consumption will come increased production and employment.

WHERE DID THE OTHER BILLION DOLLARS GO?

In 1931 a law was enacted permitting veterans to borrow 50 per cent of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates. About $1,000,000,000 were loaned to the veterans in this way. Conditions would have been much worse in this country had that payment not been made on account of the collapse in Europe occurring at that time. This payment was made in credit and not in money. Credit is soon extinguished, but new money becomes a basis for additional credit. In fact, for every $1 of actual money about $10 in credit can be loaned to the people by the banks.

General Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, made a report on how the billion dollars were spent. He said that less than 7 per cent of it was spent in a way that the veterans received no practical benefits therefrom; that 65 per cent went for comforts and conveniences of life; 20 per cent for investment purposes, including payments on homes; 8 per cent for automobiles, and the other 7 per cent as indicated.

BANKS NEED THE MONEY

When the banks have accumulated unemployed cash, they will have a strong motive to lend it for productive purposes. When the banks have an oversupply of cash, they will no longer be afraid of their depositors withdrawing cash; and, what is more important, the depositors will not be afraid of the banks as they have been in the past.

EXPANSION OF CURRENCY NECESSARY

No country has ever got out of a depression without some kind of expansion.

The important thing to keep in mind now is that if the expansion is applied to spending rather than investment, it will not necessarily kill the patient.

MYSTERIOUS MONEY PROBLEM

Even the money problem, which frightened off so many potential inquirers, is in fact largely a matter of plain common sense, and most of it can be understood by anyone who is prepared to take a little trouble, if only it is presented without jargon and with as few technical terms as possible. It may be difficult enough to decide what ought to be done about money; but there is no real reason why this vital problem can not be intelligently discussed by ordinary people.

In hard times, recovery can begin only by somebody spending money on a large scale.

Mr. Keynes, a distinguished British economist, says:

> At any rate, I predict with an assured confidence that the only way out is for us to discover some object which is admitted even by deadheads to be a legitimate excuse for largely increasing the expenditure of some one for something.

EXPENDITURES FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Government can issue, safely, and spend $5,000,000,000 for something. If the Government pays it on the national debt it will place more idle dollars in the hands of a few people who are holders of United States Government bonds and who will hoard it. If the running expenses of the Government are paid, it will only go to a few sections and to a few people.

Money is like blood—the faster it runs the better it is for the body.

VELOCITY OF MONEY

In 1929 there was a velocity of currency and credit of 25 to 1; that is, currency and credit turned over about every two weeks, or twenty-five times during the year. We were doing about $1,600,000,000,000 worth of business annually during the years 1929 and 1928, but now money and credits are turning over about one time a month. It has slowed up more than 50 per cent, and instead of doing $1,600,000,-000,000 worth of business a year we are doing only about one-third that amount of business. Velocity enters into this question as much as the volume; so the velocity has slowed up, and there is only one sure way to increase the velocity of money, and that is to add to the volume.

CHART SHOWS NEED OF MORE MONEY

I have before me a chart which was prepared by the National Industrial Conference Board. The best economists tell us—that is, the ones who have the reputation of being the best economists—that money should increase along with the population of the country and along with the national wealth, national income, and the monetary gold stock of the country. If it increases along with the population, wealth, income, and monetary gold stock, then the people are presumed to have sufficient money to do business with.

I want to show you here the report of the National Industrial Conference on this question. This chart has been furnished me through the courtesy of Mr. J. S. Cullinan, of Houston, Tex., one of the best informed men in the Nation on the money question. Over a period of 50 years, from 1880 to 1930, the population has increased. For every 1 person in this country in 1880 we have 2.4 people now. For every $1 of national wealth then we have $8.40 now. For every $1 of national income then we have $11.20 now. For every dollar of gold stock then we have $12.90 now.

Now, then, listen to the amount of money in circulation. How has it increased over this 50-year period of time when the ratio for population is 2.4, for national wealth 8.40, for national income 11.20, and for national gold stock 12.90?

Money in circulation now is but $4.70 for every $1 then, and per capita money in circulation for every $1 then is only $1.80 now. So if the best economists in the world are right, our circulating money has not increased along with national wealth, income, population, and monetary gold stock.

SPEED UP MONEY AND CREDITS

It has been contended heretofore that we did not need so much money in circulation, since credit was available through 30,000 banking institutions. Recently, however, 10,000 of these banking institutions have closed their doors, causing the people to lose billions of dollars in deposits. The bankers have decreased their loans until credit facilities are practically frozen. Deposits have been reduced $13,000,000,000. Money and credits are now turning over ten times a year, whereas in 1929 they were turning over twenty-five times a year. There is only one way, to my mind, that we can make up for the lack of credit and lack of velocity of money, and that is by adding more money—volume.

Theoretically, we have five and one-half billion dollars, or a billion dollars more money in circulation to-day than was in circulation in 1929. Let it not be forgotten, however, that this money is not in actual circulation. Much of it is in foreign countries; a large part of it is in hoarding by banks and individuals; in fact, it is estimated that less than $2,000,000,000 of this money is in actual circulation, whereas, in 1929, practically all of the money, more than four and one-half billion dollars, that was outstanding was in actual circulation, and in addition we had $13,000,000,000 more in deposits in actual circulation in 1929 than we have now.

WHY MORE CASH MONEY NEEDED

The assertion that 90 per cent of the business of the country is carried on by checks is often heard nowadays as an argument against increasing the supply of currency. The truth is—and it was long ago pointed out—that there are two categories into which all business transactions fall. Those in the first may be settled without currency. Those in the second require currency.

The first category embraces the transactions of—

First. Large retail business.

Second. Professional services.

Third. Wholesale trade and manufacturing.

Fourth. Export and import.

Fifth. Railway and other public works.

Sixth. Engineering and financial business.

These are usually settled by various methods without currency, as, for instance, by checks, accounts, clearing systems, etc.

The second category embraces the transactions of—

(1) Retail trade.

(2) Consumption (especially where there is no margin or only a slight margin of subsistence).

(3) Payments of money from the pocket (which even a banker must sometimes make).

(4) Wages to industrial classes, especially to unskilled or occasional laborers.

(5) Dealings between poorly paid workers.

(6) Small purchases as, for instance, stamps, telephone calls, slot-machine merchandise, taxicab, bus, street-car, and railroad fares, theater tickets, small benefactions, and many other transactions.

These have to be settled with actual physical currency.

The small amount of currency now available for the daily turnover in transactions in the second category is not sufficient even as small change for a population of 120,000,000 people. We have an appreciated currency and a currency famine. Because the dollar has a high purchasing power it has been withdrawn from the masses. We need more currency, but the currency can not be augmented by halving the value and doubling the number of pieces that now exist in the hands of the people. If such a scheme were put into effect, the purchasing power of what exists would remain unchanged in the aggregate for all transactions in the second category. The man who now pays a dollar for a railroad ticket would have to pay $2, and his two pieces of currency would achieve no more for him than one piece achieves for him now. There would not be any more currency to cover the daily turnover of transactions in the second category than there is now.

MONEY MASTERS OF WALL STREET

Since our currency is owned and managed by a private monopoly and can be issued only on a surrender of gold value or on a tender of debt paper, bankers can not give much currency to people on any debt paper other than that which the monopolistic credit masters of Wall Street are willing to receive. The people can not create the kind of debt paper the credit masters demand. They can not go into debt any deeper because they have no assets left upon which to base 2-name debt paper and they can not create new assets without hand-to-hand currency to facilitate the basic and primary exchanges set down in the second category above. It may be noted that the promissory note is not liked by the monopolistic credit masters of Wall Street. They will not buy any American farmer's note whatsoever in their privately controlled discount market; and when they take a farmer's note in by rediscount, they give it a rate less favorable than that which they give to a manufacturer's acceptance and to foreign paper from Japan and Germany and Soviet Russia and other foreign places. This is a travesty on freedom and government by the consent of the governed.

Fifty years ago England had £162,000,000 in circulation on a daily turnover for a population of less than 40,000,000 people. To-day, the United States has less than that amount in circulation on a daily turnover for 120,000,000 people.

DEBTS

The American people owed approximately $205,000,000,000 in debts in 1929, as follows:

|---|---|
| Corporations | $76,000,000,000 |
| City mortgages | 37,000,000,000 |
| Bank loans | 35,000,000,000 |
| State, county, and local | 21,000,000,000 |
| National | 20,000,000,000 |
| Farm mortgages | 9,000,000,000 |
| Life-insurance policy loans and premium notes | 3,000,000,000 |
| Retail installment paper | 3,000,000,000 |
| Pawnbrokers' loans and unlawful loans of all kinds | 1,000,000,000 |

This enormous debt can not be liquidated with such a small amount of money.

BANKRUPTCY, INFLATION, OR REVOLUTION

We may as well face the facts. This country faces either bankruptcy, expansion of the currency, or some sort of a revolution. The cotton and wheat farmers voted bonds against their property for building schoolhouses, highways, and making other improvements when wheat was worth $1 a bushel and cotton 20 cents a pound. Deflation has caused the price of wheat to decrease to 25 cents a bushel and cotton to 5 cents a pound, thereby forcing these farmers to pay the equivalent of $4 for every dollar borrowed; instead of paying 6 per cent interest on the bonds, they are now paying the equivalent of 24 per cent interest, based on the present price of farm products. The farmers' debts, interest, taxes, and other fixed charges are four times harder to pay than when the debts were contracted. The wage earner who has had his wages reduced 50 per cent is now paying the equivalent of $2 for every dollar he borrowed. Also by reason of the reduction in wages he has suffered, cost of his taxes, rent, electricity, gas, water, and other fixed charges have doubled. Based upon and by reason of the increased value of money, debts owed by the American people, aggregating $200,000,000,000 in 1929, have mounted to the equivalent of more than $400,000,000,000 in 1932. Do not be deceived, these debts can never be paid under present conditions. It will be better for a creditor to accept a dollar that will not purchase so much in a few commodities than not to be able to collect any dollar at all.

Our people must be permitted to pay their debts with approximately the same amount of labor, securities, or produce as were necessary when the debts were contracted.

DISHONEST DOLLARS

The dollar that is now collected on a 1929 debt is a dishonest dollar. It is worth from 50 per cent to 400 per cent more than it was worth then. It is an economic fact that deflation cheats the man in debt just as much as undue inflation cheats the creditor. We are not asking to cheat the creditors, but we are asking to give the debtor a square deal by restoring the value of the dollar to its 1928–29 purchasing power.

INCREASE WHEAT AND COTTON PRICES

The argument is made that an unbearable burden will be placed on the consumer if the price of cotton and wheat is increased. Let us see how much there is to this argument.

In a 5-cent package of crackers there is wheat worth ⅛ cent and the retail price of 5 cents for this article is the same now as when wheat sold for over $1.65 a bushel. In a loaf of bread, at the present starvation price of wheat, there is wheat worth ⅜ cent. How about cotton? For the cotton in a $1 shirt the farmer only receives three-fourths of a cent at the present price. We simply ask that the planter get 2 cents to 2½ cents for the cotton that is in a $1 shirt and the wheat grower from 1¼ cents to 1½ cents for the wheat that is in a loaf of bread.

DEPLORABLE CONDITIONS

The conditions disclosed by many letters I receive would pull at the heartstrings of any decent man or woman. One of the letters I received this week stated:

> Heart-rending things happen right here in our community. Old people who owe a little mortgage on their homes are being pushed out for the reason they can not meet interest and taxes, and the poor old things have produced twice enough farm products to meet their obligations, if they could get a decent price.

POOR PEOPLE ARE THE MARKET

The farmers, wage earners, and people who work for salaries are purchasers of 80 per cent of all goods and services. They still have the consuming power, but do not have the purchasing power on account of low prices of certain commodities, which has resulted in unemployment and reduced wages. As the price of gold increases, the price of commodities and everything else decreases, except taxes, debts, and certain fixed charges. Gold is not scarce; we have a reserve of $4,535,000,000, which is sufficient to authorize the issuance of more than $5,000,000,000 of additional money; it is high because of the scarcity of paper money. The price level may be raised by putting more money in circulation. Government bonds do not circulate and do not affect the price level. Currency, another form of Government obligation, circulates and affects the price level.

WOODEN MONEY

It is a crime for people to be suffering as they are because of the lack of a sufficient circulating medium; they do not have sufficient money to do business on. A large part of the money presumed to be in circulation is hoarded by banks and individuals. A nation-wide barter system has already been projected. Scrip-money plans are being used in many cities. In Tenino, Wash., money made of wood has been used as a medium of exchange. Money is the blood of business. Scrip and wooden money is being used in 30 State by over one-half million people. Is not this sufficient evidence that there is a currency famine?

FAIR-WEATHER FRIEND

The Federal reserve system has proven itself to be only a fair-weather friend of the people. When times are good, a rising market, steady employment, ample credit facilities are at the command of the people through this system. But when there is a declining market—unemployment, reduced valuations, and reduced earnings—this system will not furnish the credit necessary to restore the country. More money must be placed in circulation so as to start a rising market in order that people may have the security to get Federal reserve notes.

RECENT CONVERTS

A large number of people are now enthusiastically advocating the passage of this bill who were opposing its passage a few months ago. We believe that it is the only plan yet proposed that will bring immediate relief to every section of the country. It is the only way that the currency can be expanded without causing people to get further in debt, pay more interest, or by giving a dole.

NEW MONEY

In substance, the bill provides that a veteran can deliver his certificate to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and receive in return therefor new money for the amount that is due on it after prior loans are deducted. The new money will be United States notes—the same kind of money that is in circulation to-day.

IDLE GOLD

The gold standard act, passed by Congress March 14, 1900, and Federal reserve act, passed in 1913, adopted the policy for our Government of backing our paper money with 40 per cent gold. It is known that paper money can be safely issued on the Nation's credit as long as we have 40 per cent in gold as a reserve to back each dollar. We have sufficient idle gold to authorize the issuance of the money to pay the adjusted-service certificates without reducing our gold reserve to as low as 60 per cent. No money is fiat money that is redeemable in gold as this money will be.

BLOOD OF BUSINESS

The effect of this distribution of new money will be to give the people $2,200,000,000 more circulating medium upon which no one will be paying interest. The debt must be paid some time, because it has already been confessed by Congress. It can be paid in advance of the time it is made payable without cost to the Government, and its payment will be of immense benefit to all the people. I do not believe this money will ever have to be retired, as the increase in our population, national wealth, national income, and monetary gold stock causes a necessity for this much-permanent addition to our circulating medium. Congress can eliminate from its annual Budget the $112,000,000 payment each year, which now goes into a sinking fund to retire the certificates in 1945.

EVERYBODY BENEFITED

The money will go into every nook and corner of the Nation. It will increase the per capita circulation of money about $18. Every community will get a share. It will go to every class, race, and creed; every occupation, avocation, and trade will be benefited; it will be deposited in the banks, which will increase the reserves of the banks, make the depositors' money safer and credit easier to obtain. This money will be spent, thereby causing an expansion of consumption; it will not be hoarded, but will immediately go into the channels of trade and production. It will benefit the general welfare as well as the veterans. It will provide buying power for the people.

NOTHING IN 1945

If the veterans are not paid now, by 1945 practically all the remainder of their certificates will be consumed by compound interest, which they are forced to pay the banks and the Government on prior loans.

NOT A BONUS—A DEBT

This proposal is often referred to as the bonus bill. An adjusted-service certificate does not represent a bonus; it represents a debt that has been acknowledged by Congress to a veteran of the World War for services rendered—3,555,058 veterans hold these certificates; the average value is $1,000. About 75 per cent of the certificates have been pledged for loans; there is a remainder due at this time, after deducting prior loans, of about $2,200,000,000.

The term "soldier bonus" is a misnomer; it is a soldier debt.

IMMATERIAL ARGUMENTS

A discussion of other veteran legislation is not material in connection with a discussion of the merits of this proposal, since we have assumed the burden of showing that each holder of a certificate is entitled at this time to receive an amount equal to the face value of his certificate, and, further, that the payment of the debt at this time will benefit and not in any way be injurious to the general welfare of all the people. There is no reason for a discussion of the act of 1924. It has already been enacted into law. I will state, however, that many misstatements are being made about the relief extended to World War veterans. Exceptions are pictured as the general rule.

ALL DUE OCTOBER 1, 1931

In the present form of the certificate each veteran is deprived of seven years' interest. Mr. Andrew Mellon forgot to figure it in. If the Government will change the obligation so as to give him the amount Congress confessed was due as of the time he rendered the service, with a reasonable rate of interest from that time, he was entitled to an amount equal to the maturity value of his certificate October 1, 1931. It is past due, although payable in 1945. If he has borrowed 50 per cent of the face value, he has borrowed the accumulated interest; the principal remains intact.

THE BANKS' BONUS

The home loan bank bill which was enacted by Congress in July, 1932, contains a provision that authorizes the National City Bank of New York and the Chase National Bank of New York to deposit $272,000,000 in Government bonds bearing 3⅜ per cent interest with the Secretary of the Treasury and receive $272,000,000 in new money—greenbacks. These banks do not need and will not use this money, and the country will not be helped because this privilege has been extended to them. If the 366,236 holders of adjusted-service certificates in New York State had been given this same privilege, business would have been helped because of the $245,948,177 increase in buying power which the veterans would have received, and the Government would have saved money. The banks collect interest on the bonds deposited, while they are using the new money. The veterans, if the same privilege is extended to them, will not collect interest on the Government obligations deposited.

CONCLUSION

Do not forget that this debt must be paid anyway; it has already been acknowledged by Congress, and the general welfare of the Nation will be promoted if it is paid now, as suggested, without additional cost to the Government.

Remember, too, the chief cause of this depression is lack of buying power. Consequently any additional buying power put in the hands of the public would tend to ameliorate the depression.

Let us make a long step in the direction of restoring this country by paying the adjusted-service certificates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, lest we forget, I desire to call attention to what is fast approaching to become ancient history, and during the consideration of the District appropriation bill is perhaps as opportune a time as any in which to do it.

The membership of the House will recall that during the summer of 1930 Speaker Longworth appointed a special committee of the House on the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia. That committee was directed to report back to the House its findings and any bills for the revision of the tax laws of the District which it thought should be reported and to recommend the amount which the Federal Government should in its judgment contribute toward the expenses of the District government. Upon the reconvening of Congress in the fall of that year the special committee organized, held hearings, and with the assistance of a tax expert made a careful study and investigation of the tax situation in the District and a comparative study of the tax burden of the District with the tax burden in comparable cities, and, in fact, with the tax burden of other localities throughout the United States whether they were comparable with the District or not.

At the end of that investigation the committee made a report to Congress in which it found that the tax burden in the District of Columbia was much lighter than it was in comparable cities throughout the United States, and it recommended what has proved to be, under existing economic conditions throughout the country, a very liberal contribution to be made by the Federal Government to the expenses of the District government, namely, the sum of $6,500,000 per year.

The committee also reported several tax bills to adjust the inequalities which exist between the people in the District and those outside the District. It will be recalled, for example, that the District of Columbia has no income tax law, levies no income tax against the residents of the District as distinguished from the regular Federal income tax. The District of Columbia levies no inheritance tax against estates in the District of Columbia as distinguished from the Federal inheritance tax and such as is levied in practically every State in the Union.

The report of the committee also called attention to the fact that the gasoline tax in the District of Columbia was only 2 cents per gallon while in every other locality in the United States, in every State of the Union except four the gasoline tax is considerably more than 2 cents a gallon. In some States it is as high as 7 cents per gallon.

Mr. HASTINGS. With an average of 4 cents per gallon.

Mr. MAPES. With an average of a trifle over 4 cents per gallon, as I now recall it.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. GARBER. What is the tax rate in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MAPES. The tax rate on real estate is $17 per $1,000 at the present time.

Mr. GARBER. It is much lower than it is in many other cities of similar size throughout the country.

Mr. MAPES. It is much lower than in almost any other place in the United States whether of similar size or not.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to make another statement, in addition to the State tax on gasoline there is in some instances also imposed a municipal tax.

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. As stated, the present local tax on gasoline here in Washington is only 2 cents a gallon. Following the investigations of his committee, the gentleman sought to put an additional cent upon it, so that with the 1-cent Federal tax it would have made the total tax on gasoline only 4 cents here in Washington.

Mr. MAPES. We sought to raise the tax to 4 cents per gallon or about the average throughout the country.

Mr. BLANTON. That would have made 4 cents. Over in Maryland the gasoline tax is 5 cents a gallon, is it not?

Mr. MAPES. I think it is 5 cents.

Mr. BLANTON. And in Virginia it is 4 cents.

Mr. MAPES. It is 4 cents in one and 5 in the other. I do not now recall which State collects 4 cents and which 5.

Mr. BLANTON. And 7 cents in Tennessee.

Mr. MAPES. And in Florida and some other States, I believe.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. And is there any reason on earth, except to try to get things as cheaply as possible in Washington for the people who live here, why this extra cent should not have been put on?

Mr. MAPES. I do not know of any.

Mr. BLANTON. The Mapes bill for this additional 1 cent on gasoline passed unanimously here in this House. There was not a vote against it, and now it is held up in another body, and it has been held up there since December, 1931. If there is any responsibility anywhere for allowing this situation to exist, it does not lie with the House of Representatives, does it? The responsibility is in the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. MAPES. I took the floor for the purpose of calling attention to that fact.

Mr. BLANTON. The responsibility does not rest on our shoulders.

Mr. MAPES. The responsibility does not lie with the House of Representatives.

Mr. BLANTON. And the House of Representatives is in no way to blame for many of the things that continually go on here in Washington which the people of the 48 States do not like. The House of Representatives has tried to rectify them, has it not?

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Texas is quite correct. I may say further that I have been told petitions have been filed, signed by 200 filling-station operators around the District of Columbia, outside the District of Columbia, saying that the low tax rate on gasoline in the District was the ruination of their business, and petitioning one body of Congress to pass the bill the House of Representatives passed increasing the gasoline tax from 2 cents a gallon to 4 cents a gallon, which would still, as I recollect it, be a little under the average tax throughout the United States.

Let me call attention to the time when these bills reported by this special committee were considered and passed by the House of Representatives. I have here in my hand the daily calendar of the House. The index shows that the income tax bill, H. R. 5821, passed the House of Representatives December 16, 1931. The estate tax bill, H. R. 5822, passed the House December 17, 1931. The motor vehicle gasoline tax bill, H. R. 5823, passed the House December 17, 1931, and the motor vehicle weight tax bill, H. R. 5824, passed the House December 17, 1931.

The rules of the House do not permit me to say what has been done with, or what has become of, these bills since they passed the House of Representatives, but it is well enough for the membership of the House to understand, and for the conferees on this District appropriation bill to bear in mind, as I know they will, that those bills passed the House of Representatives 14 months ago.

Mr. BLANTON. But the rules do not prevent me from asking the gentleman some questions. If he will allow me, I would like to ask him a few questions.

Mr. MAPES. The rules do not require the gentleman from Michigan to censor the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, and I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the gentleman if there is not in Michigan, as well as in every other State of importance in the Union, an inheritance tax on estates?

Mr. MAPES. Certainly there is. I called attention to that.

Mr. BLANTON. We passed the Mapes bill to levy such a tax on estates in December, 1931. It is still held up in the Senate. There is not in the District of Columbia a law to tax estates; and there is not because some legislative body other than the House of Representatives will not allow that bill to pass. Is not this the fact?

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman is correct, as I have indicated.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that in the great State of Michigan, one of the greatest States in the Union, and in other good States there is a license tax on automobiles many times larger than the tax in Washington, and that the automobile weight tax in every State is substantially greater than that proposed by the Mapes bill passed here in December, 1931?

Mr. MAPES. Nearly every one.

Mr. BLANTON. In every State, and everywhere else but Washington, you pay for registering an automobile according to its value. For instance, a Ford, I think, in most of the States costs about $10, and a Pierce Arrow, a Cadillac, or a Packard, and the other higher priced cars run as high as from $20 to $40, do they not? But in the District of Columbia you pay only $1 for a license on all cars alike? Is not that true?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will permit, I suppose there is no objection to calling attention to page 3758 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 10, 1933, that is only yesterday. I find there are Members in the other body who apparently are not in sympathy with the inaction in that body. I quote:

> Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not object. This is a reasonable tax. I believe every State in the Union has a higher rate than that existing in the District of Columbia.

And I quote again from the RECORD of yesterday:

> Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I would like to say in regard to this matter that the tax on automobiles in the city of Washington is perfectly absurd.

Now, as I said at the beginning, this special committee recommended a lump sum appropriation of $6,500,000 as the Federal contribution to the District Government. Under present economic conditions that has proved to be a very liberal recommendation. Everybody knows that the economic conditions within the District of Columbia at the present time are far better than in any other place in the United States; and everybody in this Chamber knows that the tax burden in the District of Columbia is much lighter than in any other place in the United States. And can anybody give any reasonable reason why under these conditions the people outside the District of Columbia should contribute any more than an equitable amount to the expenses of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. No; they can not give a good reason for it.

Mr. CULKIN. And is it not a fact, I will ask the gentleman, that throughout the country in all municipalities the tax rate runs from $3.50 to $5 per hundred at this time?

Mr. MAPES. In some cities it runs as high as that or higher. In some cities it is a little lower, but the average is much higher than it is here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULKIN. So in Washington they are paying only about a third of the tax we are paying throughout the country?

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps a little more than that on the average, but the people in the District do not pay nearly as much as people are obliged to pay on the outside.

Mr. HASTINGS. The statement was made this morning that out of 300 cities, the city of Washington was at the bottom with reference to the tax rate.

Mr. CULKIN. And it enjoys the finest municipal environment in America.

Mr. MAPES. Before I take my seat I want to commend the work of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, headed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], that is in charge of this District appropriation bill. The members of the committee are doing unusually good work in the handling of the District appropriation bills and are entitled to the thanks of the House. I think they are in entire sympathy with the action of the House of Representatives in adopting the report of this fiscal relations committee and in the passage of the four bills which were reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, supplementing what my friend from Michigan has said, I wish every man in Congress knew of the hard work and the tedious hours that our colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] puts in on this bill and bills like it. The work he is doing here is some of the most important work that could be done for the Nation. He daily renders here service that is most valuable. His people down in Missouri know nothing about it. You do not see him loafing around, because he is off in an office holding important hearings. He has these bureau chiefs across the table hammering them with pointed questions, trying to stop waste, and fighting to get a fair and just deal for everybody.

He has not any animosity toward the people of Washington. He is their friend. Some of the best people in the world live here in Washington. They are hospitable, courteous, kind, and good neighbors. They are my friends and his friends. He would cut off his right arm before he would do them an injustice. He has not any unkindly feeling toward them. He is simply trying to see that justice is done them and at the same time that justice is done the rest of the people of the United States.

If the constituents of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] knew of the splendid work he has been doing here for years, they would never let a man run against him in his district. They would see to it that no one ever gives him a bit of trouble about coming back to Congress. CLARENCE CANNON is one of the most valuable men in the Congress.

In this connection I want to commend the good work of my friend from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. He did splendid work in holding hearings, investigating conditions, and passing through the House the four Mapes bills. This was the first time that any careful, expert, scientific, and reasonable consideration had been given to these questions. The gentleman spent months in hearings and in consideration of these measures and his committee brought in a unanimous report on all four of his bills and found that, according to the fiscal relations existing between the Government and the District of Columbia, $6,500,000 as an annual contribution from the United States Government would be as much as could be expected under any circumstances. All four passed the House unanimously. There was not a vote against them, but they have been held up somewhere else in a pigeonhole for a year and a half. Why, I ask. The people here just pay a tax of $1.70 per $100 on real and personal property and only 50 cents per $100 on intangible property.

They do not have to pay any income tax to the District like they do in the States. They do not have to pay any inheritance tax on estates in the District like they do in the States. They do not have to pay any special school tax like they do in most of our States, and they do not have to pay any sewer tax, or water tax, or paving tax, or any of the many other taxes they pay in the States. Every tax on earth they pay is embraced in this $1.70 per hundred dollars.

They have the cheapest water on God's earth here, and it is the best water. There is not any better water than the water they get here in the District of Columbia, because the Government has spent millions of dollars of the tax money of the other people of the United States to perfect the water system here, and the Government owned the original conduit that furnished water to this city. The District never paid a dollar for it. Do you know what it costs a family here to receive water? That is one thing in this bill I am strongly against, and that is the reduction of 10 per cent in the water rate here, which is merely to give Washington people even cheaper water. Do you know what the ordinary family pays a year for water now? Eight dollars and seventy-five cents a year. Is there any Representative on this floor that has a water system back home that furnishes a family all of its water for $8.75 a year? No; not one of you. You can not square this with your constituents when you go home.

The cheapest, finest, and most healthful water in the world is here in Washington. It is wonderful, and yet we are proposing to reduce further the cost in this bill 10 per cent, when the present rate is only $8.75 per family per year.

Your committee worked hard in reducing these appropriations, not in the interest of the committee, but in the interest of the people who live in the District and of the rest of the people who live in the Nation. This is done every year, and then the bill goes somewhere else and it is raised here and there in another body, and they stand pat and tell us that if we do not come to their terms there is not going to be any bill passed. When that is done the people ought to know in all the States who is responsible for the raises. Then the people can hold responsible the ones who cause such raises.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman. Is the gentleman with Mr. MAPES?

Mr. McGUGIN. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought to be finding out something about these bills, because that is the great trouble. There are too many men in Congress who do not know what is going on here. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has spent months on these bills, and my friend from Kansas does not know anything about it.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am trying to drink from the fountain of knowledge. If the gentleman will permit, I am seeking some information from him. I was very much interested in the gentleman's statement that the tax rate here is only $1.70, and I know that this is a lot less than it is in almost every other town in the United States. The question I want to ask is this: How does their valuation compare with valuations in other towns in the United States? I am seeking this purely as a matter of honest information.

Mr. BLANTON. It is supposed to be full value, but it is not. You can take a residence that is worth $20,000, and it is assessed for taxes at about $9,000. You can take a piece of property that 30 years ago was worth only $250, and by reason of the money that the people of the United States have expended here through Congress has now become worth a million, you will find it will be assessed at about one-third of that value.

I have a file of papers a foot high in my office which I have gathered on the subject, and I got the figures from citizens here and also from Mr. Richards, the tax assessor—and there is not a better posted man in the country than the tax assessor of the District of Columbia. He is an expert and knows his business; and if he had the cooperation he ought to have, there would be a surplus to the credit of the District of Columbia in the Federal Treasury. I hope that the gentleman from Kansas will let all of the people of Kansas know about these matters and let them know exactly who is responsible for pigeonholing these Mapes bills and killing them.

There are too many people owning residences and property in Washington who vote and are elected to office in States back home. There are too many of them who stay here the year round and who want to stay here throughout the year; and that is the reason why we have so many special privileges here in Washington. I wish that whoever is holding up these Mapes bills would go back home just now and frankly explain to his constituents all about the bills and let them ask questions.

Mr. McGUGIN. Too many post-office applications back home.

Mr. BLANTON. The people back home can not be blamed for seeking jobs. Some of them are desperate. They have been without work for a long time. They have diligently and earnestly sought work. Many have already lost their homes. Many, both on farms and in cities, now owe mortgage payments they can not meet and are apprehensive every day that the roof is to be taken from over the heads of their families. They can not get relief anywhere.

They have been overburdened with State and county taxes. They have been weighted down with school taxes and water taxes and paving taxes and city municipal taxes. They do not realize that all of these taxes are the result of their State legislatures, but they blame Congress, and they do not realize that we have had nothing to do with their State, county, city, and local taxes.

There are expert carpenters in every State in the Union who are now out of jobs who would be glad to work for $8 per day, which contractors are now offering in Washington. Yet the carpenters here have gone out on strike and are seeking to tie up important Government construction, contending for the $11 per day they have been drawing for the past three years.

In Washington during the last three years there has been spent here approximately $100,000,000 of the people's money in building construction. Who is benefited by it? Your carpenters back home? No. The artisans and mechanics of Washington. They have been getting $14 a day, and they are getting now $14 a day for plasterers and bricklayers and $11 a day for carpenters on building construction here. I am for the plasterers and the bricklayers and the carpenters, I want them to get as much as possible, but I do not want the plasterers and bricklayers in Washington to get $14 a day when down in Muskogee, Okla., and up in Massachusetts they are working for far less than $10 a day. That is not right. It is not fair to labor in this country, is it, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not want to subscribe to that—the men in Washington are entitled to a fair and decent living wage, and we want those in Oklahoma to come up to that living wage and not drag the Washington wage down to the Oklahoma wage level.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman will get a front page on that and have his picture in all the labor papers, and I will be given the devil for asking him the question. [Laughter.]

We are both for the men who labor, but the difference between us is this: There is an idea prevailing throughout the country that in order to be reelected and come back here we have got to get down on our knees and lick the leather soles of every union labor organization in the country and obey them 100 per cent, whether they are right or wrong. Now, that is not true. I am for them when they are right, but against them when they are wrong. I have been on their blacklist here for 16 years and I am still not afraid of them. And I guarantee that I get almost as many labor votes in my district as the gentleman from Massachusetts does in his.

Mr. CONNERY. Perhaps they are not as well organized.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, they are organized, but they know this: They know that when they are right, I am fighting for them, and they know that I will fight for them, for everything that is right. They have a contempt for some pussy-footed fellow who will talk continually about "living wages" but when the times comes to help them in a worthy cause will not fight for them.

They know that they can always depend upon me fighting against the monopolies that crush them. They always know where I stand. They know that when attempts are made to pass a general sales tax that will burden their shoulders with much of the expenses of this Government, they can count on my fighting such proposition with every ounce of fight that is in my being. They know that I can be depended upon to fight against all waste in governmental expenses. They know that I can be depended upon to fight against all extravagances. They know that I can be depended upon to fight against all graft. They know that such fights are beneficial to their interests. They know that I want them to have cheap ice, and cheap fuel, and cheap electric current, and cheap gas, and cheap transportation. They know that I want them to have jobs—not just a few of them at $11 and $14 per day—but all of them to have jobs at a living wage. I do not want the plasterers and brick masons of Washington to get $14 per day constantly, when plasterers and brick masons all over the 48 States are anxiously seeking work but can not find it, and who would gladly work for $10 or less, but can not earn anything. I do not want the carpenters of Washington to get $11 per day constantly, while thousands of carpenters all over the 48 States are out of jobs, and have been out of jobs for months, and who would gladly take the $8 per day which Government contractors are now offering Washington carpenters, when they are striking and tieing up Government work, contending for their $11 per day. And this is why many members of union labor in my district prefer me to some pussy-footing friend. They would rather have me for them when they are right.

Mr. CONNERY. I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Texas would never refer to me as a pussy-footer.

Mr. BLANTON. No; certainly not. I did not have the gentleman in mind. He is a true, courageous friend to every man who labors.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I have not the time. We have this ridiculous situation in the city of Washington just now, with officials wanting to build some grandstands for the big inaugural of one of the greatest events we have had here for years, the inauguration of a real Democrat as President of the United States, and the carpenters of the District, who for years have been getting $11 a day, are striking, not only upon that job but they are striking upon the other big Government jobs, demanding their $11 a day. It is outrageous. I hope the contractors will tell them that, if they strike, when they walk out they are walking out for good, and that their jobs will be taken by somebody else who needs a job more than they do, who is willing to work for $8 per day as a carpenter.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield. Is the gentleman going to say something also about a "living wage"?

Mr. MAY. I am going to ask the gentleman a question and see whether or not he will be courteous enough to wait until I get the question stated.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman does not take more than half a minute of my time I will yield to him so that he may ask it.

Mr. MAY. In view of the fact that down in the gentleman's State and in my State there are lots of able-bodied men who are working for $2 a day and a lot more of them getting $1 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation institutions, does the gentleman not think that $11 a day is enough in Washington for the other fellow, under the circumstances, and too much?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not catch the gentleman's idea. He seems to be for them striking and contending for the $11 per day, and I can not tell whether he is for them or against them.

Mr. MAY. I am for the right thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman for paying them $11 a day or $8 a day?

Mr. MAY. I think that under present conditions in the country their wages are vastly too high.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of standing pat and telling the contractors that Congress will back them up, if they can get able-bodied men for $8 a day, in not paying them more than $8 a day out of the money of the people?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I am. Is that plain enough?

Mr. BLANTON. Good, good! If we had a few more who would walk up and say that, we would not have any strike of carpenters for $11 per day, when they are offered $8 per day, with 15,000,000 men out of work.

If all carpenters everywhere, in my State and yours, could get $11 per day, I would rejoice with them in their good fortune and be glad to see them get it. If all plasterers everywhere, in my State and in yours, could get $14 per day, as they are getting in Washington, I would rejoice with them in their good fortune and be glad to see them get it. But when 15,000,000 men are without jobs and numerous carpenters in every State would be glad to get the $8 per day Government contractors are now offering Washington carpenters, I think that it is an outrage for such carpenters to strike and still contend for the $11, which they have received for the past three years, and for them to tie up important Government work. And such strikers ought not to have any backers in this Congress.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman tell the committee what influence in his opinion killed the Mapes legislation?

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know?

Mr. CULKIN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Selfishness; not wanting to give up something. Protecting self and friends. I will tell the gentleman this. There is a comity that exists between the two bodies that form the Congress of the United States. Unfortunately it is improper for one body to mention the other body or to criticize it. All on earth that we are permitted to do under the rules is to say that we have done our part, that we in the House have passed the Mapes bills, and we have sent them somewhere else, and we did that way back yonder in December, 1931, and that these Mapes bills have been there for nearly two years in a pigeonhole, and that they have not been brought up and passed; and when the ones responsible go home let them be held responsible for holding those bills up. Let the Members of that body go home, and when they run for reelection, it is the duty of other gentlemen to get up then and tell the people who it was that held the bills up.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman not think it a very reasonable rule that prohibits the Members of each body from talking about the other body, in view of the fact that the country is talking about both branches of Congress?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I think so, but I do not think that the country ought to talk——

Mr. MAY. About either branch?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I think they have a right to talk about either branch whenever they please, but they ought to fix the responsibility where it is. If there are men here in the House who are zealously and faithfully working and grinding and slaving themselves day and night trying to change these intolerable conditions the people ought to differentiate as between them and those who do not so work and who are responsible for another situation, and if there are men in another body who are not deserving of criticism, neither the people nor the press ought to direct criticism against all the membership, when it is not fair or just. They ought to pick out the ones who are responsible for these delays. They ought to pick out the ones who are responsible for these abuses that exist. They ought to give credit to the ones like my good friend from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and my good friend from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and my good friend from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] and others like them, who work here trying to change these conditions.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman will remember a question that I propounded to him on the floor at the last session of Congress which perhaps started the candidacy of Mr. GARNER, the Speaker of the House, and which resulted in his election.

Mr. BLANTON. There was hardly anything that could have stopped that candidacy and that election.

Mr. MAY. That resulted in his election as Vice President.

Mr. BLANTON. It was inevitable.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman not think that if the people of the country would read the newspapers, and read between the lines, they would not direct their talk about us?
